I also will use the word "individualist" to designate a person who makes an ideology out of his individualism. In this sense an individualist is a person who believes that it is good, moral, admirable, proper, and so on, to disregard group contexts; and immoral, unpatriotic, reprehensible, and wicked not to disregard them. Actually it's impossible to avoid group contexts, and the ideological individualist himself divides people into two groups: namely, individualists, who, like himself, are good people; and "collectivists," who, like me, are bad people, akin to communists.

I've spoken with you in earlier broadcasts about the ideology of individualism, and today I want to focus more on some of the practical implications of the attitude. I'll tell you first what prompted my choice of this subject today: Two weeks ago I said some unkind things about lawyers, judges, and our judicial system, and in response to that broadcast I received a couple of indignant letters from lawyers who told me that I was both unfair and inaccurate in my negative characterization of lawyers. Not all lawyers are soulless, money-grubbing crooks, they told me. Some lawyers are decent, honest, patriotic people, they told me. Some lawyers agree with me about most things, and it is foolish to alienate them by calling all lawyers crooks. I need their support, and I will lose it if I continue to insult them.

Well, I can't really disagree with that. I personally know a few lawyers who aren't crooks, and I certainly do want to retain their support. Looking at my broadcast of two weeks ago from an individualist viewpoint, it was both unfair and inaccurate. The individualist would say that I paint things with too broad a brush. I should say that some lawyers are crooks, and then the individualist will agree with me. Of course, the essence of my message two weeks ago was not that some lawyers are crooks; it was that the judicial system is corrupt. The system designed by lawyers and staffed by lawyers for the purpose of making and interpreting the laws is corrupt. The fact that every lawyer is in some sense a part of that system does not mean that every lawyer is corrupt. A few lawyers who are in the system are fighting against the system. I didn't say that two weeks ago, because I wanted to keep my message simple and direct. I didn't want to distract my listeners from the main thrust of the message with qualifications and quibbles. It's an important message, and I wanted it to make the strongest possible impression on my listeners. I deliberately paint with a broad stroke.

Here's another example of the way in which people looking at things from an individualist viewpoint misunderstand my message. I am often critical of the Christian churches, of their subservient collaboration with the Jews, of their encouragement of miscegenation and their other racially destructive policies. And some Christians who agree with my positions on the Jews and on race take offense at my comments regarding the overall role of Christianity in our society today, and they tell me, "Hey! I'm offended. All Christians aren't race-mixers and collaborators with the Jews." And of course, I understand that. I understand that there are many individual Christians who are good people, Christians who don't run with the Jews, but what I was talking about was the overall role of Christianity and the Christian churches in our society, and that role today is destructive.

Another example: I often talk about the feminization of our society and the feminization of our young men, and I make it quite clear that I don't approve of these things. This offends some women, who take what I say personally. An expression I used in one broadcast that offended several of my women listeners enough for them to send me indignant letters of protest was the phrase "college girls of both sexes." The implication was that college girls are not to be taken more seriously than feminized college boys. At another time I stated that permitting women to vote was a terrible mistake, and again I received letters from women who indignantly told me that they vote more responsibly than many men they know. Well, I'm sure they do, but I was talking about the overall effect of women's votes, and that has been very damaging to our society.

Of course, women as a rule take everything personally, and so I explain individually to those who protest that I do take women seriously, that I value and respect them, and that I love them -- but that I also understand that despite all of the fascinating individual differences among them, all of them are profoundly different from men.

When I receive protests from lawyers and from male Christians, however, I see the individualist fallacy at work. Men should not look at the world as individualists. They should understand that it is not only natural and proper but necessary to judge other men according to the group of which they are a part. Just as people have individual characteristics, they also have collective characteristics, and to ignore the latter from fear of being considered a racist or a sexist or an anti-Semite or a homophobe is the worst sort of folly. When one is in a war one doesn't judge the soldiers on the other side as individuals. One doesn't hold one's fire because the fellow in the enemy's uniform who is charging with a rifle in his hands may really have wanted to be a conscientious objector instead of a combat infantryman. If he's in the enemy's uniform, one shoots at him.

We understand, of course, that not all Blacks are muggers or gang-bangers or armed robbers or HIV-infected rapists, just as we understand that not every Jew is a predator who is actively scheming to destroy our people after he has sucked us dry. When I look at a Black I may see a criminal or a welfare bum, or I may see an honest, hard-working person, but in either case I see a Black, and I understand what his race is doing to my race collectively. Even if an individual Black with whom I am dealing is friendly, intelligent, and moral, I would be a fool to expect him to join me in a campaign to put an end to what his race is doing to my race and my civilization collectively.

I sometimes am obliged to deal with Jews: much more often than with Blacks, in fact, because Jews collectively have arrogated to themselves so many positions of control and influence in our society. And I am able to distinguish among individual Jews. I see that many Jews with whom I deal are tricky and deceitful, but there are some who are straightforward and sincere, I believe. Many are really hateful, but occasionally I meet one who is almost likable. Yet I never forget what Jews collectively, as a whole, are doing and have done to my people collectively.

We must understand that we are in a planet-wide race-war, and the survival of our race depends on our winning this war. We won't win by wasting our time trying to figure out who the friendly Blacks are and who the hostile ones are. We won't win by refusing to talk about what the Jewish media bosses and the powerful Jewish organizations are doing to our people from fear that we may be unjustly casting suspicion on Jews who are simply minding their own business. We must deal with them collectively, and when the crunch comes that's certainly the way they will deal with us.

In fact, that's pretty much the way they already deal with us. When those gangs of Blacks were running wild through the Mardi Gras crowd in Seattle a couple of weeks ago, savagely attacking White people, they didn't try to figure out which Whites were racists and which ones were diversity-loving, race-mixing liberals. Their cry was, "Let's get a Whitey! We gonna kick some White ass tonight," and they attacked any White target of opportunity they encountered.

The national media have successfully kept most of the country from hearing about the Fat Tuesday race riot in Seattle, and on that subject I have a few more thoughts to share with you. For one thing, I've been able to gather a little more information about what happened that night. Not only was there a series of vicious beatings and robberies of White men and women by gangs of rampaging Blacks, there also was a series of sexual assaults. The controlled media were even more eager to keep these covered up than the beatings and robberies, but the news is leaking out -- in Seattle, at least.

It was very similar to what happened in New York's Central Park last year, when a gang of Blacks and Puerto Ricans grabbed White women who were walking in the park, ripped their clothes off, squeezed their breasts, pushed fingers into their vaginas, and otherwise abused and humiliated them. Just as in New York, in Seattle it was very definitely racial, often with both Black males and Black females collaborating in the sexual abuse of White women, and it was very definitely hostile: the same Black gangs who were sexually abusing White women were viciously beating White women and White men. When it happened in Central Park the news got out; primarily, I think, because a couple of very loud Jewish feminists were among those abused. In Seattle it's been covered up. But now it is coming out, after a fashion. I'll read just one line from a March 12 article in the Seattle Post-Intelligencer about just one woman who was being held down and abused on Fat Tuesday while a news reporter filmed the scene: "At one point there are 19 hands -- black, Asian, Hispanic -- on her body."

Now I want to talk with you more about something I touched on at the beginning of last week's broadcast, and that's the behavior of the White people in Seattle's Mardi Gras crowd both before and during the riot. I should begin by saying that it wasn't the way the local media and the Seattle police claimed it was, with hooligans of both races fighting it out. Whites did not attack Blacks. It was entirely Blacks attacking Whites. I have had a chance now to study videotape footage of the riot, and the one-sided nature of the racial attacks is quite clear.

What also is quite clear, however, is that many Whites in the crowd were acting like Blacks, and virtually all of the Whites were acting like lemmings. First, the Whites acting like Blacks: "wiggers" they are generally called, for an obvious reason. There were many young White men in the crowd wearing the backward baseball caps and baggy shorts that are the trademark uniform of the wigger. Pathetic souls that they are, they have been robbed of any natural sense of racial identity and racial community by this utterly sick and depraved society in which we live. And I mean deliberately robbed, with malice aforethought.

The Jewish media -- and the public schools -- have played especially reprehensible roles in this destructive, genocidal work. Everything that in healthier times helped give our young people a sense of collective racial identity and racial pride has been repudiated in the schools. The teaching of history and literature has become a joke. The Jews and the feminists and the egalitarians have ripped the guts out of everything in the schools that used to have White racial content. The multiculturalist ideologues think this is wonderful because it prepares our children to be world citizens in the New World Order of multiculturalism and diversity. For the multiculturalists it's a religion. But the conservative Republicans who have made an ideology out of individualism think it's fine too: at least, it's not collectivism; it's not racism.

But having a sense of collective identity, a sense of who we are and what group we belong to is what's natural. We evolved with a need for this sense of collective identity. That's the way we survived in the past. And so when the schools and the media rob the more lemming-like kids of their sense of identity, they look for a replacement. And the schools -- and especially the Jewish media -- have a ready-made replacement for them. They find it on Sumner Redstone's MTV. They find it in Black History Month, where they are told that everyone of worth, from the ancient Egyptian pharaohs to the inventors of the helicopter and television, were Blacks. They find it in the glorification by the media of Black basketball players and other Black sports figures. They find it in the almost inescapable presence of Black music promoted by the media. And they are made to understand that if they wear a Confederate flag patch on their shirts they'll be expelled from school. But it's OK to wear a Malcolm X T-shirt to commemorate a Black hero who wrote about how much he wanted to kill Whites. And so we have wiggers imitating Blacks in clothing styles, in speech patterns, in musical taste, and in behavior. That's why when we look at the video footage of Seattle's Fat Tuesday riot we can see young White men acting like Blacks, smashing windows, vandalizing cars, sometimes fighting with normal Whites, pawing girls, and behaving in a generally animalistic way.

Then there are the rest of the Whites, the approximately normal Whites. Two things are notable about them. First, they weren't expecting the Blacks to misbehave; they were completely surprised when the Blacks began attacking them. And second, they didn't fight back. With the notable exception of 20-year-old Kris Kime, who was murdered by the Blacks for behaving the way a White man should behave, they didn't even try to protect their own women. They just stood around and gaped at what was happening. To me these two things are far more disturbing than what the Blacks did.

So why were the more-or-less normal Whites surprised when the Blacks began behaving like Blacks? Why weren't they expecting that? Haven't we had enough experience with Black behavior in America yet?

And, of course, the answer to that is that the normal Whites are just as much lemmings as the wiggers. The wiggers just show it in a more degenerate fashion. The wiggers are usually the lower-IQ lemmings -- the lower-class, more impressionable lemmings. But the normal lemmings, most of them less than 30 years old, have been conditioned all their lives, just like the wiggers, by the Jewish media, by the schools, by the government, and by the Christian churches to believe that Blacks are the same as Whites, except a little darker. Really, most young Americans believe that, and they're surprised every time reality conflicts with their belief. Every day I receive letters from distressed young lemmings who have heard one of my broadcasts or visited my Web site. They whine at me, "Why can't you see that we're all the same? Don't you understand that the only difference between us and Blacks is skin color? Don't you know that the only race is the human race? The scientists have proved it!"

And really, they all sound pretty much alike. They have had these lies drilled into their heads, and they parrot them back at me. And some of these lemmings are reasonably bright, educated people. They really believe that scientists have proved that there is no difference between Blacks and Whites. And, I am sorry to say, some scientists have contributed to this false belief, either because they are lemmings themselves and want to show that they are Politically Correct, or because they hope to improve their chances of getting another government research grant. Some of the scientists associated with the human genome project, for example, have been quoted by the media as saying that the mapping of the human genome supports the notion that racial differences are insignificant. There is only a fraction of a percent difference between the genomes for Whites and for Blacks they say. The genomes for the various races are far more similar than they are different.

What they don't say, of course, is that there is only a fraction of a per cent difference between the genome for White people and that for chimpanzees. In fact, there is only a very small percentage difference among the genomes for all the species of mammals. Most of the mammalian genome, whether it is for a White person or a rat or a Negro or a dog, contains instructions for how to synthesize hair and skin and nails and bone and milk and teeth and nerve tissue and so on. Nearly all of the mammalian genome is taken up with these instructions that are pretty much the same for all mammals. Only a tiny fraction of the mammalian genome is different for each species. But that tiny fraction of the mammalian genome that specifies whether the hair and skin and bone and other tissues will become a White person or a rat or a Negro or a dog is important. The differences, small though they may seem compared to the similarities, are significant. Except to lemmings, of course, who really don't get it.

White women baring their breasts in the presence of Black males is an indication of just how lemming- like the normal Whites are. Even back in Christian times, when the Mardi Gras festival was a much more significant thing than it is today, there was a sexual flavor to much of the revelry. But if a woman bared her breasts in a village Mardi Gras festival in those times, 200 or 300 years ago, say, there were only Whites present, only members of her own tribe, her own racial family, and she could reasonably expect that she would not be sexually assaulted. There's an enormous difference between that and exposing herself to non-Whites. But lemmings have been conditioned not to understand that. And so they really were surprised when the Blacks in the crowd began behaving like Blacks.

It is not only the lie that we are all the same, that there are no significant differences between us and Blacks, that made the Whites in Seattle such easy victims for the Blacks. It also is the abominable doctrine of the ideological individualists that it is immoral to judge people collectively, the racially destructive doctrine that it is immoral to deal with rioting Blacks collectively. The individualists have preached that we should look only at individuals committing crimes against other individuals, and we should shut our eyes to the fact of Blacks committing crimes collectively against Whites. The individualists have preached that for Whites even to notice what Blacks collectively are doing to Whites collectively, whether in a Mardi Gras festival or in our public schools or anywhere else is wicked; it is racist. It is wicked to notice what the collective Black presence in our society is doing to our society, to our civilization. We must judge each Black individually; we must not organize a White posse and begin cracking Black skulls when we see Backs collectively rampaging against our fellow Whites, the way they did in Seattle.

These liberal doctrines are poisonous, racially destructive doctrines, both the doctrine of equality and the doctrine of individualism. Of course, there's more to it: there is the general softness, the generally feminized condition, of young White males these days. And there was the presence of the wiggers in the crowd, blurring the distinction between Whites and Blacks. Altogether, as a race we are in pretty sorry shape. It's really dangerous, and we need to do something about it. Get in touch with me, and I'll tell you what you and I together can do.

Countering the Poison

Today let's talk more about a very disturbing phenomenon that we've discussed several times in the past few weeks, namely a conditioned inability of White people -- or at least, a substantial percentage of White people -- to defend themselves against non-Whites. When I first told you about the rapes and murders of those Whites in Wichita, Kansas, by two Blacks -- rapes and murders the news of which was blacked out almost completely by the media outside of Wichita -- I commented that the most shocking thing about this atrocity was the total lack of resistance by the White victims, their complete failure even to attempt to defend themselves against two Blacks armed only with one relatively anemic pistol. The White men just stood and watched the Blacks rape and abuse their women, and then they all knelt obediently in the snow when the Blacks told them to and let themselves be shot in the back of the head, one at a time.

For the past two weeks we've been talking about the Mardi Gras race riot in Seattle, where small groups of Blacks viciously attacked individual White men and women in an overwhelmingly White crowd. While the Blacks punched young White women to the ground and then kicked them senseless, and while they ripped the clothes off other White women and pawed and probed them, nearby White men just stared without attempting to intervene.

Now I want to read to you a letter that I received this week from a listener of my American Dissident Voices broadcast. He relates an experience that he had in New Jersey:

A Black mugger, in broad daylight, attempted to rob a young, White businessman at knife point as the latter was making a withdrawal from an automatic teller machine. Rather than submit quietly, as so many of our young, European males do these days, the strapping young White man, a six-foot, five-inch giant named Paul, unleashed a devastating knockout punch to the mugger's face. The Black mugger, a muscular six feet, three inches or so himself, fell to the pavement like a ton of bricks.

The White hero, however, received a nasty knife gash in his forearm as he was throwing his punch. He was bleeding profusely all over his white shirt and his suit. Nevertheless, Paul calmly took out his cell phone and called 911 to report the attempted robbery and his own wound.

As Paul was waiting for help to arrive, the Black thug began to regain consciousness and slowly raised his head off the sidewalk. Big Paul then stomped on the mugger's head to make sure he stayed down and out. Upon seeing this, a White female, one of the group of eight to ten witnesses who had gathered, shrieked in horror and scolded our White hero for stomping on the Black criminal's head! A wimpish White male yuppie then leaned anxiously over the downed Black to see whether or not he was still breathing!

I was utterly dumbfounded. Here was a White victim-turned-hero, covered in blood, and yet some of the Whites who witnessed this event were more concerned about whether or not the poor, knife-wielding Black animal had suffered a serious concussion. I and some others attended to the bleeding Paul, but it was a bizarre scene. Paul's cut was nasty but not life-threatening. I assume that the knife-wielding Black got off with a slap on the wrist in court that was far less painful than Paul's gash.

The inexplicable behavior of some of the White witnesses left a lasting impression on me. It wasn't until I read some of your material that I fully understood the true source of the disgustingly wimpish behavior I witnessed that day. If more White Americans were made of the same stuff as Paul, Western civilization would be back on the right track in 30 days, don't you think?"

Well, yes, if more White Americans reacted to non-White aggression the way Paul did, we would be in much better shape. And you know, White Americans, even those who weren't six feet, five inches tall, used to behave the way Paul did. A century ago almost any able-bodied White male would have behaved the way Paul did. And it would have been inconceivable that two White witnesses would have behaved the way the White female and the White male yuppie did in the incident described in the letter I just read to you. Really inconceivable!

So what has happened to us? Have we been softened up by too much Christianity, too much turn-the-other-cheek preaching? Well, I don't think so. At least, I don't think that is the primary cause of our present malady. Certainly Christians are in the forefront of the wimp brigades these days, but the country as a whole is less Christian now than it was a century ago. A higher percentage of our ancestors were convinced Christians than in the general White population today, but not even the worst of the Bible-thumpers among the pioneers who settled this country had let themselves be emasculated by their religion. Though they may have carried a Bible in one hand as they headed west and claimed the land for themselves and their posterity, they carried a rifle in the other hand. They were self-respecting Christians.

Has it been too much easy living, too much luxury and comfort, that has made cowards of most of us and has turned some of us into partisans of our enemies? Well, I think that's a part of the answer, but certainly not the whole answer. More than once, when speaking with people who already agree -- in theory -- with me on the racial issue and on the Jewish issue I have had the experience of seeing them recoil in horror when I talk about what ultimately needs to be done to clean up our society. When I talk about cleaning out the stables -- when I talk about an inevitable civil war -- they are horrified. I realize, of course, that we are in no position at this time to punish traitors and clean up our government. But even to contemplate a final solution for getting rid of the filth in the government and in the media horrifies my listeners. They will only consider solutions that don't involve violence or bloodshed: only nice, peaceful, non-violent solutions that don't hurt anyone's feelings. When I talk about the eventual need for ethnic cleansing on a massive scale to undo the damage done by non-White immigration and miscegenation during the past century, again they are horrified. "Oh, we can't do that," they say: "That's genocide!"

And I do think that this excessive squeamishness, which comes from living a soft and sheltered life, is to some degree responsible for paralyzing the will of our people. Maybe there's some Christianity mixed in there too, which makes so many of our people unwilling to do what must be done to protect our race, our society, our civilization. But whether it's Christianity or softness, the unwillingness to take effective action when needed is very real. In the Seattle Mardi Gras riot, for example, the Whites in the crowd certainly weren't going to stop the Blacks from rampaging by appealing to the Blacks' commitment to a multicultural society. They weren't going to stop them by laying a hand gently on their shoulders and saying to them, "No, brother, no. You mustn't abuse people this way."

The only way to stop those Blacks would have been for a group of White men -- and it would have needed only four or five sturdy White men -- to arm themselves with baseball bats, fence posts, tire irons, pocket knives, or whatever other emergency weapons were at hand, and then to attack one gang of rampaging Blacks at a time and take them out -- disable them -- not by reasoning with them or by threatening them but by the decisive use of violence. That, of course, would have meant cracking Black skulls and drawing blood -- and risking injury to themselves. And most White men aren't up to that these days. They really haven't been raised right.

It is the sheerest foolishness to imagine that America is a powerful nation because a 100-pound girl in a U.S. Army uniform can push a button in some command center and launch a missile that will destroy a city somewhere on the other side of the world. Americans have lost their manhood -- or they are well on the way to losing it -- and that is why we will not be able to defend ourselves from our internal enemies, who are the real threat to our existence.

It is essential, of course, for us to have missiles capable of taking out Peking or Tel Aviv. It is essential for us to have a high-tech military capability so that we can kill thousands or even millions of enemies for each one of our own casualties. That's necessary because we foolishly have helped the non-White races of the planet reduce their death rates, industrialize themselves, and multiply until they greatly outnumber us, and we have helped the Jews develop Israel into a deadly arsenal of nuclear, chemical, and biological terror weapons. We need a high-tech military force to deal with this external threat. But what will destroy America is the enemy within, and against that enemy nuclear-tipped missiles and our other long-range weapons are useless. The enemy that will destroy us consists of the growing hordes of non-Whites already inside our borders and the White traitors in Washington and in every statehouse and every city hall and every newspaper office and every courthouse in the country who invited those hordes in and who now pamper and indulge them. That is the enemy that will destroy us, and to fight that enemy manhood is necessary.

Well, there's one more reason why White Americans stand around with their hands in their pockets, gaping helplessly while gangs of Blacks attack other White men and sexually abuse White women. It's the reason, I am sure, why that White woman in New Jersey was much more concerned about the welfare of the Black robber on the pavement than the welfare of the White man he had attacked with a knife. And, although I can't be sure, I strongly suspect it's also the most important reason why those White men in Wichita allowed the two Blacks to rape and abuse their women and then let themselves be killed without putting up a fight.

This most important reason for our inability or unwillingness to defend ourselves, our women, our nation, our civilization from the enemy within is that we have been psychologically conditioned all our lives -- deliberately conditioned -- not to defend ourselves against this enemy in our midst. What is the worst thing you can call a lemming, the thing that will make the average lemming turn pale with fright as he vehemently denies your charge? What label is guaranteed to make any politician or bureaucrat or Army officer or chief of police grovel and apologize and run for cover? That is the label of "racist," of course.

It's a label that was virtually never used 50 years ago, in the days when American society was supposedly racist through and through. Even 30 years ago White Americans could talk about race in an open and honest way, without fear. Even university professors, who these days are not noted for either courage or intellectual honesty, could talk about racial matters 30 years ago. I was a university professor, and I discussed with my colleagues the inevitable decline in academic standards which would accompany the government's efforts to force universities to accept unqualified Black students and unqualified Black faculty members. In those days, even though some professors were flaming liberals, we could at least discuss racial matters. But within the past 30 years the iron curtain of Political Correctness has descended, not just on our university campuses, but on our whole society.

How did it happen? It happened because we were deliberately brainwashed, deliberately conditioned psychologically by clever propagandists. Television was the principal propaganda medium -- and still is. The most popular television shows, which nearly every American viewed -- shows such as All in the Family and *M*A*S*H* -- were clever propaganda, designed deliberately to make "racism" a feared label and to put a whole range of other ideas and attitudes beyond the pale of acceptability, while at the same time making acceptable certain types of behavior which previously were abhorrent to most Americans.

All in the Family's Archie Bunker was used to make White Americans with traditional ideas about race and sexuality seem ridiculous, to seem ignorant and small-minded. *M*A*S*H*, starring the leftist actor Alan Alda, was used to make Whites with traditional attitudes seem like vicious bigots, despised by all decent people. Tens of millions of White Americans watched these programs on black-and-white television screens week after week. I was one of those White Americans. The programs were genuinely funny, genuinely entertaining. And they were genuinely poisonous to the easily manipulated lemmings who made up the vast majority of the viewers.

And I hardly need to tell you that this brainwashing effort aimed against the White American majority was designed and implemented almost entirely by the tiny Jewish minority in our midst, who by the 1960s had gained virtually total control of the mass media of news and entertainment. They staffed the media at every level and pumped their poison into virtually every living room in America. All in the Family was the creation of Norman Lear. *M*A*S*H* was the creation first, as a Hollywood film, of Robert Altman and later, as a TV series, of Larry Gelbart. Lear, Altman, and Gelbart were all Jews, and so was virtually every other propagandist working behind the scenes of the media. Behind every media campaign of lies and deceit, behind every piece of poisonous propaganda, behind every piece of subversive filth being poured into American living rooms and American schoolrooms was a gaggle of scheming, hate-filled Jews bent on destroying our civilization and our race.

Well, All in the Family and *M*A*S*H* were just two examples of the media brainwashing blitz that shifted into high gear in the 1960s and is still accelerating. There were dozens of other TV series, some subtle and some not so subtle; there was the slanted network television news; there were Hollywood films and radio programs and popular magazines. And there were other propaganda themes besides racial equality and the promotion of homosexuality. There was the "Holocaust," all about how the poor, persecuted Jews had suffered so terribly at the hands of the Germans -- through no fault of their own, of course -- and were deserving of all sorts of compensation and special consideration and exemption from blame.

There was the drive to "equalize" men and women in military service, in the workplace, and in every other way. This drive to equalize the sexes was not carried on just through political lobbying and demonstrations. Television entertainment played a major role by masculinizing the portrayal of women and feminizing the portrayal of men and by portraying as a bigot and a hater, as an object of contempt and ridicule, anyone who didn't want to go along.

There was the drive for so-called "children's rights," the drive for unlimited permissiveness and against parental "repression" of children -- and in fact, against any form of discipline or restraint. This drive was perhaps most visible in the efforts of radical youth-movement Jews such as Abbie Hoffman and Jerry Rubin with their "kill your parents" slogan in the 1960s and 1970s, but it was Jewish television that promoted more subtly and also more effectively the attitudes that parental authority was old-fashioned and out of style and that self-discipline, responsibility, and good work habits were only for dull, narrow-minded people, that the modern attitude was, "if it feels good, do it."

This Jewish propaganda blitz, this brainwashing campaign aimed at demoralizing White America, has been and still is a multi-front campaign. Its most important front may have been the racial front, and its next most important front may have been the sexual front, but every aspect of our society -- every institution -- that may have provided us with a sense of pride or solidarity has been and still is under attack. The aim has been not just to make Blacks equal to or a little better than Whites, to make women equal to or a little more powerful than men, to give children as much authority as parents; the aim has been to equalize, to democratize, to homogenize everything. Anything from the old order -- anything from the White, patriarchal, hierarchical order -- that stands out is to be attacked and pulled down: equalized, democratized, homogenized.

An interesting example of this is the recent drive to undermine the prestige and blur the identity of the Army's elite Rangers, with their distinctive black berets and their extraordinarily martial and masculine esprit de corps. Anything that is elite is hated and disparaged by the partisans of the new world order -- and especially something like the Rangers, long a hotbed of masculine, patriarchal, inegalitarian attitudes. Rather than making a direct, frontal attack on the Rangers, the Army's politicians and bureaucrats decided as a first step to take away the Rangers' distinctive appearance. They decreed that henceforth every member of the Army, including every Black female clerk and every mestizo cook, would wear a black beret, just like those worn by the Rangers. It would be a unifying move, the Army bureaucracy smirked.

The next step undoubtedly would be to require the Rangers to lower their standards and to have a quota for Black females and mestizos. The Rangers have been sharply criticized, along with the Army's Special Forces and the Navy's Seals, for being too White and too male. It's past time for all of these elite groups to be equalized and feminized.

The Rangers, I am pleased to note, did not cave in quietly to the attempt to equalize them with the rest of the Army. They raised hell about it and won a good bit of support from many other people, including some influential people. The Army politicians refused to back down on their decision to give black berets to everybody, but under pressure they grudgingly gave permission, just a few days ago, for the Rangers to switch to tan berets, thus maintaining -- for a while -- their distinctiveness.

Aside from the Rangers, unfortunately, there aren't many segments of our society who have had the pride and self-respect to stand up to the equalizers. Most have gone along quietly. Many have gone along enthusiastically, hoping to curry favor with the equalizers.

So what do we do? How do we go about restoring our manhood? Unfortunately, for America as a whole it's not as simple as it would have been for the Whites in that Mardi Gras crowd in Seattle. It's not just a matter of a few of us grabbing fence posts and splitting Black skulls. The first thing we must do is stop the flow of Jewish lies and Jewish poison and Jewish filth into every American living room and every American classroom. That is an enormous task, an extremely difficult task. We are taking now one small, first step toward the accomplishment of that task by countering the lies and the poison with these American Dissident Voices broadcasts. Only a small fraction of our people hears these broadcasts now. We need to reach many more of our people before we can take the next step. You can help us reach that next step sooner by telling your friends and neighbors and co-workers about these broadcasts. Please do it!

Diversity Is Our Strength

Three or four years ago the slogan most diligently promoted by the controlled mass media was "diversity is our strength." Posters with this slogan and a broad, multi-hued band of stripes representing skin colors of various races were displayed in classrooms and workplaces all over the country. Clothing advertisements in all of the slick, yuppie magazines pushed the same theme. The idea was that the fewer White people and the more Blacks and Browns and Yellows we have in America, the stronger and more prosperous we'll be.

I had friends who laughed at this propaganda campaign. They couldn't believe that anything so stupid would catch on. I didn't laugh, because I had learned long ago that P.T. Barnum was right on target when he said that no one had ever lost a nickel by underestimating the intelligence of the American public. Actually, it's not that the public is stupid in the sense that they can't learn how to tie their shoes or get across the street safely. It is that the public will believe anything if they believe that others believe it. That's the lemming factor. And this "diversity is our strength" brainwashing campaign was pushed hard. You saw this foolishness wherever you looked. And pretty soon it was clear that the lemmings had begun to believe it. My hate mail began containing indignant questions such as, "Why are you against immigration? Don't you know that diversity is our strength?"

This promotion by the Clinton government and the media of the nutty idea that the more diversity we have the stronger we are didn't really change any policies or trends. I suspect that the aim of the media bosses in launching it was to head off growing restlessness about the refusal of the government to control America's borders. Illegal immigrants were pouring into the country -- and of course, still are -- and the Clinton government was pretending not to notice, but many ordinary citizens were noticing and weren't happy. The media bosses decided to stifle the criticism of the Clinton government's immigration policies by persuading the lemmings that immigration, legal or illegal, is a good thing, as long as the immigrants aren't White, because non-White immigrants add to our "diversity" and thereby make the country stronger.

And the government kept doing just what it had been doing, and the diversity has kept increasing. The consequences are catching up with us, and they aren't good -- but the diversity-mongers are maintaining their pretense that we're becoming stronger and stronger by becoming less and less White. A few days ago I saw a brief report on the CNN news program I watch about the increasing diversity in America's classrooms. More and more of the children in America's schools were born in the Third World, or their parents were, and, oh, isn't it a wonderful thing? Just imagine how much stronger our schools are than they used to be!

Well, yes: we have a lot more metal detectors in the schools than we used to. I guess that's a sign of strength. We've had more school shootings since the beginning of the Clinton era than in the whole prior existence of the United States. The experience of dodging bullets undoubtedly strengthens the students. The pregnancy rate of unwed White female teenagers in the schools is approaching the Black rate. Probably that's a sign of strength too.

One of the nuttiest expositions of the "diversity is our strength" creed that I've heard is the one put forth by Federal Judge Patrick Duggan last December in his ruling on a discrimination suit against the University of Michigan by two White students who were denied admission while less-qualified non-White students were admitted. The judge, in ruling against the White students and in favor of the university's racial quota system, abandoned the old liberal argument that quotas are needed to make up for supposed past injustices to Blacks and other non-Whites. The reason for making the university more "diverse," according to the judge, was not to benefit minorities. It was to benefit the university and its White students. The real goal of our universities is not to educate students in the traditional sense but rather to condition them to become "active participants in our pluralistic, democratic society once they leave."

Judge Duggan believes -- or says he believes -- that racial diversity strengthens the university and the White students in it by rubbing their noses in as much diversity as possible and thus conditioning them for life in the New World Order of democracy and multiculturalism where there will be no White majority in America or anywhere else, if he and his kind are successful. It's worth noting that Judge Duggan, if his name means anything, is not a Jew but an Irishman. Furthermore, he was appointed to the Federal bench not by some far-left Clinton nutcase but by Ronald Reagan. He doesn't have to pretend to believe such destructive foolishness in order to keep his job. And unfortunately, there are lots of other judges and bureaucrats, both Jewish and non-Jewish, who believe or pretend to believe the same thing. At least, that's the party line they're pushing. That is frightening.

"Diversity is our strength." You know what that reminds me of: "War is peace. Freedom is slavery. Ignorance is strength." In case you don't recognize them, those were the official slogans of the government of Oceania in George Orwell's novel 1984.

Let me tell you what kind of "strength" comes from our diversity. Alienation is the primary product of diversity. People who live in a homogeneous society, where the people they work with and interact with every day are similar to them -- that is, look similar, have similar values and attitudes, react in similar ways to events -- people in a homogeneous society tend to bond with the people around them. They tend to feel a sense of community. They tend to feel a sense of security from having people like them around them. They seek the approval of the people with whom they have bonded. They feel a sense of responsibility and protectiveness toward these people. With good leadership and reasonably good human stock, the community is strong.

Take away the homogeneity, and you greatly reduce the likelihood of bonding. Instead of a community you have simply a collection of individuals, and each of those individuals is thinking, at least at a subconscious level, "It's every man for himself." Without homogeneity you no longer have a common set of shared values. Antisocial behavior goes way up: schoolyard shootings and drug usage, for example. Neurotic and psychotic behavior goes way up too. Diversity is a real boon for the psychiatrists. Borderline people, who would adjust reasonably well in a homogeneous community, are much more likely to go over the edge and become neurotic or psychotic as the diversity increases.

Without homogeneity the individuals in the society have a weaker sense of identity, a weaker sense of who they are and of what they belong to. They're much less likely to find positive role models among the real people around them: among their teachers and neighbors and community leaders. They're much less likely to have constructive goals or to lead purposeful and useful lives.

Our people's instincts remain pretty much the same even as our environment changes and becomes more "diverse." Our young people still seek role models. We still seek to bond with others and to share their values and attitudes. When we no longer can find what we seek among real people around us, many find their role models and their values and attitudes in the artificial world of the media. Which is to say, instead of natural role models, they find artificial role models designed by the men who control our mass media: role models designed by the masters of brainwashing who are deliberately destroying our civilization. That too is frightening.

You want more specifics? Classroom diversity -- the thing I heard CNN bragging about and the thing Judge Duggan thinks is a real bonus for White students -- has made a wasteland out of America's public schools and is rapidly doing the same thing to our universities. I'm a physicist myself, and so when I was a student I spent most of my time in very specialized mathematics and science courses. But for most university students -- certainly, for those taking a general course of study -- the most important courses are history and literature. Those are the subjects which more than any others strengthen a student's sense of identity and his feeling for the civilization he has inherited from his forebears. Those are the subjects that give him a knowledge of and appreciation of the traditions of his people and a sense of responsibility to protect their cultural and racial heritage.

It is for exactly this reason that history and literature are the subjects that have suffered most at the hands of the diversity-mongers. The last thing in the world they want is for White students to develop a strong sense of identity or a sense of community with their own kind. That frightens people such as Judge Duggan as much as his nightmare vision of a multicultural world in which a White minority must adapt to the whims and ways of a non-White majority should frighten any normal, spiritually healthy White person.

So how do the diversity-mongers prevent, say, White children in a sixth-grade classroom from beginning to develop a sense of racial identity and an interest in the history and traditions of their own people? Well, the answer is obvious: give the White kids a big dose of diversity. Put lots of Blacks and Vietnamese and mestizos in the classroom with them. Then, instead of teaching them about things European -- instead of having them read about Greek mythology -- about Zeus and Apollo and Aphrodite -- and about the empire-building exploits of Alexander and Caesar in the ancient world and about the nation-building accomplishments in the New World of Patrick Henry and George Washington and Thomas Jefferson, pump them full of fraudulent Black history: not just during Black History Month, but every month of the year. Teach them about how the heartless, mercenary White plantation owners rounded up millions of happy, carefree Africans, put them in chains, and made them work as slaves in order to enrich their White masters. Teach them how the thieving gringos stole half of the United States from the peace-loving mestizos and the other half from the Native Americans, and about how the Yankee imperialists economically exploited the cultured, altruistic peoples of Asia.

Instead of having them read the stuffy literature of dead, White males, give them a big dose of lesbian resentment against our patriarchal society. Immerse them in Ebonics and the ravings of Black nationalists. Teach them that in music Puffy Combs and Dr. Dre really have it all over Mozart and Beethoven. Make their heads spin. Condition them to become "active participants in our pluralistic, democratic society," as Judge Duggan said. But be sure the metal detectors are working, because not everyone reacts well to the conditioning.

In past broadcasts I have emphasized the Jewish role in this destructive business of diversity-mongering -- and, indeed, one can hardly over-emphasize that role, because the media under Jewish control have been the major driving force behind the "diversity is our strength" propaganda campaign. But we should note that the Jews are not the only ones promoting this destructive wickedness.

It really hurts me to talk about this, but the fact is that a very substantial portion of the White people who should be providing leadership for us now have turned against their own race -- and it's not just the judges and the politicians and the bureaucrats. Much of the rest of the White elite -- the wealthy and the powerful and the influential -- have sided with the Jewish media bosses in the campaign to force diversity on the rest of us. In some cases the reason for this treason is religious or ideological. Although there undoubtedly is a correlation between wealth and intelligence, wealth alone does not guarantee independence of mind, nor does it guarantee principled behavior. Just as there are blue-collar lemmings and white-collar lemmings, there also are some very wealthy lemmings.

Beyond this, I am sorry to say, there still is much class prejudice, socioeconomic prejudice, in America and also in other White countries. Just as there are people who are resentful by nature and hate anyone they perceive as having more than they have, or being more talented or better looking or more successful, so also are there snobs, who really believe that their wealth makes them better and more deserving than those who have less wealth. They really believe that they don't need the rest of their race. They believe that they can continue to be wealthy and privileged on their own strength alone. They do not see themselves as merely a small and temporary part of something larger and more permanent and infinitely more important than themselves. They are completely self-centered. They support the Jews' open-borders policy because it ensures that they will have not only cheaper labor in their factories, but also a steady supply of gardeners for their estates; cooks and cleaning women for their mansions; chauffeurs for their limousines. Their attitude is that the competition from non-Whites will keep the working-class Whites in their place and compel them to work a little harder for a little less pay.

Even the prospect of large-scale miscegenation does not displease them. Blending the non-wealthy Whites with the non-Whites to produce a dull and degenerate, coffee-colored working class increases the distance between the masses and the elite and magnifies their own sense of superiority. In other words, they believe, with Judge Duggan, that conditioning for life in a "multicultural, democratic" world is what's good for the hoi polloi -- but of course, not for the elite.

We're all familiar with the phrase "limousine liberal." Unfortunately, it's not just wealthy liberals who believe that the social experiments they're perfectly willing to impose on working-class and middle-class Whites shouldn't be imposed on them and their rich friends. There are all too many rich conservatives with the same attitude. For them, pushing for more diversity in America means being able to wrap themselves in the cloak of Political Correctness and having a favorable press -- or at least, avoiding the unfavorable press which is an ever-present hazard for rich conservatives who do not support Politically Correct policies. Just like the rich liberals, their attitude is, yes, indeed, force the working-class White kids to go to school with Blacks and mestizos if that's what the Jewish media demand, but my kids will go to private schools in Switzerland with personal bodyguards.

I'm sure that wealthy people weren't always inclined toward race treason the way so many today are. In normal times the wealthy were much more connected to the other social classes. The wealthy may have been selfish, they may have been unfair, but they understood that they were part of the race. They understood that their fate was tied to that of the other social classes. They were at least as concerned about the fate of the nation, the fate of the race, as any member of the middle class. They identified with their nation and with their race. But today most of them do not. They are as alienated as everyone else. The attitude of the wealthy, like that of the other classes, has become, "it's every man for himself."

And when I imagine myself in their shoes, I think I can understand that attitude. They look at the absolutely insane behavior of our society, of our government, and of most of our people. It scares the hell out of them, just the way it does any non-lemming, any person still able to think for himself, regardless of his social class. They see the government refusing to enforce its own immigration laws. They see our cities filling up with non-Whites from the Third World, and nobody's doing anything to stop it. The media are telling everyone it's wonderful that we're getting so much more diversity. The government is telling everyone it's wonderful. The Christian preachers are telling everyone it's wonderful. And the lemmings are parroting what they hear: "Isn't it wonderful that we're getting so much more diversity!"

The wealthy man observes this insanity, and he thinks to himself: "Everyone else may be crazy, but I don't have to let this insanity destroy me and my family. I'll just use my wealth to insulate myself from it. Why should I worry what all of these insane people do to themselves, as long as I can escape from it myself? Our civilization is sinking fast, but fortunately I have a lifeboat, and it's every man for himself."

And I must admit that I have come close to thinking that way myself. I took a trip out to Los Angeles not so long ago -- the first time I'd been there since I was a graduate student at Caltech back in the 1950s -- and let me tell you, if you like diversity, Los Angeles is the place for you to be. What a cesspit of diversity! The entire infrastructure out there is non-White: the cab drivers and the bus drivers and the sales clerks and the waiters and the cooks and the road crews and all of the hotel and motel workers. About the only White people I saw were a few men in business suits carrying briefcases. And these few Whites seem to have no clue as to how vulnerable they are. They think everything is normal, the way it ought to be.

Anyway, you see people of otherwise normal intelligence mindlessly parroting such idiotic nonsense as "diversity is our strength" while the ravages of diversity are so apparent all around them, and your first impulse is just to give up. You think to yourself, a race so stupid, so blind, so easily and willingly manipulated and controlled by the Jews, doesn't deserve to survive. But then you remember, hey, I'm part of that race. I'm not wealthy enough to have my own lifeboat, and most of you aren't either. We aren't able to insulate ourselves with money from the insanity all around us. If the ship sinks, we drown -- or get eaten by the sharks. We don't have the luxury of being able to look down our noses at the foolish behavior of the rest of our people. We are obliged to do something to change that behavior. If we want to save ourselves we must compel many others to save themselves as well, whether they want to or not.

When a man wants to save himself, the first thing he must do is try to understand his situation. When he wants to help others save themselves, the first thing he must do is help them understand their situation. That is what we in the National Alliance are trying to do: we are trying to help all of our people understand their situation. That's a difficult task, but also a necessary task. You can help with that work too. It is your responsibility to help.

As Ye Sow . . .

First, I want to admit to an error I made in last week's broadcast. I attributed to the circus impresario P.T. Barnum the statement that no one ever lost a nickel by underestimating the intelligence of the American public. At least two alert listeners have since pointed out to me that the statement actually was made by the journalist and writer H.L. Mencken. The statement for which P.T. Barnum should be remembered is that a sucker is born every minute.

Last week we talked about the rewards of increasing "diversity" in America. The primary reward is the growth in alienation as young Americans fail to develop a healthy sense of racial identity and fail to find satisfactory role models. Diversity goes up, and homogeneity simultaneously goes down. And as homogeneity disappears, so does the individual's sense of community, of belonging, of identity.

And we also talked about many of the side benefits of diversity: rising suicide rates, a greatly increased incidence of neuroses and psychopathologies, more schoolyard shootings, a growing pregnancy rate among unwed White teenagers, the confusion and loss of values, lowered academic standards, the trashing of the history and literature curricula in our universities, and a number of other consequences of the diversity being visited upon us by the government and the Jewish media.

And America isn't the only nation ruined by the diversity-mongers. If you've been paying attention to the news of what's happening in the Balkans, you will have noticed that the bloodshed and misery begun there by the determination of Madeleine Albright and the Clinton government to ram multiculturalism down the throats of the Serbs is still spreading. The killing going on in Macedonia now is a direct consequence of the Clinton government's bombing of Belgrade in order to force the Serbs to accept the multiculturalization of Serbia's Kosovo province. If you remember, the excuse given by Madeleine Albright and her kosher crew was that the wicked Serbs were mistreating the Albanian minority in Kosovo, who merely wanted to live in multicultural bliss with the Serbs.

Well, of course, the Albanians wanted no such thing. They wanted exactly what the Serbs wanted: namely to have Kosovo all to themselves. So as soon as Madeleine's hired gunmen shifted the balance of power in Kosovo and forced the Serb army out, the Albanians, instead of hugging their Serb neighbors began killing and terrorizing them. The Serbs fled for their lives, and now the Albanians run Kosovo, except for a few all-Serb enclaves. And more recently the Albanians have decided that what worked in Kosovo should work in neighboring Macedonia, where they also have a sizable minority. And so now we have Slavs and Albanians killing each other in Macedonia. What the Clinton government's effort to multiculturalize Kosovo has done, in other words, is cause the bloodshed and violence and unhappiness in the area to increase greatly. Before Madeleine there was a more-or-less peaceful status quo. Serbs occasionally killed Albanians, and Albanians occasionally killed Serbs. Now there is chaos and wholesale bloodshed.

Without outside coercion, people generally choose to live among their own kind. Sometimes they fight against other ethnic or racial groups, but the fighting is minimized by maintaining separation and allowing the various groups to run their own affairs and live according to their own customs. Then a multiculturalist comes along and tells everyone that it is wicked for people to mind their own business, that what they should do instead is mind everyone else's business, and the result is great unhappiness for everyone concerned, except for the multiculturalist, who sees his work as minding other people's business and forcing people to live with people they don't want to live with.

Actually, the multiculturalists began their lethal meddling in the Balkans a long time ago. After the First World War they thought it would be nice to take a bunch of different peoples, Croats and Serbs and Slovenes and Montenegrins and Albanians and Macedonians -- some Muslim, some Catholic, some Eastern Orthodox -- abolish the borders between them, and force them all to live together multiculturally in a new, artificial country called Yugoslavia. The communists held this artificial, multicultural creation together with the threat of bayonets and firing squads, but after the collapse of communism, the various groups which had been forced to live together were at one another's throats, fighting to have their own territories where they could live by themselves again without outside interference.

Actually, there's more to the story. There are two types of multiculturalists. There are the cold-blooded butcher types, like Madeleine Albright and her kosher crew, who have no ideological commitment to multiculturalism, but who use it as a weapon in their ongoing war against the rest of the world. And there are the wet multiculturalists, the ideological multiculturalists, who really believe that no one should be permitted to mind his own business. They really believe that mixing all sorts of different people together and then having the government enforce their togetherness is the right way.

When the bloodshed begins, the Madeleine Albright types laugh up their sleeves, and the wet types tear their hair out and try to figure what went wrong. After the Mardi Gras race riot in Seattle a month ago, the Madeleine Albright types were concentrating on keeping the news suppressed: keeping it from reaching the rest of the country, lest it cause some of the sheep to have second thoughts about the advantages of more "diversity." The wet multiculturalists were wringing their hands in distress and whining, "Oh, why can't we all just learn to get along with each other."

The wets are still trying to figure it out, still making excuses for the Blacks, still trying to explain their behavior in a Politically Correct way, and they are distressed at the reaction they are getting from a substantial portion of the White public. Many Whites are continuing to express outrage in letters to newspapers and on the radio talk shows in Seattle over the failure of the police to protect Whites and to arrest Blacks in the riot from fear of being accused of "racial profiling." They also are complaining about the reluctance of local prosecutors to charge Black rioters with "hate crimes," although many Blacks were shouting, "Let's get a Whitey," as they attacked Whites.

Actually, Seattle provides an amusing illustration of multiculturalism at work. The city is filled with very wet soccer moms and White yuppies, all claiming allegiance to multicultural ideals.

Now they're trying to find excuses for why it didn't work. For wet multiculturalists to be happy in the long run, they need to practice their multiculturalism at a distance: they need to get the government to impose it on other people. When it comes home to roost in their own backyards, they have problems dealing with it.

Well, there also are other chickens coming home to roost. Ever since the Second World War the United States has been a hardworking attack dog and collection agency for the world's Jews. The whole world had treated the poor, innocent, inoffensive Jews so terribly, that the U.S. government would force the rest of the world to pay reparations to the Jews for mistreating them. First it was the Germans who were forced by the U.S. occupation army to cough up tens of billions of dollars for the Jews. Then it was the Swiss, who were threatened by the U.S. Congress with boycotts if they didn't pay the Jews. And so it went. The French had taken some of their property, and the Jews wanted it back. The Swedes had traded with Germany during the war, and had been paid by the Germans with Jewish gold, and the Jews wanted it back.

I predicted a couple of years ago that eventually the Jews would get around to us. Most people thought me wrong when I made that prediction. After all, it was the United States Army that pulled the Jews' chestnuts out of the fire in Europe during the Second World War. If the United States had remained neutral and had made plain its intention to remain neutral, there need never have been a war in Western Europe. Germany need never have fought France and Britain and the United States. Germany would have smashed the Soviet Union, destroyed communism, and chased the Jews out of central and Eastern Europe forever. But the United States, under Franklin Roosevelt, secretly pledged its support to Britain if Britain would fight Germany until America could find an excuse to get into the war. It was American bombs that destroyed German cities and killed millions of German civilians. It was American intervention that permitted communism to survive and that also permitted hordes of communist rapists and murderers from the East to swarm over a defeated Germany. It was America that wreaked a Jewish vengeance on Germany and the German people for daring to raise their hands against the Jews. And after the war it was America that gave billions of dollars of aid to the fledgling state of Israel and made it possible for the Jews of Israel to prevail over their neighbors and seize Arab land.

So how could the Jews possibly have the gall to demand reparations from America, which always has been their biggest benefactor? What possible basis could they have for demanding reparations from us? People thought me silly for making such a prediction. Well, those chickens started coming home to roost last year, when the Jews filed claims against Ford and IBM and other American companies which had had subsidiaries in Germany before the Second World War. Because the German government had forced Jews to work in German defense industries during the war -- and those industries included some of the German subsidiaries of American companies, the Jews claimed back wages from the American parent companies. But that was just the preliminary skirmish. Now a whole flock of chickens has arrived.

In a lawsuit filed a few weeks ago in the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, Jewish groups representing so-called "Holocaust survivors" are demanding $40 billion dollars. The U.S. government, the Jews claim, failed to bomb and destroy the rail lines leading to Auschwitz, the big labor camp in Poland where the Germans produced synthetic rubber and other war materials using Jewish workers and where, the Jews claim, four million of them died in gas chambers.

According to the Jewish complaint, if the Americans had bombed the rail lines to Auschwitz, then the Germans wouldn't have been able to send all of those Jews to Auschwitz to be gassed, and they presumably would have survived the war. The Americans didn't bomb the rail lines to Auschwitz because there were many anti-Semites leading the American war effort, and they didn't want to do anything to save the Jews.

To me it sounds like a lame-brained argument: They say that if the Americans had bombed the rail lines to Auschwitz then the Germans, being a pretty dull and unimaginative bunch, wouldn't have been able to figure out what to do with the Jews they intended to send there to be gassed. But the Americans didn't bomb the rail lines because they didn't really want to save the Jews. That's the argument being made, and the Jews want $40 billion from the U.S. government. The specific charge being made by the Jews against the Americans is "complicity in genocide."

It sounds preposterous, but I think it'll work. Can you imagine anyone in the media laughing at the Jews' claim that the Americans should pay them $40 billion for "complicity in genocide"? I think the media will take it all very seriously. Can you imagine any American politician speaking out against the Jews' claim? I think they will fall all over themselves to support it as the case begins to generate more headlines in the months ahead.

I think that the Jews will get their money, and it will come from our pockets, and it will serve us right. And then the feeding frenzy will begin. And why not? The rule is, never give a sucker an even break, and we certainly are the world's champion suckers.

I don't mean to imply that in this latest claim the Jews are simply holding out their hands and saying, "Giff us your money!" There will be all sorts of the standard legalistic hocus-pocus generated with smoke and mirrors in the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia in the coming weeks and months. They will spend months presenting a huge amount of evidence and testimony to prove that we really are guilty of "complicity in genocide" and that we really do owe them $40 billion. That's easy enough to do, of course, when you have your opponents so terrified of being labeled "anti-Semites" that they won't put up a defense.

For example, one batch of evidence the Jews will present in court is that in 1943 and 1944 430,000 Jews were deported from Hungary to Auschwitz, and all that would have been required to prevent these deportations would have been the bombing of the rail bridges from Hungary to Poland. The Americans had air superiority and easily could have bombed the bridges if they had wanted to, but they didn't. The Americans, therefore, are guilty of "complicity in genocide" for the claimed gassing of those 430,000 Jews from Hungary. Furthermore, the Jews claim, those 430,000 Jews had $2 billion worth of valuables with them when they were deported: gold jewelry, coins, precious stones, and so on. After the war that $2 billion in valuables was looted by American troops. The Jews want it back -- from us. I think that it's poetic justice for the Jews to gouge that money out of a bunch of cowardly hypocrites like us who are afraid to stand up to them and have been their bullyboys against the rest of the world for so long.

And there are other chickens coming home to roost soon. For more than 50 years we have helped the Jews plunder and murder the other peoples of the Middle East: not just the Palestinians, but the Egyptians and the Iraqis and the Lebanese and the Syrians and the Jordanians and the rest.

And they've all just taken it. We kick them in the teeth at the behest of the Jews, and they don't kick back. We've assumed that they will keep on taking it forever without kicking back. A big part of the reason they've let us kick them in the teeth for so long is corrupt leadership. We've been paying off several of the governments over there to let the Jews do whatever they want to do. The Egyptian government of Hosni Mubarak even has passed laws prohibiting Egyptians from writing or saying anything critical of the Jews. That hopped-up little excuse for a king the Jordanians used to have until recently was afraid he would lose his status as an international jet-setter and playboy if he got out of line. The Saudis and many of the other oil sheikhs of the Persian Gulf are making too much money selling their oil to the Americans to give us any trouble. Just last month the government of Lebanon banned an international conference of historical scholars scheduled for Beirut, because in their writings some of those scholars have deviated from the Politically Correct line laid down by the Jews on who was to blame for the Second World War and what happened during that war. The Jews asked the Lebanese government to ban the conference, and that's what the Lebanese government did,

But all of that is beginning to change. A new generation of young militant artists and intellectuals is opting out of the corrupt and shameful subservience that has been the rule for Arabs in the Middle East for so long. These young militants are capable of much more than simply strapping explosives around themselves under a coat and then walking into a crowd of Israelis and blowing themselves up. They are writing poetry and music and novels and essays and editorials and film scripts that their corrupt political leaders have declared illegal, but that nevertheless are circulating in hundreds of thousands of copies among their people. Young militant film directors are making films that their governments have banned but that nevertheless are being seen on videos that go from hand to hand. Illegal songs that denounce Israel, the Jews, and the United States are being sold openly on CDs in Cairo and sung defiantly in public by young people. At the top of the charts now is the song "I Hate Israel." It was inspired by televised scenes of the Jews shooting a 12-year-old Palestinian boy to death in the arms of his father last September.

Songs and films may not seem like much against U.S. aircraft carriers and Israeli terror weapons, but this rapidly growing militancy among young Arab intellectuals and artists is very significant. In the past the suicide bombers have been mostly young religious fanatics, poor and uneducated, and they weren't much better at building an effective bomb than the average Ku Kluxer in this country. The new generation of bomb-makers will be brighter, better educated, wealthier, and better connected. Some of them, like Osama bin Laden of the older generation, also may be religious, but the important thing is that the affluent sons and daughters of the corrupt Arab leadership are finding it fashionable now to be nationally conscious, to support the oppressed Palestinians and Iraqis, and to take action against the newly perceived enemies of their people.

I have no specific knowledge of what those actions will be, of course, but I suspect that they will be more sophisticated and more carefully planned and executed than the suicide bombings of the past -- or even the World Trade Center bombing in New York in 1993. If we see unexpected outbreaks of foot-and-mouth disease at 50 different locations at the same time in the United States, with the consequent devastation of our entire livestock industry, we'll know that some of our chickens have come home to roost. George Bush and the other corrupt flunkies of the Jews in America can rattle their aircraft carriers and rage about "cowardly acts of terrorism," and the corrupt leaders of the Arab world can imprison or shoot their own sons and daughters in an effort to hang onto their wealth and power, but the chickens will keep coming. That is a promise.

It's foolish even to think about trying to keep the chickens away at this late date. Historical events usually are connected. One follows from another. The course of history can be changed, if one looks ahead far enough, but it's like changing the course of a moving locomotive. We won't accomplish much by pushing on the side of the locomotive as it's going past, but if we get far enough ahead and move the tracks in front of the locomotive, we can change the direction in which it will go.

We ceased being vigilant a long time ago. We became shortsighted. We allowed weak men and corrupt men to lead us for too long. We allowed the Jews into our society. We will pay the price for that, and it will be a terrible price. But perhaps even now we can plan ahead and do something about moving the tracks in front of the locomotive.

Shocking Differences

During the past couple of weeks we've spoken a bit about the "diversity" being pushed so vigorously by the government and by the Jewish media, and I apparently made some irreverent remarks on this very sensitive topic which greatly offended some of our more Politically Correct listeners, because I've received a number of letters from listeners who were practically in tears.

The general tenor of these letters is: "Why can't we all just learn to get along with each other? We're really all the same. The only difference between us is skin color; why is that so important to you? Why do you hate people just because they're from a different country? By coming here with their different customs they enrich our lives." Et cetera. Some of the letters were more on the weepy, hand-wringing side, and some were more on the belligerent, hateful side, but they were all written by folks who are distressed that I want to stop the flow of non-White immigrants into America, boot out the ones who're already here, and then hunt down and hang the people who arranged to bring them here.

Some folks just can't understand why I want to do that. I must have spoken with a dozen interviewers for the mass media who asked me: "What's wrong with multiculturalism? Why do you think it's bad?" That's exactly what I was asked by a pretty, young woman reporter for a German television news program last week. And I believe that she was sincere. She really didn't understand. That's the lemming factor. The girl wasn't stupid. It's just that her brain is wired in such a way that she is incapable of absorbing any information or reaching any conclusion that is Politically Incorrect.

If multiculturalism and diversity were not promoted by the controlled mass media -- if wanting to have a clean, White America were still Politically Correct, the way it was here, say, 50 years ago, and also the way it was in her country until 1945 -- then she would be able to understand perfectly well why multiculturalism is socially, culturally, and racially destructive. She would agree completely with me. But because it is unfashionable to understand such things now, she can't. And I don't mean that she doesn't want to understand; I mean that she can't understand. That is the way lemmings function.

I've often thought about how we might rearrange the wiring in a lemming's brain and permit him or her to understand what is blocked out by the overwhelming compulsion to conform, to be fashionable. I've spoken in the past, only half jokingly, about the oak-table-leg method of persuasion: about putting a lemming on a diet of 500 calories a day and beating him half to death with an oak table leg about once a day until he gets his thinking straightened out. That's the method the communists used in their so-called "labor reeducation" camps, and it seems to have worked pretty well. It's also the method the Allies used on the German population after the Second World War to make them realize the error of their ways in supporting Hitler. Eventually they had most of the Germans blaming Hitler for their suffering instead of the people who were raping, beating, looting, and starving them.

Well, of course, I can't use trauma and privation as an educational method, but perhaps it is nevertheless possible to shock a lemming to his senses. I don't know, but it is something you might like to try for yourself. So with that in mind let's talk for a moment about the Chinese. The Chinese are a people with whom we are rapidly becoming more and more closely involved, both through trade and through immigration. And the properly conditioned lemming will tell you that there's absolutely nothing wrong with that. The Chinese, after all, are exactly like us, except that they speak a different language, are a little darker, and have slanted eyes. They add wonderfully to our "diversity" here. They enrich our culture by their presence.

Well, actually they're not quite like us. They have different customs, and those different customs come from a different way of looking at the world, a different attitude toward life, and that different attitude evolved over the course of thousands of generations of living in a different environment from the environment in which our ancestors lived. For example, the Chinese eat babies and see nothing wrong in it. And what they do to cats and dogs they get their hands on is too horrible, too sickening, for me to describe here. What they do to cats and dogs is much worse than just eating them. But to get back to babies: I had heard reports from time to time about the Chinese custom of eating babies in the belief that it is an especially healthy thing to do. For a modern nuclear superpower, the Chinese have some strange ideas about health. These ideas have nearly wiped out a number of species of wild animals because of the insatiable Chinese demand for their body parts. Ground rhinoceros horn is in such demand that it has seriously threatened the rhinoceros with extinction. The same sort of demand exists for tiger penises and various bear parts.

Human babies are harder to get for eating, and I imagine that there are laws in China about killing babies for that purpose. But there seems to be no law against eating aborted human fetuses. A number of hospitals in China that perform abortions sell the aborted fetuses for eating. The smaller fetuses are cooked in a soup. The late-term fetuses are eaten more like roast suckling pig. The Chinese government understandably is a little bashful about having Western journalists publicize this sort of thing, just as it is bashful about having Western journalists film what the Chinese do to cats and dogs. Not to worry, though: Western journalists understand that it would be the worst kind of "no, no" to publish such information in the West; it might dampen the public's enthusiasm for more togetherness with the Chinese.

Despite the effort on both sides to keep these peculiar customs of the Chinese from becoming better known in the West, information is available to the diligent seeker. I recently acquired photographs taken in a restaurant in China of a Chinese man eating what is quite plainly recognizable as a late-term human fetus. The photographs are shocking and disgusting to me, and I imagine that they also will be shocking and disgusting to the average American lemming. They won't be shocking to Chinese, of course. Eating fetuses is no stranger to them than, say, the habit of eating snails in garlic sauce is to a Frenchman.

The significance I see in the Chinese habit of eating fetuses, even if only the wealthier Chinese can afford them, is more than simply a difference between us and the Chinese in culinary tastes or in ideas of what's healthy. A society that sees nothing wrong in eating babies, a race that finds this habit acceptable, is profoundly different from ours. The difference is far deeper than language or skin color or facial features.

Now, I don't hate the Chinese because they aren't White. I don't hate them for being different. I don't even hate them because they see nothing wrong in eating aborted babies. That's their business. I do have stronger feelings about what they do to cats and dogs, and if I had the power to do so I would depopulate China in order to put a stop to that. But if they want to eat Chinese fetuses, I don't care -- so long as they do it in China, not here. But they will be doing it here if we permit the criminal insanity of multiculturalism to continue. And it won't be just Chinese who'll be doing it. Think how much the customs and the morals of White Americans already have changed under the influence of the multiculturalism we already have here.

I'm not telling you that if more Chinese come to America we'll all be eating babies. I believe that most of us, even our lemmings, will retain an instinctive block against that sort of thing. But the Chinese nevertheless will change our culture. More important, they will change our attitudes, our morals. If we have a lot of Chinese immigrants in America eating fetuses, you can bet your bottom dollar that any White American who publicly expresses his disgust, his disapproval of this habit, will be denounced by our Jewish media as a "hater," a "bigot," a "racist," and so on. Christian preachers will be issuing a call for more tolerance. Politically ambitious prosecutors and police officials will announce to the media that they are looking into the possibility of filing "hate speech" charges against the White person who made the offensive remarks.

You know that's what would happen because it's what already has been happening with other phases of the campaign to multiculturalize America. The lemmings adjust to it the same way frogs in a kettle over a fire adjust to the gradually increasing temperature of the water. But at this time the idea of eating babies probably still will shock most lemmings, just as taking a frog from a kettle of cold water and dropping him into a kettle of boiling water will shock the frog.

Would you like to try it? Send me a 9-inch by 12-inch, self-addressed envelope with 55 cents postage on it, and I'll send you two photographs, each approximately eight by ten inches in size. One is of a Chinese man in a restaurant in China carrying a plate with a large, late-term human fetus. The other photograph shows him sitting at a table and eating the dismembered fetus. The head of the fetus is still attached to the torso, and the features are clearly distinguishable. They are horrible, shocking, disgusting photographs. I'll send these photographs to you free if you send me your envelope with 55 cents postage on it and promise to show the photographs to other people and get them to listen to an American Dissident Voices broadcast with you.

I want to emphasize to you again: I don't hate Chinese because some of them in China eat babies, and the rest of them think that's all right. I don't hate Blacks because of some of the things they do in Africa that I find disgusting. That's their business -- as long as they stay in China or in Africa, as the case may be. I just don't want them here. I don't want to see them. I don't want to hear them. I don't want to smell them. I don't want to hear liberals or Jews making excuses for them. I don't even want to think about them.

Well, the Chinese are not the only exotic ingredient in America's multicultural stew. The Jews are a much more important exotic element because they wield so much more power in American society through their control of our mass media of news and entertainment. And there are people who will tell you, "So what? What difference does it make if the Jews control Hollywood and television? They're just like us, except that they have a different religion." That is what the lemmings have been taught to believe about the Jews. But in fact, the Jews are as profoundly different from us as the Chinese are, and the difference consists in much more than the Jews' uncanny ability to accumulate money. The Jews, like the Chinese, have a fundamentally different way of looking at the world, and this difference is based in thousands of generations of separate evolution in a different environment.

I'll give you just one example of this difference today. This is something I first noticed when I was a junior high school student in Dallas, Texas. The school I attended was in one of Dallas' wealthier suburbs, and there were a number of Jews in the school. What I and several of my classmates noticed about the Jews was their uniquely Jewish sense of humor. One doesn't expect much delicacy in the jokes told by 14-year-olds, of course, but the thing that made the jokes that appealed especially to the Jews stand out was their scatological content. Nearly every Jewish joke involved excrement in one way or another. As I said, this Jewish tendency was so pronounced that I and my Gentile classmates noticed it and commented on it, even though we didn't understand it. And it wasn't that we had an exceptionally large number of budding Howard Sterns among our Jewish classmates. The inclination toward scatology is a general Jewish characteristic. Jews themselves, including Jewish psychologists, have commented on this Jewish trait often, explaining it in terms of the collective Jewish experience throughout history. It is real, and it is quite noticeable.

The Jews who control America's entertainment media are men who as much as anything else want to make money, and they understand the need to keep their Jewishness from being too obvious in the entertainment they produce for Gentile consumption. At least, they used to understand that, but in the last decade or so they've become a lot cockier, a lot bolder. They believe that they have such a tight grip on the minds and morals of the Gentiles now that they can do and say anything they want on the television screen without danger of a Gentile reaction. They believe that they now can let all of their Jewishness hang out. And I'm not talking just about the Howard Stern types. I'm talking about the ultra-rich and powerful mainstream media moguls, Jews such as Michael Eisner and Gerald Levin and Sumner Redstone. Sumner Redstone's MTV has been described by students of the media as the single most powerful influence on the attitudes and behavior of teenaged White girls.

I don't watch MTV myself, and I suspect that most White parents of teenaged girls, even very liberal and trendy parents, also don't pay attention to what their daughters are being indoctrinated with by Sumner Redstone's MTV. An example of which I recently became aware was brought to my attention by the filing just last week of a lawsuit against MTV in Los Angeles Superior Court. Let me give you the details: three months ago, on January 21, MTV was taping a pilot for a new show called Dude, This Sucks. Some teenaged girls were visiting the studio during the taping. A studio employee instructed them to stand on the stage in a certain place for a part of the show in which a pair of performers known as the "Shower Rangers" were to go through their routine. The girls were not told what the performance would be or how they would be involved in it.

The "Shower Rangers" were two men dressed in Boy Scout uniforms. They came on stage, turned their backs to the camera and to the teenaged spectators on the stage, dropped their trousers, bent over, and let fly with a shower of semi-liquid feces, spattering the unsuspecting girls from head to foot. Apparently they had dosed themselves with a powerful laxative prior to the performance.

To Jews, including billionaire Jewish media moguls like the owner of CBS and MTV, Sumner Redstone, this sort of thing is hilariously funny. It's their idea of humor. Unfortunately for MTV, however, the girls who were sprayed by MTV's "Shower Rangers" weren't amused, nor were their parents. Last week two of the girls sued. One of them told the court:

We were having a good time until the second act of Dude, This Sucks went on. All of a sudden I was smelling something disgusting, and I started to gag. I looked around at my friends. They were covered in something. As I looked down at myself I realized that I was too.

Another of the plaintiffs, 14-year-old Kelly Sloat, spoke of the humiliation the girls felt when they returned to school:

Everyone knew about it, even some of the teachers. Most of the kids were cracking jokes or wouldn't come near us because, even though we washed off the feces, they said we smelled. I will never, ever forget what a horrible experience this was.

The girls' lawsuit charges MTV with "infliction of emotional distress, negligence, and battery.

I would charge MTV and Sumner Redstone with much more than that. I would charge Mr. Redstone and his fellow Jews with a deliberate effort to degrade White culture, White standards, White morality. I would charge them with attempting to destroy all traditional ideas in young people's minds of what is right and just and noble and beautiful and replace those traditional ideas and values with a Jewish concoction of filth and degeneracy designed to make our young people accept a Jew-dominated, multicultural pigsty society. And in my book, that's a hanging offense.

And I assure you that when the time for hanging comes, it will not be just this one incident with the "Shower Rangers" which leaves Sumner Redstone and all of his kosher crew dancing on air. This incident is merely an illustration of a general pattern of behavior over a long period of time. I chose this illustration not just because it is current, but because it is a matter of court record. You can verify all the details for yourself. You certainly won't get those details from the other Jewish media.

I also chose this incident because it cannot be written off as an aberration, like some piece of Howard Stern scatology. Sumner Redstone is a mainstream Jew: one of the wealthiest, most powerful, and most influential Jews in the world. He is a leader of the Jews, a Jew to whom nearly all the other Jews look up. No one can call him an aberration. He is the essence of Jewish influence on our society. He is a Jew who is welcomed with open arms at the White House, regardless of whether a Democrat or a Republican is in residence. And he believes that what teenaged White girls need is more exposure to the "Shower Rangers." That will loosen them up, make them more open-minded, and prepare them for sex with Black boys.

And if you've been paying any attention at all to the trends in entertainment for teens, you'll understand that there's nothing exceptional about the "Shower Rangers." They are just one more step in the direction the Jews have been going all along: not just Sumner Redstone, but all of them, from the time they first began taking over control of our entertainment media.

In the 1930s Gentile leaders, most of them Christians, were able to threaten Jews effectively with boycotts if they violated standards of decency. One of the most effective leaders of this effort was Joseph Breen, who helped establish the Production Code for Hollywood in 1934. Breen knew exactly what he was up against. Of Jewish filmmakers Breen wrote in 1932:

These lousy Jews ... are simply a vile bunch of people with no respect for anything but the making of money.... These Jews seem to think of nothing but money-making and sexual indulgence.... [They] are the men and women who decide what the film fare of the nation is to be.

The Production Code constrained the Jews for a couple of decades, but with the advent of television the Jews gained far more influence over public attitudes and behavior than the churches had. The Jews could safely ignore the Code, and in the 1960s they began pushing again in the same direction Sumner Redstone is still pushing with the "Shower Rangers."

So you see, Jews really are different. They're not just like us any more than the Chinese are. And let me tell you something: I and a lot of other White Americans have had just about as much of the Chinese and the Jews and the Blacks and the rest of the multicultural filth here as we will tolerate. We've been pushed about as far as we're willing to let ourselves be pushed. We want our country back, and we intend to take it back, and if a lot of soccer moms and yuppies and Politically Correct journalists who can't understand that get in the way, they're going to be hurt.

Riots and Revolution

Everyone in America knows about Cincinnati. That is, everyone at least has seen the sanitized images of the Cincinnati race riot that have appeared on television screens across the country. In that regard the Cincinnati riot is different from the Seattle race riot of nearly two months ago. News of the Seattle riot was successfully suppressed by the controlled media outside the Seattle area.

In other ways, however, the riots were very similar. Although the controlled media decided not to try to suppress the news from Cincinnati, it is clear that the sympathies of the media bosses were as much with the Blacks in Cincinnati as they were in Seattle. Here's one small example of that: The 19-year-old Black thug whose shooting by a White policeman was the Blacks' excuse for rioting in Cincinnati had a long arrest record. There were 14 more arrest warrants outstanding for him at the time he was shot. The policeman who shot him, in other words, realized that he was dealing with a habitual criminal, and he responded to what he believed was an attempt by the Black to draw a weapon from his waistband by shooting him.

None of this was mentioned on the television news coverage of events in Cincinnati, of course. The Black who was shot was described by the media as "an unarmed Black youth" -- or, in the case of Cincinnati's Channel 9 television news program, as "an unarmed African American teenager." And here's the clincher: Instead of using one of the readily available police mug shots of the Black, the media managed to dig up a photo of him in a formal suit with a big, innocent smile on his face, presumably taken at some high-school dance -- and that is the photograph shown repeatedly to Americans on their television screens: not the police mug shots of a hardened, 19-year-old Black criminal, but a photograph of smiling, well-dressed, teenaged Black innocence. You can be sure that some Jewish news director got a bonus from a Jewish network boss for digging up that photograph.

At the Black's funeral last Saturday the White governor of Ohio and the White mayor of Cincinnati both appeared among the mourners. That's a symbolic thing. You can be certain that they wouldn't have attended the funeral of some White street thug shot by a Black cop. They attended the funeral, alongside Louis Farrakhan's Nation of Islam people, Kweisi Mfume of the NAACP, and members of the New Black Panther Party, and they looked appropriately contrite and said nice things about the deceased for one reason only: they were frightened to death that the Blacks would continue rioting.

And why were they afraid of that? They could have stopped the riot dead in its tracks any time they wanted. That is, physically they could have stopped the riot. Even though 43 per cent of the population of Cincinnati is Black, the police could have wound up the riot within half an hour, and the Blacks who survived the gunfire would have been trembling behind closed doors, afraid to show their faces. Militarily it would have been a trivial matter.

But both Mayor Charles Luken and Governor Bob Taft understood that politically they were at the mercy of the Black rioters. They knew which side the Jewish media were on. They knew that if they took strong measures against the rioters they would be crucified by the media. So just as in Seattle the cops, under orders from the politicians, simply let the riot run its course. They arrested 200 or so Blacks they caught looting stores or setting fires when they could do so without danger of any real conflict, but it was more a matter of picking off stragglers than it was any real attempt at riot control. For the most part the police just watched. They watched while Blacks stopped cars with White drivers, pulled the drivers out of their cars, and stomped and beat them mercilessly. They stood by and watched the Blacks beat a White woman "to a pulp." Those words -- "to a pulp" -- aren't mine; they came from the April 12 edition of the Cincinnati Post. The rule governing the cops was: don't provoke the Blacks.

Just as in Seattle, most Whites in Cincinnati behaved like sheep waiting to be led to the slaughter. The ones who were pulled from their cars and beaten practically begged for it. A White driver would see a group of Blacks in his path milling around in the middle of the street with stones and bottles in their hands, and instead of stepping on the gas and scattering the Blacks as he plowed through them, he would stop and roll down his window to ask them to move so that he could get through.

Some Whites behaved even worse than that. A few Politically Correct soccer moms and yuppies were eager to demonstrate that their sympathies lay with the Blacks rather than with the police. One White woman carried flowers to the alley where the Black criminal had been shot by the White policeman, and as she was leaving a Black woman in a parked car threatened her: "This ain't no crosswalk. You walk in front of me, and I'm going to run over you." That's from the April 16 issue of the Cincinnati Post. A group of White yuppies visiting the shooting scene were confronted by a Black Panther, who told them menacingly: "Whites are walking too freely down this street." An impartial deity looking down on such scenes from above to decide which race should inherit the earth certainly would not choose the Whites.

Perhaps we shouldn't expect better behavior from Cincinnati's Whites in view of the example set for them by their so-called "leaders." While Governor Taft and Mayor Luken were inside a Black church shaking hands with various Black militants at the funeral service for the slain Black, Blacks outside were chanting and carrying signs saying "It's Time to Shoot Back." The only responses from the White politicians were weak, ingratiating smiles.

The Blacks know when they have the upper hand, and Black leaders from around the country flocked to Cincinnati to take advantage of the situation and stir things up a bit. One of them was the Reverend Al Sharpton, who came with his "adviser," Jewish lawyer Sanford Rubenstein.

The local news media, by way of contrast, boasted that they were showing "restraint" in their coverage of the riot. What they meant by that is that they were doctoring their news coverage so as not to make the rioters look too bad. TV camera crews, instead of broadcasting live, were taping what they saw, so that editors back at the studio could snip out scenes that might arouse White viewers. In particular, the scenes that were cut were those showing Blacks beating White motorists, especially White women.

The word got around despite this censorship, however. In fact, the knowledge that the news they were seeing had been censored caused White viewers to be more responsive to wild rumors than they otherwise would have been. The radio talk shows provided a forum for many Whites to vent their anger. They talked about buying more guns, about forming vigilante groups and shooting rioters since the police wouldn't do it, and so on, but as usual it was just empty talk by Whites made feckless by a soft, protected lifestyle that any real effort to organize them for dealing forcefully with the Blacks would have sent most of them running for cover.

The city's White businessmen behaved in the way we have come to expect from White businessmen. All that matters to them is profits, and riots are bad for profits. They see appeasement as the way to deal with every Black disturbance or disorder. While a White police spokesman was calling publicly for tough police action against the rioters and more support for the police from the politicians, the politicians were meeting behind his back with the local business tycoons to work out a plan for selling out the Whites and buying off the Blacks. In an interview by the Cincinnati Enquirer and also by a local radio station, Fraternal Order of Police President Keith Fangman expressed the police disappointment with the pusillanimous behavior of the mayor and the city council, and especially with an anti-racial profiling ordinance the city council had passed just two weeks earlier in response to Black and Jewish demands.

Speaking of the low morale of his fellow policemen, Fangman said:

Quite frankly, many of those on the council have inflamed the situation in the past few months with talk about Cincinnati police officers murdering African American males but not telling people the truth about all the officers that have been shot at by these African American males. We're fed up. The only thing to improve morale is for the council to come forward and admit that the racial profiling ordinance was nothing more than a political stunt. We're in the middle of a riot, and I can guarantee you that we are stopping, detaining, and questioning people in the areas where there is unrest. Two weeks ago the council called that racial profiling. Now that the city is burning, the council doesn't know what to say.... We are not going to negotiate with these terrorists, and that's what they are. These are nothing but terrorists out there on the street. If we give one inch to these terrorists in the form of negotiations, then we've got no one to blame but ourselves when we turn into another Detroit or Washington, DC.

Well, of course, negotiation and appeasement and bribery were exactly what the mayor and the politicians on the city council had in mind. While the police were held back from dealing forcefully with the rioters, the politicians and the businessmen were negotiating with Al Sharpton and his Jewish lawyer and the head Black in the local chapter of the Urban League and all the rest. The mayor, Charlie Luken, already has spoken about the need to root out racism as the key to avoiding future riots. Instead of ditching their new racial profiling ordinance, the mayor and the other politicians are talking about ways to enforce it more rigorously. Executives from the Procter & Gamble Company and Toyota Motor Manufacturing of North America and other members of the Cincinnati Business Committee have announced that they will provide additional jobs and economic opportunities for Blacks. They will hire more young Blacks this summer, and they will give more contracts to Black-owned businesses.

And I don't have to tell you whose jobs will be given to those Black rioters this summer. I don't have to tell you who won't be getting the contracts that will be given to Black-owned businesses. One thing which the businessmen and the politicians didn't announce publicly but which I see coming is a behind-the-scenes promise of political and police power to the head Black rabble rousers. The first tidbit to go to a Black will be the job of the current White chief of police. Next in order will be a Black mayor for Cincinnati. And in fact, Cincinnati will go the way of Detroit and Washington, DC, just as the president of the Fraternal Order of Police warned.

Will that be good for business? I don't think so. Certainly not in the long run. But White businessmen these days are almost as shortsighted and irresponsible a lot as White politicians. They feel no sense of responsibility to their race or to the future. They just want quick fixes. And they are as terrified of being thought Politically Incorrect as are the politicians.

So what should those of us with a longer view of the situation do?

I'm getting a lot of letters from hyperactive idiots who are jumping up and down and telling me, "Don't just talk! Do something about the Blacks! Do something about what's happening in Cincinnati!"

I think they want me to go to Cincinnati with a few members of my organization, the National Alliance, and start shooting Blacks, so that they can have the vicarious thrill of watching it on television. Well, let me tell you, if I thought that the time had come for the shooting to start, it wouldn't be Black rioters I'd be gunning for. I'd be gunning first for White politicians and businessmen. Before going after our external enemies, I'd deal with our internal enemies. Only after we'd cleaned out the traitors inside our gates would I aim for those outside. And even then it wouldn't be Black rioters I'd be shooting. I appreciate Black rioters. I'm just sorry the weather in Cincinnati has been so cool and wet and the riot there didn't last longer and take a bigger toll. There's nothing more educational for our people than a good Black riot. I'm hoping for a long, hot summer. This should be a good summer for riots, with the economy heading downhill and the Blacks convinced that White Republicans stole the election from their candidate, Al Gore.

No, in this pre-revolutionary period the Blacks are good for us. The first outsiders we must deal with are the people who control our mass media of news and entertainment and pump their poison and their filth and their lies into our people around the clock. When we have rooted the last of these Semitic poisoners and everyone in their supporting infrastructure out of our society, the rest will be only a mopping-up operation.

Anyway, the time for shooting isn't here yet, and that's too bad, because a great deal more damage will be done to our people and to our civilization between now and then, and the longer the shooting is postponed, the less we'll have for starting over after the smoke has cleared. We really need to focus now on the things that it is time for. And the most important of those things is communicating with our people: first developing the means for communication with them, developing every possible medium which we can use for reaching them, and then using all of those media as effectively as possible. I'm sure we'll never reach the Politically Correct lemmings like the woman who was threatened with being run over when she put flowers on the spot where the Black was shot. She didn't learn a thing from that experience. She went home and cried her eyes out over the unrequited love she has for the Black race. She needs to be reprogrammed by the mass media, but that can't be done as long as the hereditary enemies of our people continue to control the media. Now they are working day and night to create more deranged White women like her. And there's also not much to be done with the Whites who like to let off steam by sounding tough on the radio talk shows or with the hyperactive idiots who urge me to start shooting. Talkers seldom are doers.

But there still are responsible, level-headed White men and women in America capable of thinking for themselves: millions of them, actually. For the most part they keep their mouths shut now because they are isolated and they feel intimidated by the constant pressure to conform, the constant pressure coming from the mass media to be Politically Correct. But they are capable of seeing what's happening around them. They don't have blinders on, like the lemmings do.

My job now and for the immediate future -- our job -- is to reach out to these millions of isolated and intimidated non-lemmings, these millions of responsible and level-headed White men and women, and to help them see more of what is happening around them, to give them more information, to help them digest and assimilate and understand that information, to help them draw responsible conclusions from it. And our job is to lessen and eventually end their sense of isolation by letting them know that they are not alone, that there are millions like them who are not dancing willingly to the tune played by the Jewish pied pipers of the controlled media. And at the same time that we inform these millions, our task is to begin networking them, to help them begin working together, to help them encourage and reinforce each other.

When we have accomplished that to any significant degree we will have gained new capabilities and will be able to do other things, but for now our task is to inform and explain and inspire -- and to connect, unite, organize.

Let's finish today with a thought about our task of combating the influence of the Jewish mass media. The Jews understand one thing about mass propaganda that many people don't understand. In its early stages the task of propaganda is to persuade, to change attitudes and opinions. But after the propaganda has succeeded in doing that -- after it has all of the lemmings dancing to the same tune -- it has a different purpose. Its new purpose is to create a pervasive atmosphere of ideological uniformity in which any non-conforming idea, any fact which does not fit the party line, will stand out and be noticed so that the forces of Political Correctness, the Thought Police, can swarm over it and suppress it. That's the way it worked behind the Iron Curtain during the communist period. The lemmings were conditioned to respond instantly and report to the secret police any dissonant expression, any non-conforming statement or tendency, anything at all that was not perfectly in tune with the pervasive propaganda that saturated their thinking and their perceptions.

And that's the way it's quickly becoming in America today. My organization, the National Alliance, publishes and distributes many printed materials to inform those thinking millions of isolated individuals, to provoke them to think harder and to reach conclusions. Without the pervasive blanket of Jewish propaganda from the mass media, our leaflets and pamphlets and books and other materials -- even the American Dissident Voices broadcasts -- might go unnoticed. There's so much material of all sorts being published, people are bombarded with so much information, that it's difficult to be noticed, to catch the attention of the people one is trying to reach. But the Jews help us by providing a contrasting background of lies against which the truth stands out starkly. Their propaganda keeps the lemmings hypnotized, but it also makes it easier for the non-lemmings to notice anything contradictory to the party line.

In this regard I've mentioned on earlier broadcasts the reaction we always get from the lemmings when we distribute a sticker which says simply, "Earth's Most Endangered Species: the White Race -- Help Preserve It," and gives our address. There shouldn't be anything alarming about that, but it alarms the lemmings every time, because it stands out against the pervasive Jewish propaganda background which tells the lemmings over and over, "Black good, White bad, Black good, White bad." The notion that the White race ought to be preserved is contrary to that Jewish propaganda background and is therefore noticed -- by the millions we are trying to reach as well as by the lemmings.

That is at least a small silver lining in the cloud over America. Help me take advantage of it. Help me reach out to other responsible Americans. Tell your friends about my broadcasts.

Patriot's Choice

When I speak with or correspond with people from various parts of the United States the issue on which everyone seems to agree is immigration. Everyone has his own horror story about what the influx of non-White immigrants has done to the community in which he lives or to his workplace. People I know who work in Silicon Valley as highly skilled professionals complain to me about the enormous influx of Asians, who are taking away their jobs: Asians from India in particular. People in the health-care professions and in the academy also complain about Asians. Ninety per cent of the interns in many hospitals are Vietnamese or Chinese or Pakistani. University faculties are being filled with Asians, leaving fewer and fewer opportunities for White American scholars to have academic careers.

At the other end of the socioeconomic scale, mestizos from Mexico and other parts of Central and South America, are taking over virtually all of the minimum-wage jobs in the construction trades and landscaping, in poultry processing plants, in cleaning, in food service, and in many other areas where unskilled labor is required. There are large parts of the United States where there are no White motel or hotel workers to be seen, except perhaps at the registration desk, and no White waiters or waitresses, and no Whites in the kitchen.

The public schools in these parts of the country hit hard by non-White immigration have become disaster areas, with White children outnumbered by Browns and Yellows, and Blacks. Neighborhoods, even whole towns, which used to be entirely White -- and clean, safe, quiet, and decent -- have become almost entirely non-White in the past two decades.

No one that I speak with or correspond with is happy about this situation; most are angry, and some of them are quite angry. Of course, I don't speak with everyone in the country. I don't talk with the Christian ministers who preach that we all are God's children and therefore shouldn't object to sharing our land, our schools, and our incomes with our non-White brothers and sisters. I don't correspond with the owners of the poultry-processing plants, who complain that Whites aren't willing to do the hard, smelly work in their plants at a reasonable wage, and so they bring in non-Whites who are happy to have the work. And I have no dealings with either the Democratic Party bosses who want more non-Whites coming into the country because nearly all of them will vote Democrat or with the Republican big businessmen who welcome more non-White immigration because it keeps the cost of labor down.

But I do speak with enough people that I am quite certain that the great majority of White Americans would like to see an end to the flood of non-Whites pouring across our borders. And I'm including in that White majority even the Politically Correct soccer moms and yuppies, because in the privacy of the voting booth even they would vote to end the flood. Actually, I wouldn't be surprised if the majority of Democratic voters, who are substantially less White than Republicans, would vote to stop non-White immigration.

But of course, the voters aren't given a chance to express their feelings on non-White immigration or on many other sensitive issues. That's strange, isn't it? The conventional wisdom is that politicians seek votes and will champion any cause they believe will win them votes. Why is it that neither the Democrats nor the Republicans are given a chance to vote their feelings on the immigration issue? It might be understandable that the Democratic Party would want to steer clear of that issue, considering it divisive. Even though a platform calling for an end to non-White immigration -- or even to all immigration -- would be popular among the Democratic Party's White voters, it might be much less popular among the large number of non-White Democratic voters. But Republican voters, who are overwhelmingly White, certainly would favor a halt to non-White immigration. Why then is George Bush at least as strongly in favor of open borders as Bill Clinton was? Why does he resist enforcing the immigration laws we already have as strongly as any Democrat, when that's certainly not what the majority of the people who voted for him want?

It's an interesting question, and its examination helps us to understand better the way our system of government works in America. There's a lot of baloney in the air about "the will of the people" and similar foolishness. Most people have a foggy sort of notion that the country is governed by "the people" through their elected representatives -- and in a sense I suppose that's true, except that "the people" are not the citizens enfranchised by the Constitution, and it would be more accurate to describe the politicians through whom they govern as "bought" representatives. What the people who actually govern have learned is that the voters, who only imagine that they are the ones who govern, are very easily manipulated.

When election time rolls around, if the question of immigration is a key issue -- if one of the candidates pledges to keep America's borders open and to welcome with open arms everyone who comes across those borders, legally or illegally, and the other candidate pledges to use the U.S. Army to seal the borders and completely stop the flow of illegal aliens -- so that the voters really have a choice, then we might correctly say that the voters govern. But of course, the voters are not given such a choice. The bought politicians who are candidates do not offer the voters a choice on the issues that are really important. Instead they offer various schemes for reducing the cost of prescription drugs for senior citizens or for handing out school vouchers or for implementing some other government welfare program.

They distract the voters with unimportant issues. And most of the voters are very easily distracted. For months before a major election the voters are saturated with trivia from their television screens. Unimportant issues are held up as important, and opinion polls on these issues are presented every day. How many people favor school vouchers, and how many are against? How many people favor changing the limits on the size of campaign contributions? Should violent video games for children be restricted? But never the question: Should the government seal the borders and round up and deport illegal aliens?

It's interesting that no candidate will take such a position, even though it would be a very popular one and would win him many votes. It suggests that there are forces at work other than "the will of the people."

In some states so-called "popular initiatives" are part of the election process. If an organized group of voters can gather enough signatures they can put certain issues on the ballot regardless of the politicians. They may even put a Politically Incorrect proposition on the ballot, if the public feels strongly enough about it to overcome the television propaganda against it.

That has happened. In California, in 1994, White citizens concerned about the swamping of their state by illegal aliens from Mexico, put a very mild popular initiative on the ballot -- Proposition 187 -- which would restrict certain government-provided benefits to illegal aliens. Despite a flood of television propaganda describing the initiative as "racist" and despite violent and threatening demonstrations against it by Mexicans already in California, the initiative was approved by the voters. Then a Jewish Federal judge stepped in and nullified the will of the voters by declaring the initiative un-Constitutional and unenforceable. The White voters of California were too late with too little resistance, and the Brown tidal wave that they had tried far too feebly to stop swept over them and submerged them anyway just a few years later.

In most parts of the country, White citizens aren't even given an opportunity to try to stop the alien takeover and destruction of their society. Immigration, of course, isn't the only really important issue on which most voters aren't given a choice. It's just one I chose because most White voters agree on it, and the fact that they aren't permitted to vote on it provides an especially strong bit of evidence that the notion that the country is governed by the will of its voters is not valid.

Other really important issues never are even formulated clearly enough for the public to have an opinion on them. The question of national autonomy is a good example. If the voters were asked clearly: Do you believe that the United States should maintain its autonomy, that it should preserve its separate existence as a nation, that it should safeguard all of those resources which enable it to act independently in its national interest? -- if the voters were asked that question, I have no doubt that the majority would respond affirmatively. But of course, the voters aren't asked that question. The candidates don't ask it, and neither do the controlled media. The trivial issues presented to the people to keep them from thinking about the issues of autonomy and sovereignty are things such as: Isn't it nice that the government's free-trade policies have made it possible for us buy plastic hair curlers made in China for so much less than they used to cost us?

The fact that so-called "free trade" has driven into bankruptcy American industries essential to our national autonomy and is continuing to damage other vital industries is never discussed by the candidates or by the media. Mr. Bush pursues free trade as enthusiastically as Mr. Clinton did.

We understand, of course, that there are people in America who believe that national autonomy and national sovereignty are bad things -- at least, bad for Americans -- and who want to do away with them. They want White Americans to be dependent on Black and Brown and Yellow people in other parts of the world. They want America's wealth to be redistributed to the poorer nations of the world. They want American citizens to be subject to international tribunals. They want our national defense to be in the hands of international military forces. They don't want us to have the ability to act independently: militarily, economically, or in any other way.

They are the globalists. They constitute only a small minority of the White population of America. They never could have their way -- they never could impose their policies on the rest of us -- if they appealed to "the will of the people." But they don't need "the will of the people" because they have the Jewish mass media on their side. Because the Jewish media are behind them, both the Democratic Party and the Republican Party favor globalist policies, and no major candidate, no Democratic or Republican politician, dares to ask the voters whether or not they really want to abolish America's borders, do away with America's autonomy, scrap America's sovereignty. And so the voters never have a choice in the matter. The insiders simply do what they want behind the scenes, and no one asks any embarrassing questions, because the controlled mass media are on their side.

One more example of a vitally important issue on which the people, the voters, are not given a choice, is the issue of Israel. American voters never are asked: Do you believe that America should support -- diplomatically, militarily, and financially -- a foreign country which approves of and engages in the police torture of prisoners during interrogations, which approves of and engages in the collective punishment of families or even whole communities when a single member of a family or a community breaks the law, and which approves of and engages in state-sponsored terrorism on an international scale? Most American voters would emphatically reject such support, but they are never given the choice.

And the reason they never are given the choice of whether to support Israel is exactly the same reason they are never given a choice on immigration or on national sovereignty. The insiders, the Rhodes scholars and the other deracinated, conscienceless elitists operating behind the scenes with the support of the Jewish media bosses, reserve the truly important choices for themselves. They let the voters occupy themselves with school vouchers and Medicare prescriptions and the pros and cons of violent video games. But we never are asked whether or not our nation should be permitted to continue its independent existence or what the nature and makeup of its population should be in the future. The globalists already know what they want, and they don't want our opinion on the matter or our interference in their pursuit of their goals.

The point of everything I'm telling you today is this: White Americans who insist on operating according to the old rules, of letting themselves be governed by the current system based on party politics and elections, are playing a loser's game. By adhering to and supporting this system they are betraying their nation and their race. The system already has been taken over by the sworn enemies of their nation and their race. To support the system, to collaborate with the system is to be a traitor to one's people. It is to betray the ideal of self-government established on this continent by our forefathers.

That, I know, is a hard conclusion for most patriots to accept. They respect the hallowed institutions of their nation. They like to do things in the accepted way, the traditional way. It goes against their grain to challenge established authority or to break the law in any way. They just aren't emotionally or psychologically equipped to combat the sort of subversion that has overtaken us. And I'm talking now about the patriots who aren't lemmings; I'm talking about the ones who are still capable of independent thought, still capable of examining the evidence and reaching their own conclusions. It's very difficult for them to accept the fact that the deadliest enemies of their nation and their people have subverted and taken over the institutions by which their people have governed themselves. But, difficult to accept or not, it has happened.

I'll go a step further: Even if there had not been a conscious, deliberate, and successful attempt to subvert our institutions and take over our government -- even if we did not have these deadly enemies in our midst determined to use our own governmental institutions to destroy us -- the old rules still would be invalid. In ancient Greece, perhaps -- in medieval Iceland, perhaps -- with the electors comprising a carefully defined subset of a population of substantially higher quality than we have in the United States today, mass democracy may have been a viable choice. In the age of television it is not.

Most of the members of every viable society are and always have been what I call lemmings. Lemmings do not make up their minds independently. They are psychologically incapable of doing that. Instead, they look around them and try to understand what other people are thinking: their peers and their authority figures. And then that's what they think. They think whatever they perceive to be accepted by those around them. They conform their own opinions and behavior to the opinions and behavior of others. That's one thing to know in a traditional society, where the norms observed and accepted by the lemmings are real norms: where the lemmings are conforming themselves to the real people around them, where they are conforming themselves to the fellow members of their own community and by so doing are giving stability and strength to the community.

In the television age it's something altogether different. In the television age the virtual community of the television screen increasingly replaces the real community, the natural community, in determining what the lemmings conform themselves to. It's what the lemmings perceive which is important, and the people who control what appears on their television screens determine to an increasing degree what the lemmings perceive. This fact of life nullifies the validity of the democratic idea even when there is no evil intent. In other words, even if the masters of the mass media of news and entertainment were benevolent, the power in their hands would be sufficient to change "the will of the people" to whatever the media masters wanted it to be, and the whole concept of mass democracy would be meaningless. And with Jews controlling the media, democracy is not only a fraud; it is an unmitigated disaster carrying our society, our civilization, and our race toward final oblivion.

So what is a patriot to do? Should he ignore all the evidence of an enemy takeover and continue supporting the current system? And again, I'm talking only about those patriots who do notice the evidence. Do you remember what I told you about the mayor of Cincinnati and the other White politicians there and the treacherous way they behaved after the recent Black riot in Cincinnati? Earlier this week -- on Monday -- the first "hate crime" indictment stemming from that riot was filed. Who do you think was indicted? Do you think maybe it was one of the Black rioters: perhaps one of those who pulled a White woman from her car and beat her to a pulp? If that's what you think, you are dead wrong. The first and so far the only person to be indicted for a "hate crime" during the riot is a White man who fought back against the Blacks: a White man who was angered by what he saw the Blacks doing and decided not to just stand there and watch them destroy his city. He is 20-year-old Craig Carr. He picked up a brick, threw it at a Black, and expressed his feelings about Blacks generally. And the local White politicians and bureaucrats saw their opportunity to deflect charges of "racial profiling" against themselves based on the fact that nearly all of the people who had been arrested during the riot are Black. They would file the most serious charges against a White man. That should please the media bosses!

Should an observant patriot simply ignore that sort of behavior and continue supporting the system? Should a patriot continue to respect the old rules simply because the system is continuing to follow them: at least, in outward form?

That's what the White politicians and the White bureaucrats are doing: the White mayors and prosecutors and judges, and not just in Cincinnati, but everywhere. They are ignoring the evidence and continuing to follow the old rules because they know which side their bread is buttered on, and that's all that matters to them. Along with the system, they have become corrupt. Black rioters and illegal aliens and the Jews controlling the media are not their enemies. To them the White man who fights back is the enemy. To them the observant patriot who chooses to be a real patriot is the enemy. To them I am the enemy -- and of that I am proud.

I know that they would like to lock me up and silence me. And believe me, there is nothing better that I would like to do to them than make them dance on air with their hands tied behind their backs: all of them.

So again, what is a patriot to do? How is he to reconcile his instinctive respect for the old forms and institutions with the present reality? What is the solution?

Well, I'll tell you. I'll tell all of you patriots trying to make a choice: White revolution is the only solution.

Feces, Fetuses, Etc.

Let me begin by responding to a few listeners who had trouble believing the bizarre things I reported three weeks ago, when I wanted to illustrate the fact that there are profound psychological differences separating the various human races, and these differences have evolutionary origins: which is to say that they are inborn, genetically determined differences that were established over a long period of time during the evolution of the various races in various parts of the world, where there were differing evolutionary environments.

In particular, I illustrated the psychological differences between the Chinese and Europeans, and between Jews and Aryans. In the case of the Jews I used the often-remarked Jewish tendency toward scatological humor, which is a much greater tendency than appears in Aryans. I cited as an example of this tendency a new MTV program, Dude, This Sucks. I mentioned that in the filming of a recent episode of this program two men -- the "Shower Rangers" -- who previously had been dosed with a powerful laxative, came onto the stage dressed as Boy Scouts. On cue they turned their backs to the audience, dropped their trousers, bent over, and sprayed a group of unsuspecting teenaged girls on the stage with feces.

The Jews who scripted the Shower Rangers' act apparently thought this feces shower was hilariously funny. This is the sort of thing that Jews usually consider funny. I pointed out that the Jew ultimately responsible for the Shower Rangers is the owner of MTV, billionaire media mogul Sumner Redstone, who also owns CBS and many other mass media. He is one of the most influential Jews in the world, a Jew who, whenever he visits the White House, always gets a big hug from whichever shabbos goy is President at the moment. I also could have blamed the feces-spraying incident on MTV's homosexual Jewish program manager, Brian Graden, who, of course, takes his orders from Redstone.

Some listeners just couldn't believe that an ultra-rich, ultra-influential Jew such as Redstone could be involved in such a low-class act as the Shower Rangers: Howard Stern, maybe, but not Sumner Redstone. One thing I didn't point out in my broadcast three weeks ago is that the Jew Howard Stern also works for Sumner Redstone. Redstone undoubtedly is a very sophisticated and very clever Jew, but the Shower Rangers is indeed the sort of filth he regularly produces for the consumption of Aryan teenagers, whether their parents are paying attention or not. It is indeed the sort of filth he and his fellow Jews who control our media, our advertising, and the conditioning of our children think is very funny. Talk to a swimming pool maintenance man in Hollywood or someone who is responsible for security at one of the New York condos where these rich Jews live and play. You'll get an earful.

Whether Sumner Redstone and Brian Graden believed that the Shower Rangers would be a bold new step toward conditioning Aryan teenagers to laugh at the same things Jews laugh at or whether they naively believed that Aryans and Jews already laugh at the same things, there can be no real dispute about the fact that the Shower Rangers were part of an MTV program and that they performed as I said. The performance I described is the subject of a lawsuit filed against MTV in Los Angeles Superior Court at the beginning of last month by two of the girls who were sprayed.

The people who told me that Sumner Redstone never would condone something like the Shower Rangers, that he is too smart and sophisticated for that, were confirmed in their belief by the fact that they couldn't find any news of the spraying incident in Los Angeles newspapers. Are you surprised that the media bosses cover for each other? But actually, Jews do talk about these things with one another. If it's too much trouble for you to get a copy of the court documents, then scan some of the Hollywood "insider" newsletters, which are chock full of news reports on things such as which media mogul's son was so drunk at his bar mitzvah last Saturday that he barfed all over the Torah scroll, or which queer ad-agency executive has just been diagnosed as having AIDS, or who is rumored to have made an out-of-court settlement with a shikse starlet to avoid a paternity suit. Several of the Hollywood newsletters carried all the details of the Shower Ranger episode last month. Believe me; it happened. And believe me, it is typical of the people who control Hollywood and the television entertainment industry and the conditioning of America's children -- and, incidentally, all three branches of our government.

When I spoke about the psychological differences between Chinese and Europeans, I focused on the eating habits of the Chinese. Specifically, I mentioned their habit of eating aborted human fetuses and also domestic dogs and cats and body parts from various wild animals, including those belonging to endangered species, and I gave tiger penis and rhinoceros horn as examples.

I also remarked that what the Chinese do to cats and dogs is much worse than merely eating them. Some listeners questioned this statement. "What could the Chinese do to cats and dogs that would be worse than eating them?" I was asked. What's worse is the way the cats and dogs are treated before and during being killed for eating -- and also before and during being skinned for their fur. And I should warn you that I'm a bit of an extremist on the subject of cruelty to animals. I abhor cruelty, whether the perpetrator is Chinese or European. I abhor the practices of White men who trap fur-bearing animals. I am horrified especially by the killing of big cats to make fur coats or jackets for rich women, but I am extremely hostile even to the breeding of mink and other small mammals just so that they can be skinned to help the female lemmings who can afford it be more fashionable. The fact that there are White people who are cruel, callous, and indifferent to the suffering of animals and who are unmoved by the killing of such beautiful and magnificent creatures as the big cats, however, doesn't mean that we are just as bad as the Chinese in this regard. There are substantial differences. In general, there seems to be no feeling at all among the Chinese and other Asians for the feelings of animals. There seems to be no understanding, no comprehension, of the White man's sympathy for animals. To the Chinese an animal is simply an object, which may or may not have any economic value. If it does have economic value, then it should be used in any way that is profitable.

In addition to this general inability to sympathize with animals, the Chinese do have their peculiar culinary habits and their peculiar notions about diet. The consequence is that cats and dogs intended to be eaten or skinned are treated in an almost unbelievably inhumane manner. The cats generally are strangled or drowned before being skinned, so as not to damage the fur. Some dogs, who do not have a cat's ability to inflict damage on their tormentors with their claws, are actually skinned alive. And there is the Chinese gourmet's peculiar notion that the more painful a death the animal suffers, the more tender and tasty is the meat. So, to please the customer, a dog or cat will be selected from a cage in a restaurant, then taken into the kitchen to have all its bones broken before it is slaughtered. The customer, seated at his table, can enjoy the screams of agony coming from the kitchen as he awaits his meal.

There's a great deal of very unpleasant information on this sort of thing available at the Web site of the Humane Society of the United States. That's hsus.org. The Humane Society even has sent undercover investigators with video cameras into China to record some of the horrible things that are done to cats and dogs there.

The subject on which I received the most questions was my report on the eating of human fetuses by Chinese, who believe the practice is healthy, just as they regard powdered rhinoceros horn as an aphrodisiac and tiger penis as a potency enhancer. Some people who wrote to me just didn't believe that the Chinese could be so different from Europeans -- or at least, they didn't want to believe it. Some of them accused me of being untruthful. Others simply requested proof. Actually, there's a great deal of evidence available on the subject, but the language difference, along with the characteristic Chinese suspicion of outsiders, does pose some difficulties in gathering it. For this reason I'll restrict my evidence today to an English-language Chinese source, the Hong Kong newspaper Eastern Express. All the quotes which follow are from a lengthy article which appeared in the April 12, 1995, issue of the Eastern Express. A reporter visited several hospitals in mainland China seeking aborted fetuses for eating and found that they were readily available. I quote from the Eastern Express:

Reports that dead embryos were being used as dietary supplements started to spread early last year with reports that some doctors in Shenzhen hospitals were eating dead fetuses after carrying out abortions. The doctors allegedly defended their actions by saying the embryos were good for their skin and general health.

A trend was set, and soon reports circulated that doctors in the city were promoting fetuses as a human tonic. Hospital cleaning women were seen fighting each other to take the treasured human remains home. Last month reporters from East Week -- a sister publication of Eastern Express -- went to Shenzhen to see if the rumors could be substantiated. On March 7 a reporter entered the state-run Shenzhen Heath Center for Women and Children feigning illness and asked a female doctor for a fetus. The doctor said the department was out of stock but to come again.

The next day the reporter returned at lunch time. The doctor eventually emerged from the operating theatre holding a fist-size glass bottle stuffed with thumb-size fetuses. She said, "There are 10 fetuses here, all aborted this morning. You can take them. We are a state hospital and don't charge anything."...

The reporter learned that the going rate for a fetus was $10, but when the merchandise was in short supply the price could go up to $20. But these prices are pin money compared to those set by private clinics, which are said to make a fortune selling fetuses. One chap on Bong Men Lao Street charges $300 for one fetus. The person in charge of the clinic is a man in his 60s. When he saw the ailing reporter he offered to take an order for fetuses that had reached full term and that, it is claimed, have the best healing properties. When a female doctor named Yang ... of Sin Hua clinic was asked whether fetuses were edible, she said emphatically, "Of course, they are. They are even better than placentas. They can make your skin smoother, your body stronger, and are good for kidneys. When I was in an army hospital in Jiangti province I often brought fetuses home."...

A Mr. Cheng from Hong Kong claims he has been eating fetus soup for more than six months. To begin, the man, in his 40s, would make the trip to Shenzhen frequently for business and was introduced to fetuses by friends. He says he met a number of professors and doctors in government hospitals who helped him buy the fetuses. "At first I felt uncomfortable, but doctors said the substances in fetuses could help cure my asthma. I started taking them, and gradually the asthma disappeared," Cheng said....

Zou Qin, 32, a woman from Hubei with the fine skin of someone several years younger, attributes her well preserved looks to a diet of fetuses. As a doctor at the Lun Hu Clinic, Zou has carried out abortions on several hundred patients. She believes fetuses are highly nutritious and claims to have eaten more than 100 in the past six months. She pulls out a fetus specimen before a reporter and explains the selection criteria. "People normally prefer fetuses of young women, and even better, the first baby and a male. They are wasted if we don't eat them. The women who receive abortions here don't want the fetuses. Also the fetuses are already dead when we eat them. We don't carry out abortions just to eat the fetuses...."

Dr. Warren Lee, president of the Hong Kong Nutrition Association, is aware of the unsavory rumors. "Eating fetuses is a kind of traditional Chinese medicine and is deeply founded in Chinese folklore....,' he says."

Well, there is much more in the April 12, 1995, article from the Eastern Express, an English-language newspaper published in Hong Kong. If that's not enough for you, try digging into Chinese folklore for yourself. As the man said, eating fetuses has deep roots in Chinese tradition.

While I'm on the subject of racial differences, let me mention something I didn't talk about three weeks ago. I spoke only about the differences between Europeans and Chinese and between Aryans and Jews. I didn't mention White-Black differences. They really are in a category by themselves. I am sure that many people really believe that we're not very different from the Chinese. And there also are many people who believe that the only difference between Aryans and Jews is that Jews go to church on Saturday instead of Sunday and are a little better at making money than we are. Those are the people who just couldn't believe what I told them about eating fetuses and about the connection between Sumner Redstone and the Shower Rangers. But no one really needs to be persuaded that there are major differences between Whites and Blacks.

Everyone understands that the Blacks are quite different from us: even the whiny college girls who wring their hands and ask me, "Oh, why can't you understand that we're really all the same, that there is only one human race?" Despite their desperate need to be Politically Correct, they understand that the Blacks are as different from us as night from day. The egalitarians prove by their own behavior that they really don't believe in equality.

I'll give you a current example of that. I'm sure that you remember our recent talks about the race riot in Cincinnati last month. Last week I pointed out that although it was only Blacks who were rioting, and that the rioters targeted Whites, pulling White men and women from their cars and beating them severely, the only person charged with a "hate crime" in Cincinnati in connection with the riot was a White man, 20-year-old Craig Carr, who became enraged by the rioters and threw a brick at a Black. The Blacks rioted and attacked White men and women solely because they were White, but no Black was charged with a "hate crime" on that account. A White man fights back, and he is charged with a "hate crime." This was a clear case of Blacks and Whites being held to quite different standards of behavior.

An even more recent case was that of a Black professor at Northern Kentucky University. And I should tell you right at the start that when any Black is held up as a "professor" at a White university, my upper lip develops an involuntary curl. I instinctively assume that what I am confronted with is not a scholar who is at the academy on his merits, but rather a beneficiary of Political Correctness who is better suited to picking cotton than to teaching White students anything. That certainly seems to be the case with Professor Clinton Hewan, a coal-black native of Jamaica who is a tenured associate professor of political science at Northern Kentucky University. The university is just across the Ohio-Kentucky state line from Cincinnati, and so the riot was a matter of considerable interest on the campus of the mostly White university.

The riot, if you remember, was sparked by Blacks angry over a fatal encounter between a Black street thug with a long arrest record and 14 outstanding arrest warrants, 19-year-old Timothy Thomas, and a White policeman who was attempting to arrest him. The Black was ignoring orders to stop and raise his hands, and when the White policemen saw him reach for his waistband, he shot and killed the Black. Professor Clinton Hewan, of course, cheered the Black rioters. He already was well known on the campus as an agitator for Black causes and an outspoken critic of so-called "White racism," a handy catch-all label for anything Blacks find troublesome. In 1998, for example, when the university failed to give him tenure, he hired a lawyer and loudly and repeatedly announced that tenure was being denied to him because of the efforts of "White racists" on the faculty. The university predictably caved in and granted tenure to Clinton Hewan.

After the riot Professor Hewan called for the assassination of the White policeman who had shot the Black thug, Timothy Thomas. He told the campus newspaper, the Northerner, that Thomas's family should "quietly stalk that S.O.B. and take him out.... The family should go out and get that policeman."

Now, can you imagine the reaction on the Northern Kentucky University campus and in the local media if a White professor had reacted to the riot by telling the campus newspaper that the police should have put it down the same way the Israelis customarily put down demonstrations by Palestinians: namely, by identifying the Black leaders in the crowd and having snipers "take them out." Or suppose that a White professor had told the newspaper that when the Black agitator, Jesse Jackson, came to Cincinnati to take advantage of the publicity, White vigilantes should stalk him and "take him out." Tenure or no tenure, that White professor would be out of a job in a hurry. But what do you think happened to Professor Hewan?

Nothing, of course. The White president of the university, Dr. James Votruba, announced that he found Professor Hewan's call for the assassination of a White policeman "troubling," and that he intended to "look further into the matter." Well, not too much further. After all, three years ago Dr. Votruba had given the university's "Strongest Influence Award" to Professor Hewan.

My point is that liberals, soccer moms, yuppies, newspaper reporters, and university administrators, all of whom will swear on a stack of Bibles that they absolutely and positively believe that Blacks and Whites have the same intelligence, the same ability to solve problems and to innovate, the same degree of self-discipline, the same morality, and the same way of looking at the world, don't believe a word of it, and the proof of that is in the sort of preferential treatment they always give to someone such as Professor Hewan. They don't hold a Black to the same standards to which they hold a White man, because they know -- even though they won't admit it -- that the Black needs an advantage in order to maintain the illusion of equality. They know that the Black doesn't have the same intelligence, the same degree of self-discipline, or the same way of looking at the world that a White man does, and so they always try to compensate in some way for that shortcoming in order to maintain the illusion of equality, of sameness, but in fact what they do is make the differences even more manifest to the perceptive observer.

The Morality of Survival

The biggest thing in the news now is the imminent killing of the young soldier Timothy McVeigh by the Bush government. Even though I've never met or corresponded with Timothy, I've had dozens of reporters calling me for interviews in connection with the killing, because he read one of my novels, The Turner Diaries. The reporters seem almost gleeful. One of those awful, heterosexual White male gun nuts who doesn't follow the party line is to be killed, and isn't it wonderful! The columnists and editorialists like to use words such as "evil" and "monster" in their references to McVeigh. One can imagine them all dancing the hora with their Jewish bosses as the hour of the killing approaches and then cheering in unison as the poison flows into his veins.

Why this enormous hatred for Timothy? They say it is because he killed 168 people. I say it is because he refuses to say that he is sorry: he refuses to whine and make excuses and beg for his life, like they would have done. I say that it is because he did what he did for an impersonal reason, for an ideal, and ideals make them uncomfortable. I say that it is because he has acted as a man of principle should act and is willing to face the consequences for his actions, and that really goes against the grain in this age of democracy and hypocrisy and feminism and endless talk, with people never meaning what they say.

Someone like Bill Clinton, who orders the bombing of Belgrade and kills thousands of civilians in order to divert attention from his domestic problems, is forgiven immediately by the media bloodhounds because Bill Clinton is not a man of principle. Bill Clinton is not a threat to the rotten system that feeds the bloodhounds. They can understand and empathize with a mass murderer like Bill Clinton, but not with a soldier like Timothy McVeigh.

If the media people really believed that everyone who kills lots of other people is "evil" or a "monster," they should have had a field day when Ariel Sharon became the head Jew in Israel recently. Sharon is the Jew who, as Israeli defense minister, set up and supervised the massacre of some 3,000 Palestinian civilians -- mostly women, children, and old men -- in the Sabra and Shatila refugee camps in 1982. Has any journalist, the editorial writer for any major newspaper or magazine, had anything at all to say about that recently?

You know, I'm not trying to justify the killing of civilians. I'm just trying to explore the fundamental crookedness of the mass media in dealing with the subject of killing. Here's another example: the current media hullabaloo about the killing of 20 or so Vietnamese civilians in 1969 by a Navy SEAL team commanded by Lieutenant Robert Kerrey, who later was governor of Nebraska, then a U.S. Senator, and then a presidential candidate in 1992.

In 1969 a Vietnamese family had their throats cut to keep them from raising an alarm during Kerrey's raid in the Mekong Delta, and then 15 or 20 other civilians were shot. The raid had failed to achieve its purpose of assassinating a Viet Cong official, but Kerrey received a Bronze Star anyway. Now, amid a dispute about whether the Vietnamese civilians who were killed had simply been in the way during a fire fight or Kerrey had ordered them to be rounded up and shot, there is a great deal of hand-wringing and soul-searching going on. The media really have made a circus out of the affair. One could almost believe that the folks in the media are horrified by the killing of civilians. But really, they aren't.

When it serves their propaganda purposes they will act like humanitarians and make a big fuss about killing civilians. They will act as if they believe it to be a terribly reprehensible thing for which the perpetrators should be punished. They went through that act all during the Vietnam War. Their attitude was that White Americans were baby-killers wreaking havoc among little Brown people in Vietnam for no good reason. The media certainly sympathized with the demonstrators who carried Viet Cong flags in Washington during the time that the Viet Cong were killing American servicemen in Vietnam at the rate of 100 a day.

And now they are making a big fuss about whether Kerrey and his fellow SEALs deliberately killed those 20 or so Vietnamese civilians 32 years ago or not, just as they are implying that Timothy McVeigh also is a monster who deliberately murdered the children in the day-care center in the Oklahoma City Federal Building. But, as I already said, no one in the controlled media has condemned Clinton for ordering the bombing of Belgrade or for the strafing of refugee columns in Kosovo.

Speaking of strafing, at the end of the Second World War U.S. fighter pilots considered it a great sport to shoot civilians along the roads and highways of Germany. Whether it was a refugee column fleeing the invading Red Army or simply a German farm wife and her children walking along a country road, American pilots would shoot them. It was considered a sport. Everybody knew about it, but no one ever was prosecuted as a war criminal because of it. The media never expressed disapproval -- and in fact, it was because the media tacitly approved of such atrocities and implicitly encouraged them with their anti-German hate propaganda that pilots felt it was acceptable behavior. Quite a difference from the party line taken by the media in the Vietnam War!

Did American pilots ever do any soul-searching or hand-wringing about these casual acts of murder, the way Robert Kerrey is now about his 1969 raid on a Mekong Delta village? If so, I haven't heard about it. What about the far more murderous carpet-bombing of German cities during the war? These bombing raids were designed to kill as many German civilians as possible. Since the war I have spoken with two or three American bomber pilots who told me that they realize now that they were fighting on the wrong side during the war, and they bitterly regret having participated in the mass murder of Germans for the benefit of the Jews.

I am sure that most American bomber pilots never have felt a twinge of guilt for what they did during the war, however, because most of them were lemmings. Lemmings do not have an internal compass to tell them what is right and wrong. As long as the media tell them that they did the right thing in bombing German cities, they feel no guilt. It is the ambiguous attitude of the media toward the Vietnam War that causes all of the anguish Robert Kerrey feels about his actions in 1969.

There are many people who would excuse both the American pilots who carpet-bombed German cities and strafed German refugee columns and American soldiers such as Kerrey who killed Vietnamese civilians, simply because all of these things were acts of war, and in a war anything is permitted. Murdered civilians are simply "collateral damage." Certainly most of the controlled mass media would go along with that view so far as the murder of German civilians is concerned, and as I said, their view of the Vietnam War is at least ambiguous.

What about Timothy McVeigh? No one can argue seriously that he bombed the Federal building in Oklahoma City because he wanted to kill or terrorize civilians. Neither terrorism nor killing civilians was his goal. He bombed the Federal building to punish the Federal government for its murderous behavior in burning the Branch Davidian church in Waco, Texas, two years earlier. He wanted to send the government a message that its behavior would not be tolerated. And part of that message would be the killing of the government's secret police agents -- FBI and ATF agents -- who worked in the building. The fact that his bomb would kill not only secret police agents but also civilians, including the 19 children in the day-care center, was regrettable but unavoidable: collateral damage. Timothy was at war against the government, and in a war civilians are killed even when they are not deliberate targets, as they were in America's war against Germany. But of course, none of America's controlled media accept that view of the matter. Timothy is "evil"; Timothy is a "monster." The American pilots who strafed German refugee columns were just soldiers doing their job.

Is this one-sided view of things based on naivete? It's certainly not based on patriotism. The media proved during the Vietnam War that they have no pro-American bias based on patriotism. And it's not based on naivete either. It's based on a conscious and deliberate intent to deceive.

I'll give you an example. Four years ago, in my broadcast of May 24, 1997, I told you about a terrible atrocity which occurred in Italy toward the end of the Second World War. In May 1944 Allied forces bombed and shelled the sixth-century abbey of Monte Cassino to rubble, forcing the German defenders there to withdraw. Among the Allied troops was a division of Moroccan soldiers. Even then the Allies wanted to have "diversity" among their forces in order to show the world that they believed in racial equality.

Well, the Moroccans weren't much as fighters, but they were pretty good at cutting the throats of prisoners after the fighting was over. And they also excelled at raping civilians -- and prisoners too, occasionally, buggery being an established tradition among them. The night after the Germans had withdrawn, the Moroccans -- 12,000 of them -- left their camp and swarmed over the mountain villages around Monte Cassino. They raped every village woman and girl they could get their hands on, an estimated 3,000 women, ranging in age from 11 years to 86 years old. They murdered 800 village men who tried to protect their women. They abused some of the women so badly that more than 100 of them died. They selected the prettiest girls for gang-raping, with long lines of dark-skinned Moroccans waiting their turn in front of each one, while other Moroccans held the victims down. And they raped some of the young men as well.

Now, is this the sort of thing that our controlled media regard as "collateral damage," which must be accepted as inevitable in time of war? No, the media bosses understood that not even the brainwashed American public would be happy with that explanation, so they simply suppressed the news, just as they suppressed the news of the massacre of Whites by Blacks in Wichita, Kansas, last December. Look in the standard chronologies of the Second World War, and you will find no mention of the rape of the women of Monte Cassino. Even the accounts prepared by the U.S. War Department -- accounts which detail the battle for Monte Cassino -- have excised any reference to what the Moroccan soldiers did to the villagers there after the battle. Now, that's not naivete; that's crookedness. That's deliberate intent to deceive.

Here's another example, which I've also talked about in earlier broadcasts: that's the mass murder of the Polish military, professional, and intellectual elite by the Soviet secret police in April 1940: some 25,000 Polish leaders altogether, the cream of the Polish nation. The Soviet secret police had rounded up the Polish writers and professors and military officers immediately after the Soviet invasion of Poland in September 1939. All of these Polish leaders, seen by the communists as a potential threat to the Soviet rule of Poland, were transported to Russia and herded into concentration camps. Then a few months later they were taken to execution pits, methodically murdered, and covered up in mass graves.

Almost immediately rumors of this enormous atrocity reached the West, when the prisoners no longer answered mail from their relatives. The controlled media in the West suppressed the rumors. The relatives of the media bosses were riding high as communist commissars in the Soviet Union, and the Poles were the traditional enemies of the Jews. The media bosses didn't care what happened to the Polish leaders, and they didn't want to say anything bad about their brethren in the Soviet Union.

Then, in June 1941, the German Army invaded Russia, determined to stamp out communism and end the Soviet-Jewish threat to Europe. Two years later, in 1943, after pushing deep into Russia, the Germans stumbled across a series of mass graves near the Russian village of Katyn. They found the corpses of more than 4,000 of the 25,000 Polish leaders who had been arrested by the Soviet secret police in 1939 and had not been heard from since April 1940. The Germans called in the International Red Cross and forensic experts from several neutral nations and also brought in British, French, and Polish officers from German POW camps to view the evidence. And that evidence was overwhelming. The communists had deliberately murdered the leadership stratum of the Polish nation in order to make the Poles easier to rule. The observers reported back to their own countries what they had seen -- and the media not only suppressed the reports but blamed the genocide on the Germans instead of on the communists and Jews.

So what's the point of all this? Do I expect the controlled mass media to change their ways? Am I advocating that they treat all atrocities in an evenhanded way? Do I expect them to regard Timothy McVeigh as a prisoner of war rather than as a monster and a terrorist?

No, of course not. The people who control the mass media are behaving in a perfectly sensible way. Evenhandedness is a ridiculous concept to them. In their view, an atrocity is something your enemies do. Whatever the people on your side do is justifiable. During the Second World War the Germans were their enemies, and the Americans were on their side, and so whatever the Americans did to the Germans was justifiable or, at worst, "collateral damage." Whenever the Germans played rough, however, it was an atrocity, a war crime.

The media bosses realized, of course, that many Americans would not accept such a simplistic view, and so they suppressed news of atrocities committed by their allies -- by the Moroccans and by the Red Army, for example -- and they exaggerated any rough tactics by the Germans, even inventing atrocities where none had been committed.

During the Vietnam War, a generation after they had beaten the Germans, the media bosses had as their primary motive the final destruction of the old America, the Gentile America, with its traditions and morals and exclusiveness. They needed to destroy America's self-confidence, confuse its sense of identity, break down its remaining resistance to domination by the media masters. So they treated the Vietnam War with ambiguity. The Americans no longer were the "good guys," as they had been portrayed during the Second World War. Any killing of Vietnamese civilians by Americans was not treated as "collateral damage," but as a war crime.

And now, with the government totally under their control, anyone who is against the government is their enemy. So far as the media bosses are concerned, the government can burn as many Branch Davidian churches as it wants. That's just "collateral damage" in the government's campaign to keep the population intimidated. And anyone who strikes back at the government is a "monster," a "terrorist."

As I said, all of that is perfectly sensible. They know who they are and where their interests lie. They understand the stakes in this struggle for mastery of the planet. They understand that we are engaged in a total war, and they are determined to win. They are rational people. They do whatever is advantageous for them.

I believe that it's about time for us to understand where our interests lie. We need not only to understand the facts -- to understand who did what to whom and why -- but we also need to get rid of the foolish attitude that all atrocities are equally deplorable. When we regain control of our mass media, we should not have to suppress any news or ignore any facts. If our people kill some of our enemies, we should be able to discuss it frankly. We may or may not approve of it, depending upon whether it serves the interests of our people or is an unnecessarily bloodthirsty act of indiscipline. But we should not treat it as morally equivalent to our enemies killing us.

The doctrine of moral equivalence is suicidal folly promoted by our enemies. Every day I encounter White people infected with this doctrine. "Why are you opposed to Mexicans coming into our country? We came from Europe and took their land away from them, and now they're taking it back. What's wrong with that?"

Well, there's not much to be done with idiots who can't figure out what's wrong with that. But the rest of us need to get our thinking straightened out. We need to understand that we are at war, and that we must win the war. We must never again permit ourselves to be tricked into committing atrocities against ourselves, as we did during the Second World War. We must never again permit ourselves to be manipulated into feeling guilty for what we do against our enemies, as the media have manipulated those who, like Robert Kerrey, killed Vietnamese.

And, incidentally, we should understand that however tactically wrong the bombing of the Federal building in Oklahoma City may have been, and however regrettable the killing of innocent civilians in that bombing, Timothy McVeigh is no monster. He is a soldier, and what he did was based on principle. He justified his actions on the same basis that soldiers always do: he was at war against a government that is at war against his people.

I know that most Americans prefer not to think about that. Most Americans don't want to choose sides in this war. Most just want to pretend that there is no war and get on with their lives, and it's easier to follow the lead of the media and regard Timothy McVeigh as a monster than as a soldier. But there is a war, and in this war the rule is: Whatever is good for our people is good, and whatever harms our people is evil. That is the morality of survival.

It is too bad about the innocent civilians who died in Oklahoma City. It is too bad about the Polish intellectuals and officers who were murdered by the Soviet secret police. It is too bad about the German civilians who were carpet-bombed by American fliers. It is too bad about the many, many more innocent civilians who will die in the years ahead. It all could have been avoided if we had gotten our thinking straightened out earlier.

Sharing the Affliction

The degeneracy and the general nuttiness that increasingly afflict American society afflict everyone in that society, even those who are deliberately promoting the degeneracy. Like the sailor who drills holes in the bottom of the ship to get even with his crewmates, against whom he has a grievance, and then drowns along with the rest of the crew when the ship goes down, the Jews in America often are obliged to suffer along with their intended victims.

Feminism provides a good example of that. Jews played a hugely disproportionate role in inflicting that malady on American society. Not only was nearly every significant feminist writer and publicist of the past half century a Jewess, but the Jewish media bosses enthusiastically endorsed it all; they made feminism one of the cornerstones of Political Correctness. And yet I suspect that both Jewish men and women suffer approximately as much from this disease they unleashed on us as we do. I suspect that there are as many frustrated and embittered Jewesses per capita as there are frustrated and embittered Gentile women who have tried unsuccessfully to be what the feminists told them they should be but that Nature did not intend them to be. And I suspect that at least the same percentage of Jewish males have been burned by contact with feminists as Gentile males have.

Homosexuality is another example. Homosexuality is as abhorred in Jewish tradition as it is in Aryan tradition, despite the prevalence of homosexual practices among the Semitic tribes from which the Jews sprang. The prescribed punishment for homosexuals in the Jewish Bible is stoning to death. And our ancestors in northern Europe used to drown them. But of course it is above all the Jewish arbiters of Political Correctness who have taught young Americans that homosexuality is "normal" and that we must never speak disparagingly of homosexuals or homosexual behavior. And the Jews, more than anyone else, are the ones who have changed the whole environment in which young Americans grow up in a way that encourages sexually ambivalent youngsters to become even more confused and get on the wrong track. And yet in spreading this sickness among our people they themselves have become infected by it. In fact, homosexuality seems to be substantially more common among Jewish males in America today than among our own men -- which is the only favorable result that I can see of the campaign to make homosexuals a favored class.

An amusing example of the way in which the Jews have bitten themselves inadvertently in their exertions to take a bite out of us came to my attention just a few days ago. There's a Jewish school on the Upper West Side of Manhattan, the Rodeph Sholom Day School. It's affiliated with a Reform synagogue. It accepts non-Jewish students as well as Jews, and some rich, trendy, Gentile yuppies send their kids there. The tuition is $15,000 a year for pre-kindergarten kiddies and $20,000 for sixth graders. Two weeks ago, just a week before Mother's Day, the students at Rodeph Sholom were sent home with notes informing their parents that in the interests of Political Correctness there no longer would be any observances of Mother's Day or Father's Day at the school. Previously the younger children had designed Mother's Day and Father's Day cards in class, and there had been other school programs of activities in connection with these two holidays.

The note sent home with the students announcing the end of these programs said, among other things:

Families in our society are now diverse and varied. We are a school with many different family makeups, and we need to recognize the emotional well-being of all the children in our school.

The note went on to say that the recognition of holidays such as Mother's Day and Father's Day:

may not be a positive experience for all children.

Well, many parents complained, and what emerged more clearly was that the dropping of Mother's Day and Father's Day was intended to avoid making children living in homosexual households -- that is, children with "two mommies" or "two daddies" feel left out. Actually, a more important reason for the move was to avoid offending the homosexuals who were paying the very substantial tuition for these unfortunate children. One of these homosexuals, who with his male partner had an adopted son at the school, came forward and boasted that he had persuaded the school to drop its Mother's Day observance.

You know, I referred to this bit of nuttiness at Rodeph Sholom Day School as "amusing" because it is an example of the Jews' own chickens coming home to roost. What they are doing to destroy our society is deliberate. It's calculated. It's the sort of thing they've done in every Gentile society through the ages. Their aim is to break down the structure of our society, make our people abandon our values and our morals and forget our traditions, eventually forget who we are. Their aim is to get White kids to wear backward baseball caps and baggy shorts and listen to rap music and worship Black rappers and basketball players. Their aim is to get teenaged White girls to have Black boyfriends. That is the softening-up process they use to make it easier for them to take over our society and exploit our people. Promoting the notion that homosexuality is "normal" and that every sort of freak must have his feelings protected -- that everyone else must be prevented from doing or saying anything that may offend a freak or make him feel like a freak -- is part of the process.

The core idea the Jews are insinuating into the minds of our people is that no sexual orientation, no race, no set of moral values, no type of family structure, no standard of beauty, no cultural tradition -- that is, no art, no music, no literature -- is better than any other. They're all equivalent. A "family" consisting of two adult homosexuals and an adopted child is just as "normal," just as deserving of public acceptance and respect -- and insurance benefits -- as a family consisting of a White man and a White woman and their natural children. Under the skin Blacks and Whites are the same. A painting by Rembrandt or Vermeer has no more inherent artistic value than the daubings of a Chagall or a Rothko.

That's the message -- and its corollary, of course, is that we all should let our guard down against the Jews. We should not be suspicious of them. We shouldn't regard them as different or dangerous and try to keep them out. We shouldn't try to stop them from taking over. They may seem a little different, but that's only superficial. Really, we're all equivalent. No group is better than any other group.

Indoctrinating a host population with that poisonous message has been the Jews' key to taking over, sucking dry, and destroying society after society. Let me elaborate on that statement about the Jews' modus operandi. It is also their modus vivendi. It seems almost to be genetically programmed survival behavior. Destruction is not their primary goal, but rather sucking. But the fact is that the method they use for softening up a society so that they can suck its blood is inherently destructive. When they approach any healthy, homogeneous society, in which the people have a strong sense of identity and community, the Jews are outsiders. They are different, and they are regarded with suspicion. If they try sucking any blood, they'll be slapped down hard.

So their first task is to undermine the people's sense of community and identity and at the same time to destroy their homogeneity, to make the society more diverse. Then the Jews can slip in unnoticed and take over. But by that time the society no longer is healthy; it has been poisoned. The people no longer have the will to resist.

The Jews are unique. Their modus operandi is unique. That's one of the reasons they have been so successful at breaking into other people's societies. Their hosts -- their victims -- aren't prepared to counter them. We've experienced nothing quite like the Jews during our evolution. They take us by surprise every time. But even a people as different from us as the Jews have some characteristics in common with us. Most human societies have some characteristics in common. Certain characteristics are essential for group survival in all societies. A sense of group identity and exclusiveness, for example. The Jews have it to an extraordinary degree, and we used to have it before the Jews went to work on us. Another common survival characteristic is a strong family structure.

When the Jews set out to undermine these characteristics in us, they inevitably become affected to some extent by their own poison. That's what happened to the Rodeph Sholom Day School, for example. They think it's fine to promote families with two mommies or two daddies among us, but they are not so happy when that sort of pathology also takes hold among them.

You may be surprised to hear this, but sometimes I receive letters of protest from Jewish listeners. They tell me, "Hey, we're not all like the Jews you talk about in your broadcasts. Some of us are decent, hardworking family people, who are as unhappy with what's happening to America as you are. Don't blame all of us for what a few are doing. We're not all like Sumner Redstone and Gerald Levin and Michael Eisner and David Geffen and Steven Spielberg. We're not all like Madeleine Albright and Elie Wiesel and Marc Rich and Ariel Sharon."

Well, I can accept that. There are somewhere between six and seven million Jews in the United States: about two and a half percent of the population. One expects a lot of variety among that many Jews. There are the evil monsters -- the Sumner Redstones and the Steven Spielbergs -- working day and night to weaken and mislead and corrupt our people in order to make us easier prey for their people. And there are many Jews who pay very little attention to what the Redstones and the Spielbergs are doing. They're too busy just tending to their own affairs.

And I'm sure that some of those hardworking Jews are not happy that they're being splashed with the same filth that the Redstones and the Spielbergs are happily heaping onto their Gentile neighbors. They may be somewhat less likely to be affected than the Gentiles, just as many venomous reptiles are immune to their own venom, but still it is clear that some of the Jewish parents of children at Rodeph Sholom Day School on New York's Upper West Side are not pleased that their kiddies are being taught that it's just as good to have two daddies who bugger each other in the living room as it is to have a traditional family with a natural father and a natural mother living together.

I should tell you, however, that although I understand their feelings, I am not especially sympathetic. Sumner Redstone and Elie Wiesel and Madeleine Albright haven't done their damage just by working alone, as individuals. They have worked as members of the Jewish community, the Jewish tribe. Without the support of their tribe they could not have made such a cesspit of our society. Sumner Redstone's earliest predecessors were pushcart peddlers in New York. The pushcart peddlers formed the basis on which the next generation of pawnbrokers began accumulating money. And the pawn brokers led to bigger moneylenders and then to the big investment bankers, with the power to finance wars and revolutions. And then came the master corrupters, like MTV owner Redstone, with billions of dollars to buy television networks and newspaper chains and film studios.

And even with his billions, Redstone couldn't corrupt America's teenagers by himself. His whole media empire is staffed from top to bottom with members of his tribe. It is the unhappy parents of the Jewish kiddies at Rodeph Sholom Day School who form the manpower pool from which the Redstones draw their recruits. You can't help your fellow tribesmen make a cesspit out of the society you're living in and hope to avoid the stink entirely. And the fact is that it's not just a few billionaire Jews making our society stink. Nearly every time a case comes to light involving large-scale fraud or vice or corruption, there are Jews playing the lead roles. For a minority making up only two and a half percent of the U.S. population, their involvement in vice and corruption is really phenomenal. As a race we certainly have our own weaknesses and vices, but the Jews seem to be attracted irresistibly to our vices so that they can exploit them and at the same time exacerbate them.

There's a sensational example of this in a trial that just began this week in the U.S. District Court in Atlanta. It's the racketeering trial of Gold Club owner Steve Kaplan and some of his associates. Kaplan's rise to wealth and power in the vice industry follows the classic Jewish pattern. His father was a magazine peddler in New York's Grand Central Station. Young Steve lusted after money and status, and he cultivated his father's underworld contacts to get himself started as a nightclub operator. Eventually he was able to buy into Atlanta's Gold Club, and then in 1994 he elbowed his co-owner out.

Under Kaplan's ownership the Gold Club became the principal vice club in Atlanta. Featuring nude dancers and overpriced drinks, it became a favorite hangout for Atlanta's degenerate yuppie set. Then Kaplan began inviting Black basketball players to the Gold Club, giving them free drinks. Soon he began pressuring the White strippers he employed as entertainers to have sex with the Black basketball players he invited. The White yuppies would come to the Gold Club to socialize with Black basketball stars, such as Dennis Rodman, Patrick Ewing, and Charles Oakley, and Kaplan would provide White girls to the Blacks to keep them coming back. He made his club into a multicultural brothel: White girls for Black celebrities. He also engaged in credit-card fraud, loan sharking, and the bribery of local police and politicians.

Atlanta, of course, had brothels and corruption even before the Jews began flocking there after the Second World War and made it the New York of the South. And there are topless and bottomless honky-tonks owned by Gentiles in many American cities. But it was Jews who multiculturalized prostitution, just as it was Jews who multiculturalized professional sports, and Jews who built up commercialized sex into such a huge business. The latter two activities have had an enormous boost from the Jewish media, of course.

My point is that while vice is by no means exclusively Jewish, Jews have exploited it far out of proportion to their numbers, and they have been the principal agents of change in multiculturalizing it. We'll get quite a few instructive tidbits in this regard during the Kaplan trial, which is expected to last several months.

Don't expect to see Kaplan behind bars when it is over, however. He has $50 million to defend himself, and, for a Jew, being tried in Atlanta is the next best thing to being tried in New York. The Jews have the court system in both places pretty well skewed in their favor. An indicator of this is that Kaplan is still out on bond, despite the fact that as a loan shark he ordered the beatings of at least 20 people who failed to make a payment on time, and in the current case he has sent people out to track down and intimidate potential witnesses against him. But the judge clearly believes that this nice Jewish boy doesn't need to be locked up to keep him out of mischief during his trial. And just in case the jurors need to be reminded that Kaplan is entitled to special consideration because all Jews are victims of bigotry, in his opening statement on Tuesday of this week Kaplan's lawyer, Steve Sadow, told the court that the only reason Kaplan is being prosecuted is that he is "a stereotypical New York Jew."

The lawyer for a Black Atlanta cop who is one of Kaplan's codefendants took a similar approach. The cop is a defendant because he took bribes from Kaplan and tipped off Kaplan whenever a license inspection or other visit from city officials to the Gold Club was scheduled. His lawyer complained that the trial is "racist" because all of the sports celebrities the prosecution plans to call as witnesses -- the sports celebrities who had free sex with Kaplan's White strippers -- are Black.

You know, I really don't like people like Steve Kaplan or his lawyer. I wouldn't like them even if they weren't involved in the corrupting of our people. There's something about stereotypical New York Jews that rubs me the wrong way. I don't like them at all. I don't want them around me or my people. I doubt very much that I would like the people who run Rodeph Sholom Day School, even if they weren't busy spreading the notion that homosexual families are "normal" and ought to be accepted. And even when it comes to Jews of the sort who write me to protest that they aren't like the Jews I talk about in my broadcasts, I never can forget that they are in fact still Jews. They are members of Steve Kaplan's tribe, and without the tribe Steve Kaplan wouldn't be able to do what he does. They may tell me that they don't approve of Kaplan, but in fact I see too many Kaplans in their tribe, and I don't see any real effort on the part of the rank-and-file tribe members to change that.

In Israel they are able to do exactly what they want, to make their own laws to suit themselves, and people like Kaplan flourish there. Israel is the world center of the White slave trade. In Israel it isn't illegal to own slaves, to buy and sell human beings, so long as they aren't Jews. White women -- our women -- are kidnapped from eastern Europe and taken to Israel to be used the way Kaplan uses White women in Atlanta. Kaplan really would be at home in Israel. I think we ought to send him there. I also think that we ought to send the people who run the Rodeph Sholom Day School there. I think that we ought to send the rest of the members of the tribe there too, even the ones who tell me they don't approve of people like Kaplan. I think that we ought to give them one warning: release all of your White slaves, turn over all of your illegal nuclear weapons, close down your illegal biological warfare laboratories, and behave yourselves. Otherwise we'll put a quick and permanent end to your mischief. And I think that we ought to stick to our word.

A Riot in York

Thirty-two years ago, back in the summer of 1969, the Blacks were rioting in York, Pennsylvania, just as they had rioted in many other American cities during the 1960s, with the encouragement of liberal and Jewish elements in the media, the government, and the universities. Democratic President Lyndon Johnson, just six months out of the White House, had provided an enormous stimulus to this Black disorder during his administration with his so-called "Great Society" programs of special rights and special governmental protections for Blacks.

The general feeling among Blacks in 1969 was that the White man was too soft and too comfortable to fight, and that he could be persuaded to buy them off if they raised enough hell. Certainly, this had been their experience during the past few years. Every time they burned an American city, the White politicians and the White businessmen not only would not punish them but would offer them more handouts and more privileges in an effort to persuade them not to riot again. White businessmen especially, always calculating which policy would yield them more profit, would rather buy the Blacks off than have them hurt business with more rioting. And the White politicians, of course, always danced to whatever tune the media were playing, which definitely was a pro-Black tune. So it is not surprising that the motto of Black leaders at the time was, "We've got the White man on the run. Let's keep him running." And so they rioted and burned and looted in one American city after another during the 1960s.

And they were rioting in York, Pennsylvania, in July 1969. On July 18 a 22-year-old White policeman, Henry Schaad, was shot dead by Black rioters in York. Another White policeman in York, Charles Robertson, furious over the murder of his colleague, is alleged to have given rifle cartridges to a young White man he knew and told him that he hoped he would kill as many rioters as possible. Three days after the murder of Henry Schaad, on July 21, a Black woman was shot to death, presumably by one of several White men firing at the car in which she was riding. No one ever was convicted for either killing.

Today Charles Robertson is the elected mayor of York -- and he has just been indicted by an ambitious York County district attorney for the killing of the Black woman in the rioting 32 years ago. Mayor Robertson is not accused of actually shooting the Negress himself, but of being an accessory to the shooting by encouraging White resistance to the Black rioters with his statements and by giving ammunition to one young White man.

Now, in 1969 a charge of that sort wouldn't have flown at all. It would have been laughed out of court. In 1969 Whites still believed that they had a right to fight back when Blacks rioted and began killing White policemen. Whites still believed that they had a right to protect themselves and their families. White policemen still believed that they had a right to express their feelings about Black rioters -- and in fact, to say whatever they wanted to say. But that was 32 years ago. In the past 32 years the demographics of York County has changed -- the demographics of the whole country has changed, has become darker -- and so has the attitude of the public toward such issues as free speech and self-defense. Thirty-two years of Jewish television propaganda has taken a toll.

Today Jews and liberals -- both Democrat and Republican liberals -- are just itching to prosecute Whites for things they couldn't have prosecuted them for successfully in the 1960s. They are enormously proud of themselves for having won a conviction a few days ago against a White man accused of bombing a Black church in Birmingham, Alabama, in 1969. But this itch to prosecute goes far beyond shootings and bombings. Today they want to prosecute people for Political Incorrectness. They're not quite ready to say that in public, but whenever they can find a case they believe they may be able to win, where they can call it something other than Political Incorrectness, where they can stretch things a bit and call it something else -- say, being an accessory to homicide -- they'll go for it. So today the prosecution of the White mayor of York is a cause célèbre among Pennsylvania Jews and liberals -- especially Republican liberals, because Charles Robertson is a Democrat.

If we look back 32 years, the White liberals who today are so smugly pleased with themselves for having indicted Mayor Charles Robertson were campus liberals in 1969. They were occupying deans' offices, demanding more Black faculty members, burning their draft cards, cheering Black rioters, and generally tearing up our society. Charles Robertson was a working-class White cop whose job it was to keep our society from being torn up. Sometimes he was called on to drag White liberals kicking and screaming from a dean's office. Sometimes he had to thump one of these young, White liberals with his nightstick. They called him "pig" and screamed curses at him. They hated him for doing his job. Today, as liberal district attorneys and judges and newspaper editors, they are getting even.

Actually, it's much worse than that. When Mayor Robertson was indicted, members of my organization, the National Alliance, distributed some of our publications in York. We often distribute our materials in an area where some relevant current issue already has caught the attention of the public. Usually the materials we distribute are topical, focusing on the current issue, but sometimes we distribute materials with a more general message, and that was the case in York. We didn't have a topical leaflet prepared, so our members posted a few hundred signs around York bearing a general pro-White message. We thought that it would be good for the people of York to know that amid all the liberal gloating over the indictment of their mayor, there still are many White people who don't feel bad about being White.

The signs we posted in York a couple of days ago bore the simple message: "Earth's most endangered species: the White race. Help preserve it." That's all that was on our signs, except for information about contacting the National Alliance. Nothing inflammatory. Nothing provocative. Nothing that should be offensive to anyone, Black or White. And yet the liberals went berserk. The local newspaper, the York Daily Record, screamed about our "racist signs," referred to the National Alliance as a "hate group," and then quoted approvingly the local president of the NAACP -- the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People -- who suggested that the National Alliance is a dangerous organization that the citizens of York should be wary of. Of our signs he said:

There are enough people in the general populace that don't subscribe to this kind of talk. It's offensive to them and what they believe.

Did you catch the irony in that? The local president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People finds the signs of the National Alliance calling for the preservation of the White race to be offensive and says that there are many people in the general population who also find them offensive. But of course, they certainly don't find the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People offensive, do they?

Well, the York Daily Record didn't find any irony in the statement by the president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People that our signs calling for the preservation of the White race are offensive. And the sad fact is that many of the White citizens of York also didn't find any irony there either. The majority of the Whites in York, just as everywhere, are lemmings. They don't think, except as the controlled media tell them to think. They find offensive whatever the media -- whatever their authority figures -- tell them they should find offensive. But they certainly don't think about it. They certainly don't ask themselves why preserving the White race should be offensive, but advancing colored people should not be offensive. It would frighten and confuse them terribly if anyone -- the National Alliance, for example -- tried to make them think about such things. They are much more comfortable just parroting the party line, and that party line, in its essence, is, "Whites are bad, Blacks are good."

That may sound simplistic -- and of course, the mass media are careful never to state it that clearly -- but in fact that is precisely the essence of the message with which they have been brainwashing the White public, not just in York, but everywhere, during the past 32 years and more. And the brainwashing has been effective, which is why the liberal establishment has decided that it is now politically advantageous to prosecute Mayor Charles Robertson when it wasn't politically advantageous to do so 32 years ago.

And it's also why no one in the York political establishment is interested in finding and prosecuting the murderer or murderers of White policeman Henry Schaad. Eight other White men besides Mayor Robertson have been indicted in the past few days by the York district attorney, but all of the indictments have been in connection with the shooting of the Negress 32 years ago. No one has been indicted for the murder of Henry Schaad. I have a strong suspicion that I could walk into the York County prosecutor's office with a videotaped confession from a Black who shot Henry Schaad on July 18, 1969, and no one in the prosecutor's office would be interested.

And I suspect that the same lack of interest would be displayed by everyone at the York Daily Record. Prosecuting a Black for the 32-year-old murder of a White cop -- or writing about it -- simply would not be politically advantageous. In fact, nearly every news report I have read about the background of the arrest of Mayor Robertson fails even to mention the murder of Henry Schaad. They focus entirely on the Negress who was shot three days after Schaad, and they paint the whole thing as just another instance of racist Whites victimizing poor, inoffensive Blacks.

A good example is the account in this week's issue of Newsweek magazine. There's no mention of the murder of Henry Schaad by Black rioters on July 18. Instead, Newsweek deceptively suggests that the riot was caused by the shooting of the Negress on July 21, that the Blacks of York were all happily and peacefully behaving themselves until a Black woman was murdered on July 21, and that's what started the riot. The Newsweek story -- that's on page 30 of the May 28 issue -- states that then-policeman Charles Robertson has been charged with:

supplying White gang members with bullets, urging one to "kill as many n-----rs as you can," and fomenting a race riot.

That really makes it sound like the riot didn't start until Robertson had given cartridges to a White gang member and urged him to start killing Blacks, doesn't it? But in fact the riot had been underway for some time, and the Black rioters already had murdered Robertson's colleague Henry Schaad at the time Robertson is accused of "fomenting a race riot."

Do you think that was just sloppy reporting by Newsweek? I don't think so. I think it was a deliberate attempt to deceive, a deliberate attempt to place the blame for the riot on White racists, a deliberate attempt to continue the brainwashing of the White public with the "White is bad, Black is good" party line.

Well, we already had a pretty good idea that the media people and the politicians are liars and crooks. What is much more worrisome is the current state of mind of the lemmings. I mentioned a minute ago -- and I've mentioned on many earlier broadcasts -- lemmings don't think, and lemmings make up the great majority of our population: probably around 97 percent. Of course, when I say lemmings don't think, I am oversimplifying. Lemmings aren't necessarily stupid; it's just that they are constitutionally incapable of forming or holding an opinion that is contrary to their perception of what the people around them believe -- and their perception comes from their television screens. They worship authority, and the faces and voices that speak to them with such certainty and self-confidence from their television screens are their authorities. And the same thing applies to the other mass media, not just television.

Take someone who reads Newsweek magazine for example, an intelligent lemming -- a stockbroker or a high school teacher or a small businessman, but still a lemming -- and tell him that the story about York's Mayor Charles Robertson has been deliberately falsified. He won't believe you. Show him original accounts of the riot from 1969 newspapers. These newspapers are still available. The lemming still won't believe you. Instead he will become confused and frightened. You are trying to prove his authority wrong! You are trying to make him believe something contrary to his authority, something contrary to what all his peers believe! That's very disturbing indeed to someone who all his life has been an unquestioning slave to ideological fashion.

Then tell your lemming -- your stockbroker or high school teacher or small businessman -- that the reason Newsweek magazine lies about important issues, such as racial conflicts, is that it is under Jewish control, that it is owned by Katherine Meyer Graham's Washington Post Company, and that like all of the Jewish mass media its aim is to undermine White solidarity, White self-confidence, the White sense of identity and community, and to instill feelings of White guilt and White self-hatred in its readers, so that they will not resist Jewish domination of their society.

Tell him that, and you will see the light of understanding go on in his eyes. Aha! You are one of those awful anti-Semites he has been told about! You are one of those terrible White racists, the very worst possible kind of person! Aha! Now he understands why you are refusing to believe the story in Newsweek, a story all right-thinking citizens should believe! Now he understands why you are trying to confuse and frighten him! And you will hear a loud "clang!" as his mind slams shut.

Try it, and that's what you will experience. Actually, I know that many of you, perhaps most of you, already have had that experience. That is the terrible reality of human nature, the terrible reality of lemminghood. The story in the York Daily Record I quoted earlier gleefully described the reaction of many of York's White citizens to our signs with the message, "Earth's most endangered species: the White race; help preserve it." They were frightened and disturbed, the newspaper reported. They began tearing down all of the signs they could find. They called the police to report the signs. Within a day, the newspaper proudly said, most of our signs had been destroyed.

And I suppose that the mass media have a right to be proud. Thirty years ago the White citizens of York wouldn't have reacted that way to our signs: perhaps not even ten years ago. The change in attitude, the increase in feelings of White guilt and self-hatred, the enormous increase in the fear of being thought a "racist," all have been wrought by the mass media in a well planned and carefully orchestrated campaign of brainwashing, a campaign made feasible only by Jewish control of the most important and powerful elements of the media.

I told you that the lemmings are frightened by our signs. Well, I am frightened by the lemmings. I am frightened because I know where this Jewish brainwashing campaign is headed ultimately. It is headed toward our total enslavement and then our annihilation as a race, as a threat to Jewish supremacy. The lemmings already have been brought to the point where they are ready to abandon the First Amendment. They are ready to have "speech crime" laws enacted, so that they will not be confused and frightened by Politically Incorrect speech, such as my "Earth's most endangered species" signs. A good third of them believe now that such speech -- what York's NAACP president would call "offensive" speech -- already is illegal. That's why they call the police when they see one of my signs. My estimate is that another third believe that offensive speech should be made illegal. Lemmings already have memorized the media argument that the First Amendment never was meant to protect offensive speech. They will tell you that talking about preserving the White race is like shouting "fire!" in a crowded theatre. It offends people of color; it might start a riot. Therefore, it should be outlawed. The Constitution was never meant to protect speech that might start a riot.

That is where things are headed. That is where the masters of the controlled media have been headed from the beginning, despite their deceptive pretense of supporting free speech. America is almost there. Most of the lemmings are ready. They have been slaves to ideological fashion all their lives. Lemmings are slaves by nature. They certainly don't need free speech. It only confuses and frightens them. They will be happy to see an end to it.

What about the rest of us: the two or three percent of the population who aren't lemmings? What about those of us who value freedom, those of us willing to fight and kill and risk our own lives in support of freedom? Events such as those taking place in York, Pennsylvania, now can only be worrisome to us. The fearful reaction of so many of the White citizens of York to the National Alliance's signs can only be worrisome. The threat of the enactment of "speech crime" laws, followed by a government crackdown on all American dissidents and the imposition of total Jewish tyranny is worrisome. And the fact that most of our fellow citizens will happily obey the tyrants and will help in the suppression of anyone -- like us -- who opposes the tyrants is most worrisome of all: the fact that we will be obliged to fight against the majority of our own people.

But we still do have our freedom for a while. The tyrants who are itching to silence us and impose their rule on us still must hide behind a pretense of support for freedom. Let us use our time well, the time when we still can speak the truth and can organize and build for the future without having to break the law or shed blood. Let us not be silenced by fear at a time when silence is not yet demanded of us by tyrants. Let us speak out boldly now -- not to the lemmings, of course, but to those capable of thinking for themselves, to those who value their freedom. Talk to them about the deliberate deception in Newsweek magazine, about the irony in the claim by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People that our signs calling for the preservation of the White race are "offensive." Talk to them about this broadcast. Make those who are not afraid of thinking think.

Let us speak out. Let us organize. Let us build our strength now, while we still have our freedom, for the coming struggle against those who will attempt to take our freedom away from us. That struggle is surely coming, and it almost is upon us.

Scalp Dance

I've been reading one of the new books that my sponsor, National Vanguard Books, has just added to its catalog. It's Scalp Dance, by Thomas Goodrich, and it's a history of the conflict between Plains Indians and White settlers moving west in the years immediately after the American Civil War, between about 1865 and 1879. Much of the book consists of eyewitness accounts by White soldiers, scouts, and settlers involved in the conflict. The book is interesting to me for its information on that period of our history: information about the hardships that our ancestors overcame in conquering this country and building a civilization here, information about the courage and tenacity and ingenuity they displayed in fighting against a ferocious and cruel foe.

The book also is interesting as an anthropological study, a study of the racial differences, the behavioral differences, the differences in mentality and attitude between the Indians and the Whites. One of these differences of most immediate concern to our ancestors was the almost unbelievable cruelty and sadism of the Indians. The fate of White captives almost invariably was much worse than death: it involved hideous and prolonged torture and mutilation, and for the women, gang rape as well.

The deceitfulness of the Indians also was something that took getting used to. The Indians have often complained that the Great White Father in Washington didn't keep his promises, and of course, that's still true. Politicians always have spoken with forked tongues. But the lies of the White politicians were nothing compared to the everyday deceit and trickery of the Indians. The Plains Indians quickly learned that many of the Whites freshly arrived from the east had been indoctrinated with liberal propaganda about the "noble savage" in their schools and churches. These innocents headed west with their heads pumped full of foolish notions about the basic decency of the Indians and determined to be fair in all their dealings with them.

When a group of Indians spotted a wagon train of such prospective settlers unaccompanied by soldiers or experienced scouts, they would approach with smiles and other indications of friendly intent, sometimes waving a white flag. Almost certainly there were good Christian souls in those wagon trains who told their husbands, "Put away your rifle, you fool! Can't you see that they're friendly? If you're holding a rifle, that will just provoke them." When the Indians got close enough to evaluate the situation fully, they either would strike immediately or mix with the prospective settlers and wait for the opportune moment to begin cutting throats and taking scalps. Then, after a day or so of amusing themselves raping the White women and listening to the screams of the White men staked out on the ground with a small fire burning at their crotches, they would move on and leave the scraps for the wolves and coyotes. Such fools soon enough were weeded out of those Whites who settled in the plains and survived Indian attacks, but there seemed to be an inexhaustible supply of them back East, where the preachers continued pumping new heads full of dangerous nonsense. It's really too bad that the preachers and other propagandists of the "noble savage" school didn't head west themselves to try out their ideas on real savages.

This is the aspect of Scalp Dance that I found most interesting. One can see some fascinating parallels between the experiences of our pioneer ancestors and what's happening to us today. Basically we White Americans today are the same people as those White pioneers pushing west 130 years ago and fighting the Indians for the right to do so. Probably we're not as tough as they were, because our lives have been softer than theirs were even before they started west from Philadelphia or Boston or Baltimore. And dysgenic breeding certainly must have lowered our quality a trifle: kids who wouldn't have survived long enough to breed then are the most prolific element in the overmedicated, overprotected White population today. But still, today we're about 90 percent of what we were in 1870.

Back then we got our act together and pretty well took care of our Indian problem. It cost us a huge amount of pain and tears and blood, but we prevailed. We destroyed the savages, we conquered the land for our people, and since then five generations of our people have lived on that land. Today, however, we have problems that in some ways are very similar to our Indian problem then. The difference is that today we're not getting our act together.

As I said, we licked the Plains Indians; we gave them a beating from which they never recovered and never will. Today the mongrels, the mestizos, pouring across our southern border are related to them, of course: they're a similar sort of Indian, along with some Spanish admixture. If we had our act together we'd stop that mestizo invasion in its tracks, and then we'd clean out every one of them who has managed to sneak across in the last 50 years, along with all the descendants of those who sneaked across, regardless of whether they were born south of the border or north of the border. We'd herd them back across the border the same way we herded the Plains Indians onto reservations. And the mestizos would stay south of the border, because we would stop playing the silly games the U.S. Border Patrol plays with them today. Even if one did manage to get across without being shot, what could he do? He would be recognized immediately, just because he wouldn't be White, and then he'd be shot.

That is the way our ancestors who whipped the Plains Indians would have dealt with the mestizo invasion. Of course, the reason the mestizos are invading our country today is because our ancestors whipped the Plains Indians. It's not just that the Plains Indians would have as gladly scalped any mestizos as White men coming into their territory, it is that after our ancestors whipped the Indians they built a civilization on the prairie, with farms and ranches and towns and railroads. They made the prairie productive in a way that neither the Plains Indians nor the mestizos ever could. It was after the Whites had eliminated the danger of being scalped and had created wealth north of the border that the mestizos came pouring across, hoping to share in the White man's wealth.

Which is to say that, when our ancestors solved their Indian problem, they prepared the way for our mestizo problem today. That's the way the world always has been: one problem always leads to another, and there never is a time without problems or dangers or struggle. The objective always must be to survive, to assure the survival of one's people, to prevail, and to grow stronger, so that one's people can overcome the next problem.

So why aren't we prevailing today, when our ancestors would have? I said a moment ago that they got their act together, and we don't seem to be able to do that. What does that mean, specifically?

Certainly, our ancestors had weaknesses, and they made mistakes. They weren't an ideal bunch of survivors, by any standard. Because their government was a democracy, it was corrupt, with politicians then, just as today, concerned almost entirely with being elected or re-elected and willing to say or do anything to that end. But at least the politicians then couldn't expect to win many votes by catering to non-White minorities or to homosexuals or to feminists, and there were almost no Jews in the country.

In the eastern cities there were many muddle-headed liberals, including many in the schools, teaching the equality of races and individuals. We had just gone through a horribly bloody and destructive civil war, in which the notion of racial equality had infected the minds of many citizens on the winning side, although by no means a majority of them. We had Christian preachers, then as now, morally disarming our people by preaching that the Indians were our "brothers" and that we just needed to be nice to them, and then they would be nice to us. We had newspapers insinuating this poison into the minds of our people. But we didn't have television, and not even the newspapers were unanimous in their liberalism.

Most important, there was no hostile element inside our ranks strong enough to consolidate our weaknesses and to exacerbate them to the point where we became powerless in the face of our external enemies. We had, for all practical purposes, no Jews, and the Jews who already were here had not yet fastened their grip on our mass media. That is the key difference between then and now.

Many of our people were confused then and had wacky ideas. Many of them had sectarian grievances against their fellow Whites as a result of the Civil War or that they had brought over from Europe with them, and these sectarian or nationalist grievances were more bitter than any grievances they might develop against the Indians. We had traitors among our own people: businessmen who sold rifles to the Indians so long as they could do so at a profit.

But we had no malevolent element working to turn all of these weaknesses against us and destroy us. These weaknesses were not glorified and preached to our children and to our young people with the intent of crippling them morally. We did not have a strongly coherent, racially self-conscious minority in our midst promoting policies intended to increase alienation among our people, intended to weaken our sense of identity, intended to undermine our feelings of solidarity with our own people, intended to keep us confused and divided and make us easy prey for this predatory minority.

We did not have Jewish television. We did not have Sumner Redstone and MTV. We did not Michael Eisner and the Weinstein brothers and their films promoting racial mixing and homosexuality and feminism. We did not have Gerald Levin and his Warner record companies promoting rap music among impressionable young Whites. We did not have a Jew-dominated Madison Avenue promoting all of the same, destructive filth in magazine advertising. We did not have a Jewish lobby controlling the political process and the government in this country. Our university campuses were not in the grip of Political Correctness. The teachers and administrators in our public schools were not forced to march in ideological lockstep, forced to indoctrinate the kids in their charge with the same sort of lies and poison with which their parents were being indoctrinated by television.

Again: we did not have Jewish television then, and we do have it today. That is why we were able to get our act together in 1870 and beat the Plans Indians and claim the prairies for our people, and it is why we are not able to get our act together today and can only stand by in confused helplessness as the mestizos swarm into America and take back the land that our ancestors won for us with so much blood and pain and sacrifice and heroism.

That's the same reason we let Blacks and Asians infest our schools and can't figure how to stop it. It's the reason we let our cities go to hell as the Blacks take them over. It's the reason we let them commit outrage after outrage against our people and don't know what to do about it except give them more welfare and other unearned benefits. If in 1870 Blacks had gone on a rampage the way they did in Cincinnati a few weeks ago or in Seattle a few weeks before that, beating White women senseless, we would have simply cleaned them out. There wouldn't be a Black left alive in a city where they had done that sort of thing. Today we just watch them destroy our country and brutalize our women while we sit on our hands in confusion.

Every vice and weakness we had in 1870 we have a hundred times worse today -- and today we have a satanically clever and vicious gang of predators orchestrating those vices and coordinating those weaknesses in order to keep us morally paralyzed and unable to resist their predation.

You know, I've had a number of people tell me that if permit ourselves to become a minority in America during the next few decades, as the demographers predict, it will be because we aren't fit enough to survive. If the Blacks and mestizos and Vietnamese and Koreans are taking our country away from us, it's because they're more fit than we are, and this land will be the breeding ground for future generations of their people instead of ours. More to the point is the claim that if we let the Jews come into our country, infiltrate our society, gain monopoly control of our mass media, and then use that control to paralyze and to destroy us, it is proof that they are the fitter race, and it is proper for them to replace us as masters of the planet.

Some people tell me that in a smug, mocking sort of way. They're the totally alienated, the people who don't care at all who is master of the planet except as it affects them as individuals, and who think it's funny that I or anyone else should be worried what happens to our race after we die. But others are quite serious when they say to me: "Doesn't the fact that the Jews were able to sneak in and get control of our media and then our government, that they are able to persuade our women to sleep with Blacks, that they are able to make 200 million White lemmings parrot whatever nonsense the Jews choose to feed them through their television screens, that they are able to do all of these things to us while we do nothing in response -- doesn't this prove that the Jews are smarter than we are, superior to us as a race, and more fit to survive? Doesn't that mean that our extinction and the Jews' survival will be in accord with the natural order?"

Well, let's look at it another way. Suppose that you are driving with your wife or girlfriend along a city freeway late at night, and you accidentally take a wrong exit and find yourself driving through a Black neighborhood, with Blacks swarming all over the streets and sidewalks. And then you have a flat tire. And because of the restrictive laws in your state you don't even have a firearm in your car to protect yourself. And when the Blacks realize your predicament, they surround your car and begin smashing the windows with bricks, so that they can pull you and your woman out. Does this in itself mean that the Blacks are superior to you?

Imagine that your child is playing in your yard. A neighbor's pit bull gets loose from his chain, comes into your yard, attacks your child, and mauls him to death. Does this prove that the pit bull, as a breed, is superior to you and your kind, as a breed?

In a sense, whoever survives in such an encounter is superior to the loser. But we ought to look at the matter in a broader framework before we draw final conclusions. We know that, as a breed, we can destroy the pit bulls of the world as a breed whenever we decide that's what we ought to do. We know that the only reason the Blacks are a danger to us now is that there are other forces involved over which the Blacks have no control.

It is true that the Jews slipped in, got the advantage over us, and now are pushing us rapidly toward extinction -- but we aren't there yet. If we give up now -- if we say, "Oh, look, the Jews have gotten the advantage over us," and then we do nothing about that -- then we have proved ourselves unfit to survive. But in fact, the Jews' advantage is a precarious one, based entirely on their control of the mass media of news and entertainment. If they lose that control, then they also lose their control over our government, and then they will be the ones headed for extinction.

They understand that, of course, and they are determined to hang on. An amusing example of this occurred just a few days ago, when there was a series of changes of executive personnel in the media giant NBC. NBC itself is divided into news and entertainment divisions. The president of NBC News, Andrew Lack, moved up to become president of NBC. Neal Shapiro, executive producer of "Dateline NBC," moved up to become president of NBC News. Jonathan Wald, who was the executive producer of the show "NBC Nightly News" will take over NBC's "Today Show." Jeff Zucker, who held the "Today Show" position earlier, is now president of NBC's entertainment division. And so on, for many other executive positions at NBC: a real game of musical chairs. The interesting thing is that all of the executives involved are Jews. And that's pretty much the way it is with the other media giants too. They really believe that they've got it all sewed up, and that no one can challenge them. That's why their propaganda has become so blatant recently.

But you know, things change. Sometimes they change unexpectedly and radically -- even things that seem to be all sewed up. And when the future of the race is at stake, I'm not the only one likely to do something radical.

One of the outstanding combat pilots of all time was Hans Ulrich Rudel. He logged more than 2500 combat missions during the Second World War and was the most highly decorated pilot of that war. He sank a Soviet battleship, and he destroyed more than 500 Soviet tanks. He was shot down behind Soviet lines several times and was severely wounded. He finished the war flying with only one leg.

When he was down behind enemy lines, surrounded by Red Army troops advancing with submachine guns, his gunner surrendered and then perished in the gulag. But Rudel never surrendered, no matter how hopeless the situation seemed. His motto was: "Only he is lost who gives himself up for lost."

It is a motto that it would be well for those to ponder who believe that the Jews are so powerful that we never can force them to remove their fangs from our necks and then get them off our backs. "Only he is lost who gives himself up for lost."

Behind Liberalism

When anyone wants to eliminate a problem or overcome an obstacle, it's usually a big help to him to understand the nature of the problem or the obstacle. If he misunderstands the nature of the problem and bases his attempt to eliminate it on that misunderstanding, he's far more likely to fail than if he tackles the problem with a thorough understanding of its nature. That's self-evident, and probably my worst enemies would agree with me on that. And yet there are some very important problems that are frustrating us in our efforts to solve them simply because most of us have made no serious effort to understand their true nature. We have just assumed that the nature of the problems is self-evident when in fact it is not.

The most important example of this is the assumption that the reason our civilization is self-destructing is so-called "liberal" social and political policies. There is a general belief that we have a preponderance of liberals in our government, in the media, among school administrators, among Christian preachers, and so on, and that most of the White public goes along with the destructive policies of these leading liberals because most members of the public also are liberals.

And I'm using the word "liberal" to designate a person who has a particular set of beliefs, much in the way a Christian has a particular set of beliefs. That is, a Christian believes, among other things, that a man named Jesus of Nazareth, born approximately 2,000 years ago in Palestine, was the son of God; that he walked on water, resurrected the dead, and performed other miracles; and that after he was crucified at the demand of the Jews he rose from the dead and ascended into heaven. And a liberal believes, among other things, that all featherless bipeds are "equal" -- that is, that they all are born with the same potential and would be equal in their accomplishments if they all had the same advantages and opportunities.

And as I said, there is a very common assumption made that the ongoing destruction of our society and our civilization is the consequence of applying the fallacious belief system of the liberals to the formulation of public policy. But this very common assumption is incorrect -- or perhaps it would be better to say that it misses the point. Liberal policies certainly are destructive, but they aren't the ultimate driving force behind the assault on Western civilization and our race. And so any attempt to restore our society to health and save our civilization from ruin based on an effort to change the beliefs of liberals -- to convince liberals of the incorrectness of their ideas -- is likely to fail. It is likely to fail because the problem is only superficially, but not fundamentally, the consequence of a group of people -- namely, liberals -- basing their policies on a particular set of incorrect ideas, such as the innate equality of all featherless bipeds. The problem is not one of belief, but one of psychology, of human nature, and of the skillful psychological manipulation of that nature by hidden agents.

I am sure that there are real liberals: that is, people who have thought about the world around them and then consciously adopted the liberal ideology. They constitute a fraction of a percent of the people who adhere to liberal policies and pay lip service to liberal ideas. The rest -- that is, nearly all so-called "liberals" -- are liberals for the same reason that Catholics are Catholics and Lutherans are Lutherans and Buddhists are Buddhists. It has nothing to do with the ideologies of the various religions and everything to do with psychology. With a few rare exceptions, a Catholic is not a Catholic because he has thought about the world around him and decided that Catholicism is what makes the most sense. He is a Catholic because his parents and his neighbors are Catholics. He is a Catholic -- or a Lutheran or a Buddhist -- because he is a lemming, and lemmings don't make up their own minds about anything. They believe -- really believe -- whatever they think the people around them believe.

With liberals today it's not so much a matter of believing what one's parents or neighbors believe as it is believing what one perceives to be fashionable in one's peer group, and the perception most often comes from one's television screen. It is possible to persuade an occasional liberal that his view of the world is incorrect and his policies are destructive and he should straighten out his thinking, just as it is possible to persuade an occasional Lutheran that Martin Luther really was the Antichrist and that Lutherans should beg the Pope for forgiveness and return to Holy Mother Church. It's a hard sell in either case. And as I said, it misses the point.

The point is this: Liberals are tools. Most of them are not inherently evil or destructive, any more than a hammer used to smash a statue by Phidias is evil or a match used to burn a great library is evil. Liberals are morally neutral, like the hammer and the match. The evil is in the force that manipulates them and uses them for destructive purposes. The evil is in the mind that plans the destruction and then uses the liberals to carry it out. And that force is the force that controls our mass media of news and entertainment. That mind is the mind that formulates the slant of the news and the content of the media entertainment; the mind that determines which news will be reported and how it will be reported, and which news will be suppressed; the mind that determines which trends will be made fashionable and which ideas will be deemed Politically Correct.

And it is that force, that mind, that malevolent spirit that we must counter: that we must be aware of in making our plan to restore our society to health and halt the ruin of our civilization. When I said a moment ago that our problem is not one of belief but one of psychology, of human nature, I meant that we should not focus our efforts on trying to change the beliefs of the liberals but rather on exposing and then destroying the malevolent entity that manipulates the liberals by exploiting their psychological compulsion to conform to perceived norms.

That's a fact, but as I said at the beginning, most people who are interested in eliminating the problem fail to see it that way. They still want to fight the liberals rather than the hidden force behind the liberals. What I'll do now is try to persuade you that my understanding of the nature of the problem is correct by providing a few examples or illustrations of the way in which the problem manifests itself.

We might note first the global nature of the problem, the global way in which it is being orchestrated. Almost everywhere one looks in the White world, one sees the same destructive forces at work, the same governmental policies, the same wrongheaded attitudes and fashions being promoted by the media. There are, of course, local differences of detail. The United States had a large population of Black slaves until 136 years ago, and no country in Europe has that sort of history. One would expect this difference to have a strong effect on racial attitudes and policies, but in fact the policies of governments throughout Europe and the party line promoted by the mass media of news and entertainment throughout Europe are in broad outline the same as those in the United States.

The denial of racial differences and the doctrinaire promotion of egalitarianism are as much policies of the mass media and the government in Germany, in France, and in the United Kingdom, for example, as in the United States. Most European countries have no common border with a non-White country, as the United States does, and yet one sees the same insanely destructive policy regarding non-White immigration nearly everywhere in Europe that one sees in the United States. Nowhere is non-White immigration popular, and yet every government pursues a policy of bringing non-White immigrants into the country and then favoring and protecting them after they are in. One sees the same sort of corruption of the society by Turks, by Arabs, by Blacks, by Pakistanis, by Vietnamese, by Chinese, or by other non-Whites in the big cities of Sweden or Denmark or England as in the United States. The majority of the Whites everywhere are against it, while their supposedly democratic governments and the media are for it.

A good example of this is what's been happening in northern England recently, where Asian gangs have been attacking and terrorizing Whites, and the government and the media have been trying to blame it on "White racists," such as members of the British National Party, the BNP. In fact the dynamics of the current racial rioting in the Manchester, England, area and in nearby Leeds is remarkably similar to the racial conflicts we've seen in places like Seattle and Cincinnati recently in this country. In Seattle and Cincinnati, Blacks were attacking Whites -- specifically targeting Whites, especially young, White women, for vicious beatings fueled by racial hatred -- while the media tried hard to persuade the public that race had nothing to do with the attacks, and the politicians were making promises of more handouts to the Blacks and looking for Whites to arrest in connection with the rioting so that they could not be accused of "racial profiling" because they arrested more Blacks than Whites. In the Manchester suburb of Oldham, with a population of nearly a quarter of a million--15 percent of which consists of Asian immigrants brought in by the British government against the will of the British people since the Second World War--gangs of Pakistanis, Bangladeshis, and Indians have been attacking Whites, while the media and the politicians have been trying to blame it on Whites, who supposedly provoked the Asians. Change the names of the cities, and the news stories in England about the Oldham race war or the race riot just three days ago in Leeds could have been written in this country about the riots in Seattle and Cincinnati.

I'll read to you excerpts from a couple of news reports that came from Oldham during the last two weeks. An Associated Press International story from Sunday, May 27, reported:

At the height of the clashes -- which continued off and on for seven hours, into the early hours of Sunday -- up to 500 youths fought pitched battles with police in full riot gear. The fighting left the main thoroughfare in the town's Glodwick district littered with broken bricks, shards of glass, and the hulks of several burned-out cars.

Paul Barrow, proprietor of a pub that was trashed in the fighting, said rioters burst in and began beating his patrons. "The first of them got through the door and attacked the customers with whatever they could get their hands on -- bottles, stools, and glasses," he said.

Did you hear anything about that? I'm sure that you would have heard plenty and would still be hearing about it if 500 Whites had been the ones rioting and beating up Asians. And do you know how the rioting started? The same Associated Press International story says:

The riot apparently was sparked when a gang of white youths attacked a home in a neighborhood where most residents are of Pakistani, Bangladeshi, or Indian origin, police said. Soon after, a group of about 100 youths from the neighborhood attacked a pub mainly patronized by whites.

Actually, gangs of Asians have been attacking Whites in Oldham for months. Most of these attacks have been ignored by the media, although an especially vicious incident earlier this year did make national headlines. In that incident Asians nearly killed a 76-year-old White man, Walter Chamberlain, when they smashed his face with bricks while screaming anti-White insults at him.

I'll read you another news report, this one from the May 30 issue of London's The Times:

White families barricaded the windows of their homes with planks of wood last night as residents in the Oldham riot zone retreated behind ethnic lines....

Earlier Jack Straw, the home secretary, tried to blame racial conflict in the town on intervention by the British National Party, but angry local white people told a different story. After Chief Superintendent Eric Hewitt said on television that all but a few of the 20 people arrested overnight were white, The Times sought the views of the town's shrinking white community.

People described themselves as being under siege. Neighbors told of sending children to stay with families in Manchester and Ashton-under-Lyne so that they were not injured by bricks flying through windows or kept awake at night by police helicopters....

Mr. Straw told the Oldham Evening Chronicle yesterday: "It is plain beyond doubt that relations between different sections of the community can only be poisoned by the intervention of extremists like the BNP. I utterly deplore their attempts to exploit the situation in the town."

Straw's comments about the BNP are nearly identical to those of the local media and government people in York, Pennsylvania, about me and the National Alliance when some of our material was distributed in York recently. I told you about that in my broadcast two weeks ago. If one isn't aware of the underlying forces involved, that sort of global unanimity might be surprising.

By the way, Jack Straw, the United Kingdom's minister of home affairs, who among other things is in charge of the country's police agencies, is a Jew. So was his predecessor as home secretary, Michael Howard. I have no idea how he managed to appropriate a good English name like "Howard," but while he was in office Howard banned me from the United Kingdom. He told me that if I ever attempted to enter that country again I would be arrested. The reason for my banning, he said, is that I might cause a breach of the public order. I told him that I had never in my life caused a breach of the public order anywhere. But the banning still stands. A Jew is able to tell me that I cannot visit the land of my ancestors, and his order is enforced by English policemen!

What do you think is the likelihood that the present Jewish home secretary, Jack Straw, will ban any of the Pakistanis or other Asians who smashed in Walter Chamberlain's head with bricks? Well of course, you know that there's no chance at all of that because the same unwritten rules apply in Britain that apply here. An attack on a White by a non-White is not regarded as a breach of the public order. It's only when a White defends himself against non-Whites that the media begin yapping about "hate crimes," and the government politicians spring into action.

And it's not just Britain and the United States. The same controlling force is at work in Germany, in Scandinavia, in France, in Canada, in Australia, and everywhere else in the White world. From Switzerland to Sweden it is against the law to question the Jews' claims about how many of them died during the Second World War in the so-called "Holocaust" or how they died. In Switzerland people are in prison now for saying, "I'm not convinced that six million Jews were killed in gas chambers by the Germans. I think that fewer than six million Jews died during the war, and most of them died from disease in the concentration camps, rather than from poison gas." Say that over here, and the media will denounce you hysterically as a "Holocaust denier." Say it in Canada or Australia or Switzerland or almost any other country in Europe, and the government will lock you up.

It is not just an amazing coincidence that we have this global similarity in conditions at this instant in time. What we can see is the same organized campaigns, the same well-oiled legislative and social programs, the same hidden forces behind these campaigns in every country. As I said, there are differences in detail, but the same evil minds, the same schemers are at work globally. Take any program, any campaign -- the current campaign by Jewish groups to have more "speech crime" legislation enacted in the United States, for example -- and if you want to see where it is headed, look at any other White country where the same program has met a little less resistance and been able to gain more ground. Where the campaign has gone in one country is where it is headed in every country, because the same malevolent force is behind it.

I'll give you another indication that it's not soft, weepy liberal sentiment that's wrecking our society today, but rather a cold, hard, cunning, evil force behind the liberalism, using the liberalism to push a hidden agenda. It's not some soggy, mushy idea that everything that somehow qualifies as "human" is equal that is the driving force behind the ruin of our civilization, but rather it is a strongly cohesive group of people that consider themselves superior to everyone not in their ethnic/racial/religious group and only use egalitarianism as a wrecking tool against our society. My organization, the National Alliance, has for several years been publishing information on the racial differences in the incidence of HIV infection in the United States. One of our leaflets, which we have distributed widely on university campuses, points out that heterosexual Black males are 14 times as likely as heterosexual White males to be carriers of the AIDS-causing virus. We've also pointed out that while AIDS among Whites is largely a disease of homosexuals, among Blacks it's largely a heterosexual disease. Well, when we point out this startling difference between Black and White HIV infection rates for heterosexual males, with Blacks 14 times as likely to be infected, liberals don't want to believe it. They don't want to believe it because it is contrary to their primary belief in equality, in the essential sameness of Blacks and Whites.

But of course, the people behind the scenes -- the schemers -- are concerned with facts, with reality, not with nutty notions of equality. The sophomore college girls can squeal in disbelief when we present our information about racial disparities in the spread of AIDS and can denounce us as "haters," but the AIDS professionals, the experts, understand the truth of the matter. I have in front of me, on my desk at this moment, a poster -- a large, colorful poster -- published by the Florida Department of Health, intended for distribution in Black neighborhoods. It says, in large black and red letters "1 in 50 Blacks in Florida has HIV." And it gives an 800 number for Blacks to call for free HIV testing.

So why aren't the White college girls in Florida told that two percent of Blacks are HIV infected? The government is telling the Blacks this but hoping that Whites won't find out. Why is that? Could it be that the people behind the scenes don't want White college girls to be wary of having sex with Blacks? Could it be that they want White college girls to become infected with HIV?

I believe that's exactly what they want. I believe that the people behind the scenes want the destruction of our people by any means, including racial mixing with Blacks. That's why the experts, the people who know the facts about AIDS, are afraid to speak up and tell the college girls that the National Alliance is correct. They are afraid of bucking the Jews behind the scenes. I have seen this fear manifested over and over again, and it is another evidence of the powerful forces that simply use liberalism as a destructive tool against our people.

Murdering Iowa

To most people statistics don't have much meaning. They're just numbers. Tell people that 50 years ago 90 per cent of the citizens of the United States were White, that today only 70 per cent are White, and that 50 years hence less than half the U.S. population will be White, and it doesn't move most of them. They can't remember what it was like 50 years ago, when the United States was unquestionably a White man's country, and they don't have enough imagination to visualize what it will be like when Whites are a minority and are completely at the mercy of Blacks, Asians, mestizos, and Jews. Tell most people about this trend toward a darker and darker America, and they will just shrug. They don't see how America's changing demographics will affect what they can buy at the mall or watch on television. What is happening to America is happening so slowly that they aren't alarmed.

That's most people. In a few places in America, however, the changes are occurring more rapidly, and people are forced to pay attention. Many of these people are alarmed. I receive letters every week from listeners who lament what has happened to the towns or the neighborhoods they grew up in. They tell me that 15 years ago every family in their neighborhood was White. The streets were clean and safe. They could leave their doors unlocked without worry. Their kids could walk to school or play with other kids in the neighborhood in safety. They could take a stroll in the evening with a wife or a girlfriend without danger of having lewd comments directed at them.

Today half their neighborhood has become non-White. Streets and yards are littered with trash, bars have been installed on all first-floor windows, Their kids get beaten up and have their lunch money stolen, and no White man in his right mind will expose his woman to the catcalls and deliberate jostling by the non-White thugs who roam the streets and hang out in the malls.

We've come to expect changes of this sort in the decaying cities of the East Coast or in California or Florida or Texas, where the impact of non-White immigration has been especially heavy during the past few decades. But the White heartland also is being corrupted now. In fact, there is a deliberate campaign to corrupt and pollute the White heartland as quickly as possible.

Iowa is an excellent example of this. One of the Whitest states in the country, a land of corn-fed, blue-eyed, blond farm boys and girls, Iowa is looked upon with undisguised hatred and distrust by the multicultural planners and diversity mongers of the East Coast. From their point of view Iowa, with less than three per cent minorities in 1990, was far too White, far too Aryan. Something really had to be done about Iowa. And so they're doing it, with the help of their natural allies in the statehouse, in the Christian churches, in big business, and in the media.

Under Iowa's new Democratic governor, Tom Vilsack, state officials have launched a campaign to bring more non-Whites into Iowa. Recruiting teams are sent to ghettos and barrios around the country to persuade Blacks and mestizos to move to Iowa. The government in Washington is pumping money into a number of special programs in Iowa to help in the process of multiculturalization. Non-Whites are even being recruited in Mexico, Africa, and other non-White areas and then brought to Iowa as government-approved immigrants. A story which appeared last month -- that was May 4 -- in the Chicago Tribune praising the efforts to darken Iowa contained interviews with several of these non-White immigrants, including a physician from Ghana married to a White woman, a meat-packing plant employee from Puerto Rico married to a Filipina, and a high school student from Laos.

Governor Vilsack and the other politicians justify this program to racially pollute Iowa with the argument that Iowa's population isn't growing fast enough through natural increase. Iowa's population increased by only 5.4 per cent during the 1990s, while the population of the country as a whole increased by 9.6 per cent. Without a faster growth in population, claim the multiculturalizers, the economy will be hurt. The pretense is made that there will be no one to do essential jobs. The Chicago Tribune quotes Governor Vilsack: "Who is going to farm the land? Who is going to teach our children? Who is going to care for our medical needs?"

This same spurious argument is being used by the enemies of our people in Europe to justify opening the borders of European countries to the Third World. Europeans aren't breeding fast enough to maintain the various welfare programs and social services needed to provide for an aging White population, so fast-breeding Third Worlders should be brought in to keep the population growing, say the multiculturalizers.

Of course, any scheme that depends upon a continually growing population must eventually come to grief, when the land can support no more people. Did you catch that? Any plan, any program, that requires a continually growing population for its success is fundamentally flawed and eventually must fail. But the people pushing such schemes onto a gullible White public don't really care about the long-range prospects. For them the scheme is simply a trick to get as many non-Whites as possible mixed in with the White population as quickly as possible. They believe that once they have done that it will be too difficult -- too bloody -- a task for us to unmix what they have mixed. They will be surprised at what we are willing to do to repair the damage they have done.

Listen: If Iowans need more teachers and doctors, the law of supply and demand will take care of that. Iowans may have to offer higher pay to attract needed White workers from other parts of the country, but that is the way things always have worked. The argument that non-Whites are necessary to keep the economy alive is fraudulent, but the politicians, the Christian churches, the big businessmen, and above all the media -- the untouchable Jewish media -- are supporting this fraud -- this genocidal lie -- and few citizens, in Europe or in Iowa, are bold enough to challenge it.

The fact is that much of the 5.4 per cent increase in Iowa's population during the 1990s has been mestizos brought in by the owners of meat-packing plants looking for cheap labor. This has resulted in those Iowa communities with meat-packing plants being especially hard hit by the multicultural onslaught. Storm Lake, a town of 10,000 residents in northwestern Iowa, is an example. In 1990 Storm Lake was virtually all White, a nice place to live and to raise a family. Today a third of Storm Lake's residents are non-White, and the quality of life has changed accordingly. In all of the 1980s there was just one homicide in Storm Lake. Between 1990 and 2000, as the town went from all White to one-third non-White, there were 10 murders, and other crime also rose proportionately.

This sudden destruction of their community and their life-style in the course of only a decade shocked a few of Storm Lake's White residents into speaking out. The multiculturalists have responded by bringing their road show to town, proclaiming Storm Lake a wonderful example of how a diverse group of people can live and work together, and denouncing anyone who doesn't want to go along with the continued destruction of Iowa as a "racist" and a "bigot." With the Christian clergy and the media noisily on their side and the big businessmen providing support from behind the scenes, the multiculturalists have been moderately successful at shouting down the dissidents even in heavily impacted areas such as Storm Lake.

The local high school students, raised on MTV, have been taught that a White Iowa is a boring Iowa, and that having lots of non-Whites around adds some buzz to an otherwise dull life. The Chicago Tribune article that I cited earlier had an interview with a 17-year-old White high school girl in Storm Lake. Looking around at the non-Whites who make up nearly half of her high school classmates, Jill Parman said:

I know that Iowa doesn't look like this, but it would be a whole lot less boring of a state if it did.

Thoroughly jaded young people such as Jill Parman, taught by television that life should, above all else, be entertaining, are quite susceptible to the poison disseminated by the multiculturalists. And the multiculturalists are indeed proud of their ability to use their control of the mass media -- especially television -- to take over the minds of the younger generation and alienate them from their people and from their people's traditions and values. They have become quite self-confident -- arrogant, really -- in their ability to keep dissent within manageable limits as they continue their genocidal work.

An even better example of this than Storm Lake is the small town of Postville, in northeastern Iowa. Postville is undergoing an even more traumatic racial and cultural transformation than Storm Lake. A decade ago Postville was an all-White, all-Christian farming community of 1,000 souls, most of German and Norwegian ancestry. Then Aaron Rubashkin, a Hasidic Jew who owns a kosher meat market for supplying his fellow Hasids in New York City, opened a kosher slaughterhouse in Postville. He had bought Postville's bankrupt meat-packing plant from its Gentile owners and converted it to kosher use, because he could get his meat slaughtered much more cheaply in Postville than in New York, even when the cost of shipping the meat from Iowa to New York was included. Today he and his son Shalom run the slaughterhouse, which employs 300 workers, nearly all of them non-Whites recruited by Aaron and Shalom outside Iowa and brought to Postville specifically to work in the slaughterhouse. They also brought more than 30 Ultra-Orthodox rabbis and their families to town. The rabbis do the actual slaughtering of the animals according to Jewish ritual, a shockingly inhumane procedure, which has been outlawed in many jurisdictions.

The White people of Postville feel overwhelmed. Their town has been stolen from them. Ten years ago everyone they met on the sidewalk or in the local pizza parlor was a neighbor, someone they had gone to school with, someone they shared values and traditions with. Now they see Orthodox Jews wearing black hats and prayer shawls and talking to each other in Hebrew. They see Mexicans and Nigerians and Vietnamese lounging against the lampposts and jabbering at one another in other strange languages. They see their schools, which used to be entirely White, swamped with dusky aliens.

But it is the Jews who are the most difficult for the people of Postville to accept. The Jews are all from New York City. They are loud and pushy. They are fast-talking hustlers. They are arrogant. They make no effort to adapt themselves to the ways of Postville. Instead they demand that Postville adapt itself to them. They even ignore the local laws with contempt. The Rubashkins dump the waste from their kosher slaughterhouse into the local river, polluting it so badly that it no longer is suitable for fishing or swimming or boating. Postville imposed a $2 million fine on the Rubashkins, who simply refuse to pay and keep on polluting, knowing that the governor and the media are on their side.

And unfortunately, some of the White people of Postville are on their side too. The City Council members, for example. And the people at the local newspaper. The newspaper hired a Jewess to write a regular column. When there was a vacancy on the City Council, the council members appointed a Jew to the council, saying that it would be good for the local economy. When local citizens circulated a petition protesting the appointment, they were accused of anti-Semitism by the newspaper. That intimidated most of the White citizens into silence, but not 81-year-old Dorothy Radloff. She said that she didn't want a Jew on the City Council. She went further, saying what many other Whites in Postville were feeling but were afraid to say:

We're just afraid if they get one in, then pretty soon the whole council will be Jewish, and they're going to run the town. They're working to take the town over and push the rest of us out.

But with the support of the newspaper and the other council members and the mayor, the Jew, Aaron Goldsmith, won a special election two months ago. There's something about politicians and journalists. And the gullibility and blind tolerance of our people for getting kicked in the teeth and not fighting back seem to know no limits. Perhaps if the White citizens of Postville, Iowa, had known a little more about the Hasidic Jews who are taking over their town and flooding it with non-Whites, besides the fact that they are pushy and arrogant, the election to the City Council might have turned out differently.

The Rubashkins and the other Jews associated with the kosher slaughterhouse all are members of the Ultra-Orthodox Lubavitcher sect. The Lubavitchers are those strange-looking Jews one sees in New York wearing long, black coats and black hats, with sideburns down to their shoulders. The late leader of the sect, Rabbi Menachem Mendel Schneerson, was worshipped like a divinity by his followers, including the Rubashkins and all of the other Jews they brought to Postville.

Rabbi Schneerson was a real Old Testament Jew, a Talmud Jew, who preached to his followers the unadulterated doctrines of the Talmud, including the doctrine of Jewish superiority and the doctrine that the Jews are the chosen people of God, ordained to rule all the other nations of the world and own all their possessions. His sermons have been published, although you're not likely to find them in the New York Times or any other place where Gentiles might read them. But I'll read you a selection from one of them, just to give you the flavor. Rabbi Schneerson preached:

The body of a Jewish person is of a totally different quality from the body of a member of any other nation of the world.... The Jewish body looks as if in substance it were similar to the bodies of non-Jews, but ... the bodies only seem to be similar in material substance, outward look, and superficial quality. The difference of the inner quality, however, is so great that the bodies should be considered as completely different species. This is the reason why the Talmud states that there is an halachic difference in attitude about the bodies of non-Jews.... Their bodies are in vain ... An even greater difference exists in regard to the soul. Two contrary types of soul exist. A non-Jewish soul comes from three satanic spheres, while the Jewish soul comes from holiness.

Well, Rabbi Schneerson had much more to say in his preaching to his followers about the satanic nature of Gentiles and the holy nature of Jews, but perhaps you've gotten the general idea from what I've just read. The general idea is that Jewish superiority has been bestowed on them by their deity. The Jews are so superior to us that they are justified in doing to us whatever they want. They are entitled to deceive us and plunder us and take all our possessions from us, and it is a transgression against their deity for us to attempt to protect ourselves. That's what the Hasids believe. That's what the Rubashkins and all the other Jews in Postville believe. It's too bad that there was no one to tell the White citizens of Postville what the Jews really think about them before they elected one of the Jews to their City Council.

Perhaps Dorothy Radloff had some inkling of the truth when she told her fellow citizens. "They're working to take the town over and push the rest of us out." Indeed. Unfortunately, too many of her fellow citizens failed to heed her warning. They listened instead to their Christian preachers and their local politicians and their newspaper. They have for all practical purposes lost their town. They are too confused and demoralized and disunited to put up an effective opposition to the Jews. And if they really started to clean up their town and take it back, Mr. Bush would send in the FBI to stop them. They would be arrested and charged with "hate crimes."

At this point we might ask: Why are the Jews and their allies doing it? Why are they hell bent on destroying White areas like Iowa? Why aren't they satisfied with what they have done to California and to the big cities of the East? Why do they want to make the whole country look like New Jersey and New York? Why do they deliberately destroy all-White communities such as Storm Lake and Postville?

I'll read you a few words written by Professor Earl Raab of Brandeis University's Institute for Jewish Advocacy:

The Census Bureau has just reported that about half of the American population will soon be non-white or non-European. And they will all be American citizens. We have tipped beyond the point where a Nazi-Aryan party will be able to prevail in this country.

"We have been nourishing the American climate of opposition to ethnic bigotry for about half a century. That climate has not yet been perfected, but the heterogeneous nature of our population tends to make it irreversible....

In plain language, Professor Raab is boasting that he and his fellow Jews have changed the immigration laws -- and prevented the government from enforcing what immigration laws we still have -- in order to make the American population more heterogeneous, or, to use the more familiar term, more diverse. Their goal is to make Whites a minority in their own country so that the Whites can never combine against the Jews and regain control of their own destiny. You can read more of Professor Raab's sinister scheming in a book that is available from my sponsor, National Vanguard Books. That book is Alien Nation, by Peter Brimelow.

Professor Raab and his fellow Jews aim not only at eliminating the White majority in the country as a whole, but also at polluting and corrupting every White area inside the country, so there will be no one capable of organizing an effective opposition to the Jews. They will be the only racially conscious group still able to wield power. What the Jews have done to Postville and are busy doing to the rest of Iowa is just one step in their grand scheme for implementing a Final Solution to the Gentile problem. This Final Solution is not being implemented with concentration camps and gas chambers, but with bought politicians, with corrupt preachers, and above all with television and other mass media. It is being implemented by flooding the country -- and every White area inside the country -- with non-Whites and by encouraging miscegenation. It is being implemented through programs aimed at increasing diversity. It is being implemented by deceiving and brainwashing White people to collaborate in their own destruction.

The hour for our people is late indeed -- but it's still not too late. It's still not too late to fight back.

The Scorpion and the Frog

I was a guest on the Bob Grant Show in New York last week. Bob Grant's talk radio show is enormously popular with his White male audience, despite his rough treatment of some of his guests and many of his callers. A typical comment to a caller who displeases him is, "Get off the line, you jerk!" He once told a Black welfare mother, "If I ever get hold of you, I'll give you a tubal ligation with my bare hands!"

As I said, comments of this sort make Bob Grant enormously popular with his White male listeners, but the Jews and their bedwetting liberal fellow travelers find him much less entertaining, and he has been thrown off several stations as a consequence of Jewish threats against his sponsors. Despite this Jewish hostility directed at him and despite his frequent ridicule of Blacks, he always has been favorable in his remarks about Jews -- perhaps because he knows who owns most of the radio stations, or perhaps because he just doesn't understand what Jews are all about and admires their success and the power they wield over his own profession.

His attitude may be changing for the better now, however. Despite my reputation as being no friend of the Jews, Bob Grant was quite cordial toward me. The hour I was his guest was the afternoon rush hour for New York commuters, and there were many calls from listeners. I am pleased to report that at least three-quarters of the callers were favorable to my positions on race and on Jews. The few Jewish callers, of course, were intensely hostile, and their hostility made a noticeable contrast with the friendliness of the non-Jewish callers. One Jew who called in wanted to know why I blame the Jews for the bias of the news and entertainment media. It's not the Jews who should be blamed, he said, but the shareholders of the media companies: the Jewish media bosses just do what the shareholders tell them to do.

Well, I responded by pointing out that the top Jewish media bosses also are in many cases the dominant shareholders in the media companies, and I gave Sumner Redstone as an example. Redstone is the majority shareholder in his Viacom Corporation, which in turn owns MTV, Paramount Pictures, and CBS. I described MTV as being the most destructive of all media influences on young, White Americans. I said that MTV deliberately and consistently encourages miscegenation. I said that this racially destructive policy is Sumner Redstone's policy, not that of any anonymous shareholders, that it is a Jewish policy, and that it is the same policy as that of every other Jewish media boss. I was prepared to go on and talk about Michael Eisner and the Disney Company and ABC, and about Miramax and the Weinstein brothers, and about a lot of others, but Bob Grant disconnected that particular Jewish caller.

Then Bob Grant said to me: "I don't understand. You said that Sumner Redstone and the other Jewish media bosses are deliberately trying to destroy our society. Why would they want to do that? They are rich and powerful and influential. This society has been good to them. Why would they want to destroy it? That doesn't make sense to me."

That was the question he asked me, and it was a very reasonable question. It was the question that almost any intelligent, honest person might ask in those circumstances. It was the natural question to ask: Why do the Jews want to destroy a society that has been so good to them -- especially the richest and most powerful Jews? One can imagine some embittered Jewish cab driver or office clerk wanting to strike out at Gentile society because he is resentful over the fact that he can't seem to strike it rich like the more fortunate members of his tribe, but why would those who are riding high -- billionaire Jews such as Sumner Redstone and Michael Eisner -- want to wreck the system from which they are profiting?

When Bob Grant asked me that question, I wished he hadn't. I knew the answer, and it is a simple answer, but it's not the sort of answer one wants to give to people who are driving home through rush-hour traffic. It is simple, but it also is profound. One needs to hear the answer and then to think about it carefully for a month, turning it over in one's mind, thinking of specific examples, trying to find counter-examples, holding it up to the light of one's knowledge of history, before one finally says to oneself, "Yes, that's it. That obviously is why the Jews do what they do and always have done." It takes a month of digesting the answer before one finally assimilates it and believes it and understands it. Rush-hour traffic is not the right environment for that sort of thing.

The answer, in its simplest form, to Bob Grant's question is this: Jews do what they do because they are Jews. A more didactic answer, and the one I actually gave on the Bob Grant Show last week, is one you probably have heard from me already if you've been listening to many of my broadcasts. Here's what I said to Bob Grant: The Jews, throughout their entire recorded history, have lived as a minority among other people. That's their typical modus vivendi: not living among themselves in a Jewish society, but living as a small minority -- usually a rich and powerful minority -- in a non-Jewish society. Israel today is an exception to this pattern, but Israel is an anomaly, something that has existed for only 50 years out of the last 2000 years, and even today it encompasses only a small minority of the world's Jews. Most of them live in the so-called "Diaspora" as members of a Jewish minority in the midst of a Gentile society.

When the Jews approach a healthy, homogeneous Gentile society with the aim of infiltrating it, they are looked upon as outsiders, as aliens, and regarded with suspicion -- and often with hostility if their reputation has preceded them. Facing such suspicion the Jews find it very difficult to gain power or influence so that they can exploit the society. Their way of dealing with this obstacle is to undermine the solidarity of the Gentile society: to destroy its homogeneity, to attack its morality and its traditions, to encourage alienation among its young people. They do everything they can to make the society more "diverse," more multicultural, more cosmopolitan, more rootless, more atomized. This is a slow process, often continuing for several generations, but as it proceeds the society's barriers against the Jews crumble. Ultimately it allows the Jews to control and then plunder the society, to suck it dry before moving on to another Gentile society and beginning a similar process anew.

That's essentially what I said on the Bob Grant Show last week, although I'm sure that the phrasing I used was a little different. And as I said a moment ago, even though my answer is simple and straightforward, it's not likely to be fully digested by someone listening to his car radio while trying to get home in rush-hour traffic. It's a statement of fact, but it needs to be substantiated with a lot of detailed explanation, with many concrete examples, in order to be convincing. What I'll do now is try to provide some of the explanation and some of the concrete facts.

First, let's look at what I said about the Jews being a tribe of perpetual outsiders. This is a notion many people who look only at the here and now have difficulty believing. They say to me, "Hey! The Jews aren't outsiders. They're as thoroughly integrated into the American melting pot as anyone. They are in every facet of American business and professional and cultural and political life. They own stores of every sort. They buy and sell every type of merchandise. They may not be farmers or welders or machinists or carpenters, but they are doctors and dentists and lawyers and teachers and writers and artists and musicians. They are politicians. There are ten of them in the U.S. Senate, four times as many as one would expect from their percentage of the overall population. There are even two of them on the Supreme Court, which is about nine times what one would expect, since they make up only 2.5 per cent of the general population. So how can you call them outsiders?"

That's the sort of response I've sometimes had from people who are able to see only the present situation. The historical record, however, shows something quite different. It shows the Jews worming their way into one country in Europe after another, gradually monopolizing certain sectors of the economy and then using their monopoly to exploit the Gentile population, and eventually being expelled en masse when their depredations cause sufficient public unrest.

An example is England. The Jews entered England in the wake of the Norman conquest, purchased various privileges and trade monopolies from the ruling monarchs, and made themselves thoroughly unpopular. By the latter part of the 13th century the people of England had become so exasperated with the Jews that in 1290 King Edward the Great expelled all of them from his realm and forbade them ever to return. One might think that they wouldn't want to go back to a place where they had become so unpopular, but they couldn't stand the idea of all those Gentiles going unfleeced, and they never stopped scheming to get back in. It wasn't until Oliver Cromwell and his forces had overthrown the monarchy in the middle of the 17th century, however, that they were permitted to return to England.

They also were run out of virtually every other country in Europe -- several times from some of them -- but they always were looking for opportunities to sneak back in and return to their old depredations. They especially welcomed the upheavals and dislocations accompanying wars and revolutions because these gave them opportunities to gain footholds in places from which public hostility or the law had excluded them. During the Napoleonic Wars at the beginning of the 19th century Jews followed Napoleon's armies into many places from which they previously had been barred.

Usually they didn't have to wait for a war, however: typically they would depend upon the natural tolerance of their hosts to get a toe in the door, and then they would work slowly and patiently to push that tolerance beyond all limits. They always have had an uncanny instinct for sniffing out their hosts' natural weaknesses and vices and then using them to break down the society's discipline and order, thereby making it possible for them to enlarge their toehold and gain more influence. Thus, the Jews always have had a proclivity for the liquor business, casinos and other gambling activity, prostitution, the White slave trade, pornography, and the like. It is no coincidence that for many years the Jewish Bronfman family owned the biggest producer and distributor of liquor in North America, the Seagram Company. There are many non-Jews involved in the hotel business around the country, but in Las Vegas, where gambling is so intimately associated with hotels, the business is completely dominated by Jews. In the booming new business of Internet pornography, the biggest operator, the so-called "Bill Gates of e-porn," is a nice, Jewish boy named Seth Warshavsky, who owns clublove.com and many other of the largest pornography sites.

And so it goes. They find their way to whatever corrupts and weakens their hosts, to whatever is morally destructive, to whatever makes their hosts forget their own traditions and values. They attack order and discipline: those things are no fun, those things are old-fashioned, those things are not cool, they tell the young people. They ridicule the concepts of personal honor and personal responsibility. They distract the people from the important things and fill their minds with foolishness. They encourage every alienating tendency, every tendency that separates people from their roots. They preach "tolerance" as the supreme virtue: their hosts should be tolerant of every sort of filth and weakness and perversity. And all the while they worm their way into the host society more and more deeply.

And indeed, in America today they are in very, very deep. At the beginning of the last century there were signs in the lobbies of New York's better hotels: "Jews Are Not Welcome." The better universities had quotas to keep the Jewish presence from becoming too obtrusive. The Jews were pushy, unpleasant outsiders. But they kept on pushing, kept on breaking down the order and structure in the society that was trying in a very feeble and excessively civilized way to keep them out, and today, no less pushy and unpleasant than a century ago, they seem to have achieved the status of insiders everywhere.

And so one might ask, as Bob Grant did, why, having become privileged insiders, are they still bent on destroying our society? Why do even the richest and most powerful Jews -- Jews such as Sumner Redstone and Michael Eisner -- who have access to anything in our society they want, still work day and night to corrupt and degrade us? Why, having wormed their way in, do all of them push for increasing the flood of non-Whites into the United States from the Third World, thereby weakening their own position? Why do they still encourage our young girls to have sex with Blacks, thereby generating hatred against themselves? Why, having gotten so much of our wealth and power into their hands, don't they strive to strengthen our society instead of continuing to destroy it?

Well, there are several reasons for that, but let me again give you the simplest answer, which also is the most profound answer: Jews do what they do because they are Jews.

Do you remember the old fable about the scorpion and the frog? The scorpion wants to cross a stream, but he can't swim. He sees a frog and asks the frog to carry him across on the frog's back. The frog says, "No, I don't trust you. I've heard about how treacherous scorpions are. I'm afraid that if I let you get on my back you'll sting me." The scorpion replies, "Why should I do that? That wouldn't be in my interest. If I sting you, then we'll both drown." So the frog agrees to let the scorpion get on his back and begins swimming across the stream. Halfway across, the scorpion stings the frog. As the frog is dying and beginning to sink, he asks, "Why did you do that? Now we'll both die." The scorpion answers, "I couldn't help myself. It is in my nature to sting." And it is in the nature of the Jews to deceive and to destroy. That is what they always have done, from the days of ancient Egypt to the present, and it is what they will continue to do as long as they continue to exist as a coherent, self-conscious group.

Now, there also are longer answers to the question, for those who aren't ready yet to accept the profound answer. Many ethnic groups came to America from Europe and at first were considered as outsiders but sooner or later became insiders, and the interests of the majority became their interests. In a sense every group that didn't come here from Great Britain began as outsiders. The German mercenaries from Hessen who fought for King George and stayed here after the American Revolution very quickly became insiders. The Irish, the Poles, and the Italians all went through a similar evolution. Why is it so different with the Jews -- aside from the fact that their roots are not European but are Middle Eastern?

For one thing these other groups, the non-Jewish groups, never had deceit and destruction as their primary tactics for becoming insiders. These tactics are not part of their history. Their aim was to become part of the society, not to break it up so that they could exploit it more easily. This difference is manifested in the difference in self-image between non-Jews and Jews. Every healthy ethnic or racial group has a distinct sense of group identity and a distinct self-image. The Scots and the English, for example, have distinct self-images, with their own distinct ancestral languages, their own historical traditions and customs and so on. But despite their history of conflict and hostility toward one another in Europe, either group can blend into the other and adopt the other's interests without difficulty.

The Jews are different in both degree and kind. For one thing they are much more strongly ethnocentric than any other group. Look in the Yellow Pages under the heading "associations" in any large American city. Compare the number of Jewish associations or clubs or societies or organizations with those of the Irish or the Germans or the Poles. Of course, you also must have some idea of what percentage of the city's population is Jewish or Irish or whatever in order to get a meaningful comparison. For the best statistics, go to a library that has a copy of the Encyclopedia of Associations. Jews make up just 2.5 per cent of the population of the United States, and yet you will find more Jewish associations listed than for any other ethnic or religious group. They do stick together and support each other more than the members of any other group.

The Jews also are different in kind. What is the essential element in being a Jew? It is being "chosen." It is believing that one is a member of a tribe or a race or a people that has been chosen by their tribal god to inherit the earth and all that's in it. It is being superior to all who have not been chosen. If you are able to read the Old Testament with an open mind, the message there is quite clear. If you want more detail, read their Talmud. They don't like for you to go poking around in their Talmud, but if you are reasonably resourceful you can find a set of volumes of the Talmud and read what they think about themselves in contrast to non-Jews. If that's too much trouble for you, there are other books available -- books written by race-conscious Jews themselves -- that spell it out for you. My sponsor, National Vanguard Books, carries several such books.

The book You Gentiles, by the Jewish leader Maurice Samuel, is excellent for a start. Then there are the very revealing books on the doctrines and practice of Judaism by Israeli Professor Israel Shahak. And there are dozens of other books, many of them written by Jews themselves, that can help you in digesting and assimilating what I told Bob Grant last week.

But most fundamentally the Jew, like the scorpion and every other creature, does what it is in his nature to do. He has always lived not by settling down on a piece of turf of his own and planting his own crops and building his own house, but rather by breaking into someone else's house. And once in he doesn't try to repair the damage he did by breaking in, but he continues to cause more and more damage as he loots everything of value and then, when there is nothing of value remaining, finding another house to break into -- and then another -- and another. That is his nature.

And, I should add, there is hardly a more important thing for any of us to do now than understand why the Jews are pushing our society over the brink of ruin, and then to oppose them by every means possible.

Mike Wallace's Lesson

Last week I was on the CBS program 60 Minutes II, with Mike Wallace. I also was on 60 Minutes five years ago, and both times I came away with the same feeling of unreality, the feeling that I had just been talking to an alien from Mars instead of to another person whose views are different from my own. Mike Wallace and I were on such different wavelengths in both interviews that there simply was no connection between us. He was doing his part of the interviews, and I was doing my part, but we weren't communicating with each other at all. That's what I want to talk about with you today.

If you saw the 60 Minutes II interview last week this will be easier for you, but I'll try to make things clear even to those who didn't see the interview. Mike Wallace and I talked about various things in last week's interview. We talked about my music company, Resistance Records; we talked about the Oklahoma City bombing and who was responsible for it; we even talked about the role of the Jews in destroying American society; and of course, we agreed on nothing. I tried my best to be civil throughout the interview, however, and I believe that I succeeded in that. Looking at the interview objectively, I was polite, and I expressed myself in a reasonable and calm manner. The principal thing I expressed in last week's interview was my concern about the increasing alienation of our young people, about the alienating influences in our society -- influences such as MTV, which is part of the same Jewish media conglomerate for which Mike Wallace works. I pointed out that my own efforts were aimed at countering these alienating influences and helping our young people find their roots.

Mike Wallace's reaction to me was that I was expressing "hatred" and that my "mouthings" are "vile" to him, as a Jew. To him my concern for my people, for their welfare and their survival, are "hatred" and are "vile." I find it remarkable that he should express himself so forthrightly in front of the huge television audience that we had, that he should make so clear the profound difference between my aims, as a White American, and his aims, as a Jew -- and in the interview last week he explicitly identified himself as a Jew. One might have expected him to say the things he said if the television audience were entirely or even mostly Jewish. But of course, it's not. Jews make up only two and a half per cent of the U.S. population and probably about the same percentage of the people who were tuned to 60 Minutes II last week.

Mike Wallace is a Jew, with the very special biases and viewpoints Jews have, but he also is a very experienced showman. He has been doing 60 Minutes interviews for many years, and he certainly should be aware of the makeup of his audience. During both his interviews with me was assuming that most Americans agree with him: that most Americans believe that to express concern for the alienation of our young people is "hatred." He was assuming that any expression of disagreement with the policies of his boss, Sumner Redstone, who is using MTV to popularize "rap" and other elements of Black culture among young Whites and to encourage young White girls to have sex with Blacks -- he was assuming that my expression of disagreement with these policies is "vile" to the American people, to the television audience. In fact, Mike Wallace went so far as to say that I'm insane for having the views that I have. In the interview five years ago he actually called me a "nut" on the air, and in last week's interview he had one of his cohorts, Morris Dees of the Southern Poverty Law Center, come on the air and tell everyone that I'm crazy for believing what I believe.

Now, if I had no contact with the American public besides television, I might be worried that Mike Wallace is right, and that my views are vile to most Americans, and that maybe I am crazy for expressing vile views in public. But I do have other ways of knowing what people are thinking besides watching television. Unfortunately, however, that's not the case with most Americans. Most Americans learn what the public is thinking by watching television. On their TV screens they see reporters stopping people on the sidewalk and asking them what they think about some current event or some government policy, and they believe they're getting a genuine sampling of public opinion, whereas in many cases they're not.

I can go out with a cameraman and do 20 sidewalk interviews. Then when I get back to my studio I can select the three that express the opinion I want the public to believe is the majority opinion and discard the 17 that express contrary opinions. Or if I want to be a bit more subtle in my deception, I can save one of the contrary opinions and put it with the three that say what I want the public to believe, making it look as if 75 per cent of the public have the approved opinion -- that is, three out of four -- instead of the 15 per cent -- that is, the three out of 20 -- which actually expressed that opinion. Most people want to have whatever opinions they believe most other people have. They don't want to have unpopular opinions. They are afraid of being considered odd or different or out of step with everyone else.

That's why skewing the reporting of exit polls can influence the outcome of an election. If the TV reporters tell you early on election day, shortly after the polls have opened, "It looks like Tweedledee is winning by a landslide; nine out of ten voters leaving the polls are saying they voted for Tweedledee" -- if the reporter tells you that, and if you are an average person who hadn't really made up his mind yet, when you go to vote later that day you're more likely to vote for Tweedledee than if you hadn't already been told that most other people are voting for him. Even if you'd been leaning toward Tweedledum, you might change your mind and vote for Tweedledee instead, just to be on the winning side.

Even more effective in deceiving the public as to what other people are thinking is television entertainment. If a leading character -- an alpha character -- in a TV show expresses an opinion, and the other characters agree with him or praise him for his opinion, you are inclined to assign weight to that opinion. You are persuaded at a subconscious level that if you express that opinion yourself, you will gain approval from those around you. And if a character with low esteem expresses an opinion and is then ridiculed or criticized by the other characters for expressing that opinion, you will be persuaded that the opinion is an unpopular one, whether it actually is or not, and you will be less likely to express it yourself.

Is that the sort of thing Mike Wallace was trying to do when he called me a "hater" and a "nut" and said that my views are "vile"?

What do you think?

I think that is exactly what he was trying to do. And I'm sure that he succeeded with some of the people watching 60 Minutes II last week -- though with fewer members of the audience than five years ago, when I had my earlier interview with him. I say that because I have other ways of sampling public opinion than listening to what Mike Wallace says about it. For example, I mentioned last week that I was on Bob Grant's radio talk show in New York recently, and that three quarters of the callers agreed with me. I was surprised at that response myself, especially in New York.

Of course, seven or eight callers to the Bob Grant Show aren't sufficient for convincing statistics, but I've seen a number of other indications that the public is not quite as willing to march in ideological lockstep with Mike Wallace and Morris Dees as it was five years ago. On 60 Minutes II last week Wallace's buddy Dees estimated that perhaps two tenths of one percent of the public is out of step. That may have been true five years ago, but the actual figure today is more than ten times that: somewhere between two and five percent of the adult White population. Actually, White Americans are getting off the bandwagon of Political Correctness in droves.

I receive hundreds of letters every week from listeners, and dozens of those letters come from people who had been Politically Correct, people who had been willing to accept as true whatever lies were told them by Mike Wallace or Morris Dees or any other Politically Correct authority figures. They had believed the television image of the world and had tried to conform themselves to it, but no longer. They no longer believe the television lies; they no longer try to conform their ideas to the false image of public opinion presented by Mike Wallace and the rest. They have seen too many contradictions, too much evidence that the world isn't really the way their television tells them it is.

Of course, they should have seen that five years ago, ten years ago, 20 years ago. Television always has lied to us, presented to us a deliberately falsified image of the world and of public opinion. Television since its beginning in the 1950s has been solidly under Jewish control and has been used to promote a false image designed to benefit Jewish interests. From the beginning the American television audience has been told that all races are equal, that mixing of the races is good, and that anyone who disagrees is a "hater." The public, persuaded by television that everyone except a few despicable "haters" believed these things, tried hard to believe them itself. Most people tried to ignore the contradictions; they tried to ignore the evidence that the policies being promoted by the media and forced on them by the government were destroying their society. They tried to pretend that everything was getting better and better, that all the changes being promoted by the media and the government were "progress."

As the contradictions mounted, however, pretending became more and more difficult for many people. The real lemmings were still able to believe the image of the world they saw on their television screens and to ignore everything that contradicted that image, but the thinking minority gradually began to fall out of step. They saw on the one hand Bill Clinton's disgusting behavior in office, and on the other hand the media still treating him like a national leader and the majority of the public still willing to vote for him, and the thinking minority began to balk.

They had seen the Persian Gulf War on television and had asked themselves, "Is this war really necessary?" But they had been willing to go along with the crowd and not question the assurances they received from their television screens that the war really was necessary and good, and some of them even cheered along with the lemmings when Baghdad was bombed. But then a few years later when Madeleine Albright and Bill Clinton began bombing Belgrade and killing thousands of Serb civilians in order to force Serbia into submission to the New World Order the way Iraq had been forced into submission, and the media assured them that this new war also was necessary and good, they balked. The lemmings continued to cheer, but more and more of the thinking portion of the public fell out of step with them.

They had believed all of the "Holocaust" stories they had seen on their television screens in the 1970s and the 1980s, but in the 1990s, as the Jews more and more blatantly began demanding "reparations" from everyone in sight and the media supported every Jewish demand, they began to ask questions: Does the world really owe the Jews a living? Are the Jews really the only deserving victims of the Second World War? Why is it that the Jews are the only ones to receive reparations? What about all of the victims of the communists before, during, and after the war? Why don't we ever hear about them? Is someone trying to cover something up? Are the Jews really the innocent victims they claim to be?

Even the thinking minority had accepted the television portrayal of race relations. Blacks were basically good people who deserved to be integrated into White society, where they would be able to contribute much to the benefit of everyone, and we all would live happily together forever after. The only people who opposed the multiculturalizing of our society were violent, ignorant, White rednecks -- truly despicable people who spent their time bombing Black churches and dragging Blacks behind their pickup trucks. They overlooked the Black crime rate and the Black rioting and burning of American cities in the 1960s and accepted the media explanation of these things as justified expressions of Black anger provoked by White racism. But as White society bent over backwards further and further to give advantages to Blacks -- Affirmative Action in hiring and promotions; special quotas and lowered standards for admission to universities, and special scholarships and other aid after they were in -- and as it became clear that none of this favoritism was improving Black performance or Black behavior, thinking Whites began to wonder where it was all headed.

It took a while for the thinking minority of the White public to begin figuring things out because the mass media did everything possible to keep them confused, but gradually they began to notice things and put things together. They saw what happened to their neighborhoods when Blacks moved in. They saw what happened to their schools as the Black enrolment went up. They gradually began to see through the deceptive way in which the news media reported interracial crime, minimizing or even ignoring Black crimes against White victims while maximizing any White transgression against non-Whites.

Perceptive Whites noticed the unrelenting, hateful media pressure against White South Africa through the 1970s and 1980s and early 1990s, always painting White South Africans as evil and oppressive, always pushing for boycotts and other punitive measures against South Africa, and always pushing for the Whites who built South Africa to turn the government of their country over to the Blacks there. And they noticed the sudden loss of interest by the media in South Africa after the Whites there foolishly yielded to media pressure and gave their country to the Blacks. The perceptive Whites here found out, despite the sudden loss of media interest, about the surge in Black crime in South Africa: about the rapes of White women, the murder of White farmers, the reign of terror over their fellow Blacks by Black witch doctors. They found out, despite the media, about the sinking of South Africa back into the jungle, into savagery. They noticed, despite minimal media coverage, the seizing of White farms by the Black dictator in neighboring Rhodesia, now called "Zimbabwe." And they remembered how the media had assured them, more than 20 years ago, that everything would be much better in Rhodesia once the Blacks were allowed to rule there.

And much more recently, perceptive Whites in America have noticed the rioting by Blacks and Asians in England, they have noticed the rise in non-White crime and the attacks on Whites by non-Whites in England and the proliferation of Black and Asian gangs there. They have noticed the similarity between non-White behavior in America and South Africa and Rhodesia and England. They have noticed how this non-White behavior always becomes worse, not better, as the non-Whites gain political and economic power. They have noticed that the media always tell the same lies about racial conflict and make the same excuses for non-White behavior, no matter in what country it occurs. And they have wondered whether, perhaps, they are seeing a pattern that tells them something important about racial differences and about the motivations of the controlled media. They are wondering whether, perhaps, there is a lesson for them about what to expect in America if the present demographic trends are permitted to continue and to give us a non-White majority here in another few decades.

And the perceptive minority of White people notice other things too. They notice President Bush's obsequious behavior in the presence of Ariel Sharon, the Butcher of Beirut, during the latter's visit to the White House this week. Sharon, remember, is the Jewish war criminal who deliberately provoked the current violence in Palestine last year in order to improve his chances of becoming Israel's prime minister. Mr. Bush pretends to be very concerned about restoring peace to the Middle East, but it is obvious that he is simply dancing to whatever tune is played by the Jews. Any government that welcomes a creature such as Sharon -- any President who hugs such a creature for the television cameras -- can elicit only disgust from decent people, and there still are a few decent people left in America.

There's one other thing I'm sure is noticed by perceptive Americans. Every time I have been interviewed by the Jewish media during the past six years -- not just by Mike Wallace, but by all of them -- and the subject of the Oklahoma City bombing has come up, the suggestion is made that the reason Timothy McVeigh blew up the Federal building in Oklahoma City is that he read a novel that I wrote 25 years ago, The Turner Diaries, in which there is a fictional bombing of the FBI headquarters in Washington. This happened again last week: Mike Wallace implicitly blamed me for the Oklahoma City bombing because Tim McVeigh had read my book. I had to point out to him what should have been obvious to every perceptive American that what provoked the Oklahoma City bombing was not my book but the attack by the Clinton government -- by Bill Clinton and Janet Reno -- on the Branch Davidian church in Waco, Texas, exactly two years earlier.

McVeigh was outraged that the Clinton government had murdered 90 innocent people, mostly women and children, in the completely unjustified attack on the church. He had traveled to Waco during the FBI siege of the church and expressed his outrage there, he had said in court at the time of his sentencing what his motivation was, and he had explained his motivation in detail to writers who interviewed him later in prison. But the media people, Mike Wallace and all the rest of them, always cover for the Clinton government and try to place the blame on me instead. The lemmings don't notice that, but perceptive people do.

And as perceptive people notice more and more of these things, more and more of them fall out of step with Mike Wallace and Morris Dees and the whole structure of opinion control that the Jews have erected to keep White Americans in line and in step.

And I'll tell you one thing I noticed in watching the broadcast of my 60 Minutes II interview last week. I try to be objective when I view such things -- I try to put myself in the shoes of the average, intelligent member of the audience and see it as he would see it -- and my impression was that Mike Wallace and Morris Dees and CBS and the whole, rotten, Jewish structure of which they are part looked weak. They looked weaker and more vulnerable than I have ever seen them. When at the end of the interview Mike Wallace grinned his very Jewish grin and told me how vile my views are, he was speaking for his fellow Jews and for their liberal fellow travelers -- for the feminists and the homosexuals and the rest -- but he was speaking for fewer ordinary White Americans than ever before. And my impression was that that showed.

Fast and Furious

Last week I gave an interview to an English-language radio station in Teheran. The program was "The Islamic Voice of Iran." We talked about a number of things, including Ariel Sharon's visit to the White House, which was taking place at the time, and about President Bush's popularity ratings. The Iranian interviewer asked me whether Bush would take a more sensible, pro-American policy in the Middle East or would continue taking orders from Israel, to the detriment of American interests, the way the Clinton administration had.

Of course, I explained to him that there was really no difference between Republicans and Democrats in that regard. They both dance to whatever tune the Jews are playing at the moment, and that George Bush would no more dare to disobey the Jews than Bill Clinton would. I told the Iranian interviewer that there are minor differences between the Republican Party and the Democratic Party, with the Democrats pandering a bit more to the welfare class and the Republicans paying a bit more lip service to things such as military preparedness and energy production, but that on the really essential issues -- immigration, racial policy, media control, foreign policy -- both parties do what they're told and don't give the Jews any back talk.

The Iranian had a hard time understanding this. If one party -- the Democrats, say -- were controlled by Jews and supported Jewish interests, then surely there would be another party -- presumably the Republicans -- representing the interests of the American people. He couldn't understand how the Jews, making up only 2.5 per cent of the U.S. population, could have the whole political process under their control and in particular could dictate U.S. foreign policy in the Middle East, regardless of who is in the White House or which party controls the Congress. What about the other 97.5 per cent of the population? They also have interests, and they can vote. Why aren't their interests supported by some political party?

The difficulty my Iranian interviewer had in understanding how politics works in America has two facets. One of these is the dominant influence the mass media of news and entertainment, which are largely in the hands of the country's very small Jewish minority, have on public opinion and attitudes, on the mass culture, and on the political process. In Iran tradition is much more important in determining public opinion. And Iran is a much more homogeneous country, at least in a cultural and religious sense, than is the United States. In America the media have to a large extent weaned the people away from their traditions and from their cultural and religious roots and substituted a made-in-Hollywood trash-culture with ersatz traditions in their place. The media are increasingly important in influencing public opinion everywhere in the developed countries -- even in Iran, no doubt -- but nowhere has the process been as thorough and as destructive as it has been in the United States.

A second barrier to understanding is the subtlety and indirection that is used by the media bosses in achieving their aims. They almost never make a head-on attack against the traditions or values of the host population. They look for conflict, for inconsistency, for vice or hypocrisy or weakness, and they exploit it to gain a foothold. Then they use one facet of popular belief or tradition to undermine another. For example, they will proclaim themselves champions of "fair play," and then they will persuade the public that fair play requires that no distinction be made between Asians and Europeans in setting immigration policy. If we let Englishmen and Germans and Swedes into America, then it wouldn't be fair to keep out Vietnamese and Chinese and Pakistanis, they tell us.

Or they will play on the average American's resentment of governmental interference in his private affairs to promote the idea that homosexuality is just as normal as heterosexuality and that neither the government nor individuals should make a distinction between the two. What people do in the privacy of their bedrooms is no one else's business, therefore the government should require landlords, employers, Boy Scout troops, and everyone else to treat homosexuals just like heterosexuals: a bit of a non sequitur, but the media have been remarkably successful at using such illogical arguments to shift public opinion on a number of issues.

And because the media are able to influence public opinion so strongly, all the politicians, Republicans as well as Democrats, dance to their tune. The politicians understand that the tiny Jewish minority, only 2.5 per cent of the population, through their control of the media are the single most important influence on the public's perception of issues, of government policies, and of the politicians themselves -- and consequently are the single most important influence on the outcome of elections. And it is for this reason that everyone can safely count on George Bush's policy toward Israel being whatever the Jews want it to be.

Anyway, although I explained this as clearly as I could to my Iranian interrogator, I think he didn't really believe me. He was ready to accept the fact that the Jews are a very bad influence on American policy in the Middle East, but he couldn't accept the fact that through their control of the mass media of news and entertainment they have made irrelevant and meaningless the whole idea of mass democracy. He couldn't assimilate the idea that party politics in America has become just a shell game to keep the rubes confused about what's really happening and who's running the country. He knew that Jews are bad news, but he couldn't grasp the fact that the most powerful country in the world, economically and militarily, is so totally in their malign grip.

And really, when I try to put myself in the Iranian's shoes, it's hard for me to believe it myself: a mere 2.5 per cent of the population, a historically despised and hated group who have been kicked out of every country in Europe, and there's not a single mainstream American politician brave enough to defy them; a tiny, clannish group who have a stranglehold on the mighty American nation; a case of the tail wagging the dog. How do they do it? It doesn't seem possible.

Well, of course, it is possible, and I'll tell you how they do it: they do it with images and myths. They do it by controlling the perceptions that most people have of the world around themselves. The Jews create myths about what the world is like and then generate false images to match the myths. And they project these myths and false images of the world into the minds of their hosts.

I'll give you a specific example of this. There is a new film out by Universal Pictures. It's called The Fast and the Furious. It's a film directed at White teenagers, a film designed to give them a particular image of the world and instill in them a myth about the way the world works. It's a film about modern, urban teenagers -- specifically street gangs in Los Angeles -- and cars and street racing. That might seem harmless enough, but the street racing is just a gimmick on which to hang the message, and that message is that the world is multicultural, and it's good that it's multicultural. It's good not to live in a White world, with White friends and White role models and White values and White standards and traditions. That's boring. That's not cool.

The message is that there's nothing special about being White. The message is that if one is White, then one should hang out with Blacks and Asians and mestizos. One should behave like non-Whites, talk like them, dress like them, be like them. That's what's cool. That's what's sexy. That's what everybody who's really cool is doing. And when you feel like having some sex, you just reach for whoever is nearest. It doesn't matter at all what race the other person is. If you're a White girl, it's especially cool to have sex with a Black or Asian or mestizo male.

That's the most obvious message of the film, but actually it's more than that. It's not really that the film says race doesn't matter, that we're really all the same; that culture doesn't matter, that all cultures are equivalent. The film says that Whites should become non-White, because non-White is better. The cultural milieu of the film is not raceless or a little of this and a little of that. The cultural milieu is Black. The culture is hip-hop. The music is hip-hop. The clothing style, with the baggy shorts and the rest, is hip-hop. It's Black. That is the world into which White teenagers should blend, the world to which they should subordinate themselves.

Surely, White teenagers aren't actually absorbing that message. Are they? Yes, unfortunately, many of them are. The Fast and the Furious is drawing bigger crowds than any other film produced by Hollywood this season. It grossed $78 million in its first ten days. White teenagers are flocking to it more than to any other movie. The attraction, of course, is the action, the street racing, the exciting car stunts. That's the gimmick that pulls them in. But that's not the message. The message -- which of course, is subliminal: that is, which is intended to change the kids' perception of the world at a subconscious level -- is exactly what I just described: it's cool to be part of the hip-hop culture; it's cool to be multicultural; it's cool not to act White, think White, or be White.

That's the message, and it's a Jewish message: Jewish in its conception, Jewish in its promotion, Jewish in its genocidal intent.

You think I'm imagining things? I'll read to you from a story about the film in last Saturday's edition of the Los Angeles Times:

Hollywood was stunned when the youth-oriented action film The Fast and the Furious streaked past the competition to become the number-one movie.... With its relatively unknown cast of Latinos, Asians, and African-Americans, heavy doses of high-speed chases, and a driving hip-hop soundtrack, the movie defied expectations.

...But the teen-oriented movie's success isn't so surprising when one glimpses the youthful crowds flocking to theaters.... With their ultra-baggy cargo shorts, doo-rags wrapped around their heads, and bodies festooned with tattoos and piercings, the look of these young moviegoers mirrors the multiethnic melange of actors on the screen....

Hollywood likes to pride itself on being ahead of the cultural curve, but with last summer's sassy white-versus-black cheerleading comedy Bring It On grossing $68.4 million domestically and this winter's Save the Last Dance, with its once-taboo interracial dating, raking in more than $90 million in North America alone, the studios have only begun to catch up with the colorblind nature of today's MTV generation.

Rob Cohen, who directed The Fast and the Furious, said the film not only reflects today's "multiculti" youth culture without purposely drawing attention to it, but depicts what is really going on. When the movie opened, it drew a cross-section of races, Cohen said. Surveys taken at theaters where The Fast and the Furious played showed that 50 per cent of moviegoers were white, 24 per cent were Hispanic, 10 per cent were black, and 11 per cent were Asian. "I look at this and go, 'This is exactly what I'm talking about,'" Cohen said.... Attracting a young audience across the country -- a mainstay of big summer popcorn hits -- The Fast and the Furious has grossed an estimated $78 million in less than two weeks and is on track to make well over $100 million.

I want to emphasize a couple of things in what I just read to you, besides the fact that the director of the film is the Jew Rob Cohen and the studio is Universal Pictures, owned by the Jew Edgar Bronfman. First, note that Mr. Cohen is very much aware of the racial angle in his film. That's all he talks about, not the racing stunts. And note that he says he put the racial propaganda into his film in way that would not "draw attention to it": that is, he put it in as subliminal propaganda.

One other thing: the story in the Los Angeles Times implies that this film and other films like it are imitating society, not the other way around. But that's not true. These Jewish films are propaganda deliberately designed to move society in the direction the Jews want it to go. White kids didn't start wearing baggy shorts and backward baseball caps and listening to rap music and using jive talk just because that's what young Blacks were doing: it was Jewish films and Jewish television and Jewish advertising that pushed them in this direction, that persuaded them it is cool to imitate Blacks.

The Times story refers to the studios catching up with "today's MTV generation." But really, how did it become the "MTV generation"? That name is appropriate just because MTV has been the single largest influence on White teenagers in moving them away from their roots in their own race and making rootless cosmopolitans out of them. MTV has been the foremost promoter of the hip-hop lifestyle among young Whites. And I hardly need to remind you that it is the very Jewish Sumner Redstone, originally known as Murray Rothstein to his parents, who owns MTV. Redstone's MTV and his Paramount Pictures studio may be a little ahead of the other Hollywood studios, but they're all pushing in the same direction as hard as they can.

This is an essential point: namely, that the Jewish media are pushing our society, and not the other way around, and the Jews are understandably reluctant to admit that. Last Saturday's Los Angeles Times story interviewed another Jewish film producer in this regard:

Marc Abraham, one of the producers of Bring It On, noted: "There is a much more interracial aspect in today's culture than the way this country used to be. Any movie that reflects that -- and it doesn't mean they'll all be hits like The Fast and the Furious -- will ring true with the audience"

As I indicated, that is deliberate misdirection. And there's more misdirection in the Times story. It also interviews the Black director of Sumner Redstone's racemixing film Save the Last Dance:

"The movie business is certainly catching up with what's happening in society," said Thomas Carter, who directed Save the Last Dance. "Youth culture has been shifting a long time.... Places like MTV are right on the edge and totally involved in the change. In filmmaking we lag behind."

But of course, Redstone's MTV, which as Carter notes is "totally involved in the change," is into filmmaking too. Anyway, it's really an artificial distinction to contrast Jewish television with Jewish cinema. Redsone isn't the only Jewish media boss who is deeply involved in both media.

One of Bronfman's subordinates, the Jew Marc Shmuger, says it a little more plainly, and again I quote from last Saturday's Los Angeles Times story:

"I think the segregated groupings are breaking down in today's America, and I think today's movie audience is a complex mix," said Marc Shmuger, vice chairman of Universal Pictures, which released The Fast and the Furious. But Shmuger warned that if the movie industry starts making multiethnic movies "in a calculating and cynical fashion," the audience will sense that and stay away.

In other words, keep the propaganda subtle, keep it subliminal, so that we don't tip off the goyim that it's really propaganda. I'll read one more section from the Los Angeles Times story:

Just as The Fast and the Furious shows young people of all races gathered in large groups unmindful of their racial differences and not hung up on sex, Gary Scott Thompson, one of the film's writers, said today's young movie audiences also are that way. "It used to be that a boy and a girl would go on a date," he said. "Now what's happening is groups of kids who are friends -- multiracial boys and girls -- all move in date packs together. It's like a date, but they don't consider it dating. Some of them might neck; some of them might not. None of them think anything much about it. They are much more open when talking about sex.... They've broken down the cultural barriers."... Rob Friedman, vice chairman of Paramount Pictures Motion Picture Group, said the studio began noticing the colorblind nature of young audiences with its 1999 high school pigskin drama Varsity Blues. "It's really about their peers, regardless of race, and to a certain extent gender as well," Friedman said. "When it came to Save the Last Dance, it became more and more apparent young people don't care whether the relationship is interracial. The music is great, the story is great."

As I've already mentioned, Paramount Pictures belongs to Sumner Redstone, and I hardly need to tell you that his employee Rob Friedman is a Jew, like nearly all the other executives at Paramount Pictures.

This new development of White teenagers running in "date packs," as the scriptwriter put it, with Blacks, Asians, and mestizos and having very casual and very interracial sex did not evolve spontaneously, as the media bosses and their employees would have us believe. It has been promoted deliberately by Hollywood and by television and by Madison Avenue. Sumner Redstone's MTV may be a bit bolder in this regard than the other Jewish media, but all of them have been working together for decades toward the same goal, and that goal is the annihilation of our people. They say, "Oh, we're just reflecting with our films and our TV shows and our magazine ads what your society has become all by itself," but that is a conscious, calculated lie. They know exactly what they have done and are doing, and one can easily sense them gloating over it when one reads their remarks in the Los Angeles Times.

I've said this a thousand times already in different words, but when we permitted the Jews to come into our society and take over our mass media of news and entertainment -- our newspapers and our radio broadcasting networks and our motion picture and advertising industries and then television broadcasting -- we handed them the weapons with which they intended from the beginning to destroy us and now are destroying us. This program of theirs to corrupt and destroy us didn't begin with the Second World War and the so-called "Holocaust." It is a consequence of their nature. The "Holocaust" was not the cause of their destructive behavior, but rather a consequence.

If you believe that I am hallucinating when I say that, see for yourself what Jews such as Edgar Bronfman and Sumner Redstone are producing for the entertainment of our children, and you try to explain it in any other way. I know that the majority of our own people, lemmings that they are, are dancing to the Jews' tune now, along with the politicians. That is a shame, but it in no way excuses us from our task. Many of those who have become blinded by the Jews and have become collaborators of the Jews will unavoidably become "collateral damage" in the struggle and the chaos that lie ahead, but we must do whatever is necessary to free our people from the spell cast over them by the Jews. To that task I have consecrated my life, and I invite each of you to do likewise.

Why We Deserve Their Contempt

I receive letters from many people who tell me about the things that concern them -- especially about the things that they believe are important and that they want me to address in one of these broadcasts. Their concerns cover a wide range. Some people tell me, "You should talk about the Freemasons. Masons are involved in every aspect of the conspiracy to destroy our civilization and impose the New World Order on us."

Well, maybe so. I really don't know much about Freemasonry. I do know some people who are Masons, though, and I'm quite sure that if the Masonic organizations to which they belong are engaged in some sort of sinister conspiracy, the fellows I know haven't been let in on it. It could be that at the higher levels -- 32nd degree and so on -- there's a lot of nasty stuff going on that they don't tell the rank and file about. Certainly many men who should have been hanged, drawn, and quartered for their crimes against our people -- mostly politicians of one stripe or another -- are or have been Masons. But I just don't know enough about Freemasonry to talk about it.

Other people who write to me are quite concerned about the Federal Reserve System. They tell me that it's illegal, that there's some sort of legal irregularity in the way the system was set up. They tell me that it's a system designed to enrich a few bankers at the expense of everyone else. They tell me that it's a Jewish system, and they point to the very Jewish chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, Alan Greenspan. And they tell me that the Federal Reserve System is at the root of our problems and that I should talk about it.

Well, the reason I don't talk about the Federal Reserve System is, first, I don't know anything about it or about banking systems in general. I've heard too many people talking about the Federal Reserve who also don't know anything about it, and I don't want to embarrass myself. Second, even if everything these Federal Reserve enthusiasts say about the Federal Reserve System being illegal and a big drain on the economy is true, I'm not convinced that it's something I need to explain in an American Dissident Voices broadcast. Perhaps I'm wrong. Perhaps someday I'll understand it well enough and believe that it's important enough for me to explain the problems associated with it in a clear way to everyone else.

Most of my broadcasts have been related in one way or another to the two issues that I believe are most important for us to understand and to deal with. These central issues, around which everything else revolves, are race and the Jews. We can figure out how to straighten out our banking system after we have regained control of our mass media and won the demographic battle. If we don't win that, we'll have no chance to deal with banking or anything else.

Of course, I do talk about other issues. For example, I've discussed various aspects of feminism in my broadcasts. But every time I've talked about feminism at any length I have pointed out that the principal promoters of this pathology have been Jews. Certainly the 1963 book by Jewess Betty Friedan, The Feminine Mystique, was the Das Kapital of the modern feminist movement, and a great many of the other feminist writers and publicists also were Jews. More important, the feminist movement would have remained on the fringes of our society, populated mostly by lesbians, if it had not been for the enthusiastic and continuing support of the Jewish mass media, which made feminism Politically Correct on college campuses.

And I have pointed out that the reason feminism is important is not that it has made many women neurotic and has made many men as well as many women very unhappy, but that it is race-threatening. Feminism is not important because of its effects on the economy by changing the composition of the work force. It is not important because it opens up new careers for women or because it relieves men of the need to be chivalrous or protective toward women. Feminism is important for just one reason, and that reason is racial. Feminism has drastically lowered the White birthrate: it is now well below the replacement rate, and the race will die out if the birthrate is not raised once again above the replacement level. Even more immediately threatening, the White race, which is the race on which feminism has wreaked its havoc, will be swamped by the non-White races, where feminism has not taken hold. Feminism takes women out of the home and puts them in the workplace. Feminism leads women to choose careers other than motherhood. Feminism, all by itself, will destroy us unless we stamp it out the way we would an epidemic of hoof-and-mouth disease: ruthlessly and thoroughly. To summarize: feminism is a racial threat, and it has been made into a racial threat by the Jews, who have been and still are its principal promoters.

Communism is another example. There certainly are people who manage to talk about communism without mentioning either race or the Jews. Conservatives are pretty adept at that sort of thing: at dodging the real issues. The John Birch Society, for example, will tell you that communism has nothing to do with race or with the Jews; it has only to do with freedom and with private property. Many Christians will tell you that the bad thing about communism is that it is atheistic: "godless communism," they call it, and to them that's what is really important.

When I talk about communism, the Jews and race are central to the discussion. I talk about the Jews because they are the ones who designed and spread this plague. What would communism be without the Jew Karl Marx? How could it ever have gotten the Russian people by the throat without all the Jews who constituted the majority of Lenin's accomplices during the revolutionary period?

Lenin himself was only a quarter Jewish, but most of the people who financed his revolutionary activities were full-blooded Jews, and so were the Bolshevik gangsters with whom he conspired: Radek, Trotsky, Kamenev, Zinoviev, Sverdlov, Uritsky, and the rest. Every foreign observer who visited the Soviet Union in its early days was struck by the huge preponderance of Jews among the commissars and other Soviet leaders. Without these Jews to finance, lead, and staff the revolution, the communist movement would still be meeting in cellars and back rooms in St. Petersburg trying to figure out how to seize control of the Russian government.

And without the Jewish apologists for communism in the media in the United States and elsewhere, the Soviet Union would have expired 50 years sooner than it did. It was Jewish media influence -- concealing the true nature of communism, concealing communist atrocities and portraying the Soviets in the best possible light, as heroic pioneers for social justice -- that made it politically feasible for the United States and Britain to become allies of the Soviet Union in the Second World War in order to crush anti-communist Germany and then to turn half of Europe over to communist rule after the war.

Of course, there were many non-Jewish activists, leaders, and propagandists involved in the spread and rise of communism -- Stalin is the most outstanding example -- and most of the Jews of the world never belonged to a communist party or made a pro-communist movie or wrote an editorial for the New York Times favoring communism.

That is the smokescreen always raised by the Jews and their defenders when the issue of the Jewish involvement in communism comes up: there were many non-Jewish communists, and the majority of the Jews weren't participants in communism. The fact remains, however, that Jews not only formulated the essence of communism -- they made it what it is -- but they also played an absolutely essential role in its triumph. Without the Jews, communism, like feminism, never would have gotten off the ground. That is why any discussion of communism that doesn't mention the Jews is meaningless and can only be misleading.

And why was communism such a terrible thing? Was it because it demanded a redistribution of wealth? Was it because it threatened the incomes and property of the capitalists? Was it because it was atheistic?

Hardly. Communism was full of unworkable economic theories -- unworkable because they weren't in accord with human nature -- and it put forward some really nutty ideas about history and other things. But these were not what made communism such a disaster. The evil in communism was not that it took property away from those who had earned it or inherited it and gave it to those who had not; the evil was not that it discouraged individual initiative or that it eventually made an economic basket case out of every nation on which it was imposed. The evil in communism was that it preached egalitarianism. It denied the differences in human quality among individuals and among races. Worse, it inverted the natural ranking of human beings. It appealed to the worst to bring down the best. It appealed to the resentful losers to destroy those who had been successful. It preached that the first shall be last, and the last shall be first. And it used these egalitarian teachings to justify destroying the best of our people wherever it gained the ability to do so.

It was communist egalitarianism that justified the murder of 30 million Ukrainians and Russians -- the kulaks, the successful small farmers -- because they resisted being herded into collectives along with the ne'er-do-wells. It was communist egalitarianism that justified the mass murder of the Polish professional and military elites, in the Katyn forest and elsewhere, in order to "equalize" the Polish nation and also justified doing the same thing in Estonia and Latvia and Lithuania when those nations fell under Soviet rule.

Communism preached that the talented and successful people, the people with character and ability, were no better than anyone else: that anyone could become a successful composer or scientist or industrialist if he were given the same education and the same advantages as those who had been successful. So if the successful people resisted being "equalized," then nothing really was lost in killing them, because they were simply replaceable human units like everyone else. That was the evil in communism: it killed the best of our people in order to make more room for the worst. It did an enormous amount of genetic damage to our race.

And that's the same egalitarian teaching used today to justify every sort of racially destructive policy in America, from Affirmative Action to open borders. Since Blacks are essentially the same as Whites, except that they've been held back by White racism, it does no racial harm to give jobs and promotions to Blacks that otherwise would have gone to Whites, say the egalitarians. It does no racial harm to boost Blacks up the socioeconomic ladder so that they can be more easily integrated into White society -- and can more easily intermarry with Whites. Since European Americans are essentially the same as Mexican mestizos and Haitian Negroes, why should we exclude them from our country? Sharing our land and our wealth with them can't possibly degrade us as a nation or weaken us in any way. What difference does it make if they outbreed us and eventually replace us? Everything will be the same, because we're all equal. We all have the same creative potential, the same potential for building and maintaining civilization. Right?

And I hardly need to tell you that the people who are pushing the party line of racial egalitarianism in America today are the same people who covered for the communists while they were butchering the best of our people in Europe for the sake of individual and class egalitarianism. The same people are running Hollywood and television and the New York Times today who were running Hollywood and radio and the New York Times while the communists were "equalizing" Ukraine and Russia and Poland and the Baltic states before their media allies got us into the Second World War in order to keep the Germans from stamping out communism -- and the people responsible for communism.

I'll mention one other thing in this regard. A lot of people believe that the Jews pushing racial egalitarianism in America today are a kinder, gentler bunch than the Jews who were pushing communism in Europe 50, 60, or 70 years ago -- Jews such as Leon Trotsky or Lazar Kaganovich or Ilya Ehrenburg or the unnamed secret police or gulag commissars, with the blood of millions of our people on their hands. It isn't so. The Jews in America today cannot order the arrest of their enemies or potential enemies by the thousands, gloat over them while they are being tortured in the basements of police headquarters around the country, and then have them disposed of with a bullet in the back of the head the way they did in Europe. But they would like to. The Jews of Hollywood hate us with the same insane hatred that the Jewish secret police commissars had for the Polish officers and intellectuals they butchered by the thousands in the Katyn forest, with the same insane hatred that was expressed in propaganda commissar Ilya Ehrenburg's exhortations to the Red Army to rape German women and murder German children. They don't yet have the power to murder us wholesale the way they did in Ukraine and Estonia, but they would if they did.

Let me illustrate that. Timothy Blake Nelson is a Hollywood film director. One would never expect someone with the name Timothy Nelson to be a Jew, but in fact he is a Jew and has identified himself as such in various film-industry publications. He is the director of a new film -- O as in Othello -- due to be released next month by Lions Gate Films, although it actually was made by Miramax, a division of Disney. Disney is headed by the Jew Michael Eisner, and Miramax is headed by the Jewish Weinstein brothers, Bob and Harvey. The original production team at Miramax is entirely Jewish and is headed by executive producer Michael Levy. The point I am making is that everything about Nelson's new film is Jewish.

Although O is very loosely based on the Shakespeare play, Nelson's Othello character is not a Moor but a modern American Negro, who is incongruously named "Odin" -- and, believe me, the incongruity in naming a Negro after the chief god in the Germanic pantheon is deliberate. Everything in the film is deliberate. It is a calculated outpouring of hate against everything White, everything European, everything Aryan.

O, like so many other films coming from Hollywood recently, is aimed at promoting sex between teenaged White girls and Black males. If you believe most of the pre-release reviews, it is not an anti-White film at all, but rather a film aimed at breaking down racial barriers. It is a film against White racism, a film that will help to promote racial brotherhood and racial togetherness and all the other things so beloved of liberals and Christians.

If you read what Nelson himself has to say about his film you will get a different picture, however. It is a film calculated to rub the noses of Whites -- especially Southern Whites, especially upper-class Whites, especially racially conscious Whites -- in their wickedness and their inferiority. The setting of the film is a high-class boarding school for wealthy White kids in Charleston, South Carolina. Nelson gloats over the way in which the school has been forced to change its policies in order to comply with the "civil rights" laws his fellow Jews have imposed on the country. He gloats even more over the way in which the White students at the school have changed.

The White male characters in the film are inferior in every way to the Black hero, who takes possession of the most beautiful White girl in the school, Desi. Although Desi has surrendered herself willingly to him, the Black ultimately subjects her to a violent rape: a symbolic playing out of Jewish hatred against the White race. I'll read a a few selections from Nelson's own pre-production notes for the film, in which he expresses the feelings that he wants the film to evoke. You can read the notes for yourself from the Internet at the Lions Gate Web site. And of course, you do have to read between the lines. The Jews are never straightforward in expressing themselves, but Nelson's hatred comes through clearly enough in these pre-production notes:

First, a few words about why shooting in the South is important. Obviously, the story of Othello, and our modern version, deal with racial issues, and in no region in America is the history of racial oppression more apparent.

...I'm actually speaking more of the historical backdrop this region offers. Without populating the film with an assortment of crackers, we can give this story a specific and pointed setting. Place Odin on a distinctly antebellum campus, in a crisp school uniform, among the similarly dressed scions of former slave-owning families, and the rhetorical value is immeasurable.... Like the actress who'll play her, Desi is not only beautiful, she's extremely bright. She's also got poise, wisdom, and depth, which means she's not vulnerable to fads, nor is she indifferent to her past....

Odin is that terrific paradox: the one whom all at some level despise, but whom all, at some level, want to be. In this elite Southern academy, hip-hop language and culture abound, as kids casually appropriate the argot of places they wouldn't be caught dead in day or night; of characters with whom they'd be terrified speaking. It is beautifully ironic that against the backdrop of antebellum architecture, and in a town in which the old slave market still stands ... kids speak as they do in this film. These great grandchildren of plantation owners venerate the enraged great grandchildren of slaves, whose rhetoric, at close listening, is virulently anti-white.... Odin is born of the black underclass culture fetishised by his rich white classmates, while he simultaneously gets to mingle with those classmates as one of their own. The most beautiful girl in the school is his girlfriend. He'll get the same diploma his classmates will; he'll go to Duke.... Like the ... classroom, the dining hall should feel as though students' grandparents once dined there.... We want old South, so that ... it shouldn't be hard to contemplate Odin's forebears serving the grandparents mentioned above.... With very few exceptions, these kids should seem very white, and very rich.

Well, what I quoted is just a small taste of what the Jewish director has to say about his latest anti-White propaganda film. What is clear is his obsession with race and his burning hatred for us and his contempt. And we let these people -- Jews like Nelson and Eisner and the Weinstein brothers and Redstone and all the rest, with their films and their television and their advertising agencies and the rest of their media -- shape the opinions and the fashions of young Whites. So paralyzed with fear of being called "anti-Semites" or "racists" are we that we let them do it. Perhaps we deserve the contempt they have for us.

Subverting Freedom

Today I want to talk again about a growing threat to our freedom in America. In every White society, at all times, there have been people who valued freedom over comfort and security, and there have been people who valued comfort and security over freedom. Sometimes there are more of the one, and sometimes there are more of the other.

When I've talked about this subject in the past, I've characterized the freedom-lovers as masculine and the security-lovers as feminine because under natural conditions men are a bit more willing to take chances and try new things and want to keep their options open, and they also are a bit more concerned with general principles, and women are a bit more concerned with the security of home and hearth -- which is not to say, of course, that even the most adventurous and principled man has no concern for security or comfort or that even the most home-oriented woman has no concern for principles. It's just that on the average men are more freedom oriented, and women are more security-and-comfort oriented.

As times and manners change, however, the degree to which men value freedom changes. In America 226 years ago Patrick Henry proclaimed, "Give me liberty, or give me death," and in doing so he won the general admiration of his fellows and the agreement of a majority of them. Today many Americans would question his sanity, and more would laugh or sneer at him than agree with him. Partly this change is the consequence of dysgenic immigration and breeding policies during the past century, but it is due more to permissive child-raising practices and a less masculine, less demanding social and civic environment.

And there's another reason -- a very important reason -- for the devaluing of freedom in recent times, and that's the propaganda line of the mass media. The media have worked diligently to undermine Americans' attachment to certain specific freedoms -- the freedom to keep and bear arms, for example -- and at the same time have twisted and redefined the whole meaning of freedom, while cultivating a more feminine ideological climate in America. Sixty years ago Franklin Roosevelt did much to confuse the concept of freedom in the public mind by classifying comfort and security as "freedoms" and then elevating them to the status of freedom of speech and freedom of religion. He included in his enumeration of his so-called "four freedoms" freedom from want and freedom from fear, and the media bosses loved him for it.

Ever since then they have done everything they could to further twist meanings and compound the confusion, so that today the average couch potato or soccer mom can be persuaded easily that comfort -- that is, "freedom from want" -- and security -- that is, "freedom from fear" -- are indeed freedoms in the same sense as freedom of speech, freedom of assembly, freedom of religion, freedom of self-defense, and freedom from excessive governmental intrusion.

Really, I have had women -- and men too -- seriously defend the notion that freedom of speech needs to be balanced against comfort, in the form of freedom from feeling bad because of some "insensitive" remark by another person. These couch potato and soccer-mom types will argue, "Well, yes, we have freedom of speech, and that's important, but we can't have people saying or writing things that offend other people, things that hurt the feelings of other people."

For the most part, this is just simpleminded "feel-goodism." These soccer moms and couch potatoes just have very fuzzy notions about concepts such as freedom, and they've absorbed from TV the belief that there really is a "right" to feel good about oneself. Imagine where we'd be today if the Americans at Valley Forge in the winter of 1778 had believed that they had a "right" to be comfortable, and that "right" was as important as the right to be free from domination by a foreign government. In the last couple of centuries we have not only become softer physically and morally, but we've become a bit soft in the head as well.

But it's not just the couch potatoes: there are smarter people out there whose notions are not fuzzy at all but who also hate and fear our ideas about freedom. The radical feminists and the militant homosexuals and many of the leaders of various racial minorities understand the precariousness of their present positions. They understand that a very comfortable and confused White society that tolerates their antics now may someday lose its patience, especially if someone explains things. They understand that they could very quickly lose all of their unnatural privileges if someone explains to the public what their behavior is doing to our society.

They begin feeling very insecure and very uncomfortable when they hear me, for example, talking against government-imposed sexual and racial quotas. When I ridicule the idea that America needs more "diversity" or more female fighter pilots or more Haitian or Mexican immigrants, they would like very much to shut me up. They are afraid that other people will listen and will begin thinking. When I say in one of my broadcasts that a society is sick unto death when its citizens are taught that there's nothing wrong with men kissing and fondling each other in public, these people begin screeching about "hate speech" and demanding laws to keep me quiet.

And a lot of the couch potatoes and soccer moms are ready to go along with them, because they've been conditioned in that direction by the media and the schools -- especially if they have attended a college or university. The radical feminists and the homosexuals and the non-White militants established a beachhead in the university faculties and administrations in the 1960s, and since then they have metastasized to the point where they are the arbiters of Political Correctness in nearly every university in America.

Well, all of this is bad enough -- on the one hand the positions of influence in our schools and our government held by freaks of various sorts and by non-Whites and on the other hand the general softness and state of confusion of our population -- but what makes it much worse and much more dangerous is the campaign by well organized and well financed Jewish pressure groups to subvert legislative bodies and law-enforcement agencies at the same time that Jews in the media are continuing to soften up the public. There is a powerful effort underway now to abolish our Bill of Rights, piece by piece, both directly and indirectly, and it is succeeding.

You know, I've spoken with you before about the Jewish and liberal campaign to have more so-called "hate crime" legislation enacted, at both the state and the Federal levels. That campaign continues, with groups such as the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith presenting their so-called "model hate crime" bills to legislators everywhere and lobbying for their enactment. And it's not just the Anti-Defamation League. It's other Jewish organizations too, such as the Southern Poverty Law Center and all sorts of ad hoc groups. And politicians being what they are these days, these Jewish groups are having an alarming degree of success. Legislators, who take an oath of office to uphold and defend the Constitution against all enemies, foreign and domestic, eagerly subvert the Constitution if it will win them favor with the Jews. They will enact patently unconstitutional laws without a second thought if the Anti-Defamation League will give them a pat on the head for it.

And let me assure you, even patently unconstitutional laws that should never be able to stand up in court are dangerous. In the first place, some of them do stand up in court because the courts themselves have been corrupted. But even when they aren't enforceable they intimidate people. No person in his right mind wants to be charged even under a law that is so clearly unconstitutional that no court will uphold it, because he can be bankrupted by the legal fees involved in proving that it is unconstitutional.

At least, there are some more or less "mainstream" groups in America that are as strongly opposed as I am to the whole concept of "hate crime" laws, although for different reasons, and these groups undoubtedly have slowed down somewhat the rate at which the Constitution is being undermined. They could do much more if they weren't so terrified of being labeled "haters" or "anti-Semites" for daring to take a Politically Incorrect position.

The Jews, however, are pushing their campaign to subvert the Constitution at more than one level. While using their media to persuade the public that everyone will be safer and more comfortable with more "hate crime" laws, and lobbying the politicians to enact the laws, at the same time they have a massive effort underway to infiltrate and subvert law-enforcement agencies. And in this last effort, which in some ways is the most dangerous of all, there are no mainstream groups opposing them.

Here's the way it works: the media in a particular area -- say, in Arizona or in Michigan -- raise the public's consciousness of the threat of terrorism. The Jews persuade one of their favorite Gentile politicians in the area to speak up about the need to be prepared to deal with this new threat. The politician gives television interviews and speaks very seriously about the lack of preparedness on the part of police and other government agencies. State and local police agencies begin to worry that they will be blamed if they don't do something to show that they are taking the threat of terrorism seriously. As a matter of fact, terrorism is completely new to them. They've never thought about it much. They don't know anything about it.

Well, guess who comes to the rescue! An official of the Anti-Defamation League or another Jewish group goes to see the head of the state police, and he brings along a member of the Israeli secret-police organization Mossad. The two Jews tell the chief of the state police that they know all about terrorism and terrorists, and they want to share their information with him, because of their humanitarian concern for public safety. The police chief is happy to accept their offer, and so training seminars are set up. The Jews tell the police officials about terrorism -- and especially about terrorists, about how to spot a terrorist, about what characteristics to look for.

Usually the irony of the situation is not even realized by the Gentile policemen. The Mossad is an organization that engages in state-sponsored terrorism. It commits terrorist acts on a larger scale than any other organization, including Osama bin Laden's group. Its agents sneak into people's hotel rooms in other countries and plant radio-detonated bombs under their beds. They put bombs in people's telephones. They put bombs in people's cars. They use exotic poisons to assassinate people. A couple of Mossad agents got caught in Jordan a couple of years ago when they tried to murder an Islamic religious leader they didn't like by squirting poison into his ear as they passed him on a sidewalk in Amman. And these professional assassins and terrorists are supposedly teaching our policemen about how to spot terrorists!

Imagine the police hiring the Mafia to teach them about organized crime and how to fight it. Do you think that perhaps the Mafia instructors might tailor their teaching to give the police only the information that wouldn't be harmful to the Mafia? Do you think that perhaps the Mafia might try to use the police for its own ends instead of being public-spirited and really helping the police fight organized crime?

It is not surprising that what our policemen learn about terrorism and terrorists from this relationship with the Jews is a bit one-sided. It is not surprising that the police learn that terrorists are likely to be Islamic extremists -- or even more likely, White racists. It is not surprising that they learn that White racists and White patriots -- in fact, any groups or individuals who are not Politically Correct -- should be watched carefully, because they might be terrorists, or they might become terrorists as demographic and social conditions in the country continue to worsen. People who are opposed to the flood of non-White immigrants pouring into the country, people who are opposed to continually increasing "diversity" in America, might become violent, might resort to terrorism, if the government doesn't do something to control immigration.

Well, that's just the beginning of this worrisome relationship between our police and the Jews. And you know, when I say "the Jews," I don't mean just the Anti-Defamation League and the Southern Poverty Law Center and the Mossad. This ongoing subversion of our Constitution -- this assault on our freedom -- is also supported by the Jewish community, by the Jewish tribe, as a whole. The Jewish bosses of the mass media support it as well as the Jewish pressure groups.

Of course, there are individual exceptions. There are a few Jews who, for one reason or another, refuse to march in lockstep with the rest of the tribe. In an earlier program I told you about Norman Finkelstein, whose book The Holocaust Industry, exposes the chicanery and fraud of the media Jews and other Jews who have lied about and exaggerated Jewish losses during the Second World War in order to gain economic and political advantages for their fellow Jews. Despite Finkelstein's dissent, the Holocaust fraud remains a Jewish fraud, because it is supported by nearly all Jews, not just by Simon Wiesenthal and Elie Wiesel and a few other professional Holocaust hucksters. I've discussed with you Robert Friedman's revelations of the Jewishness of so-called "Russian" organized crime in his book Red Mafiya. But despite Friedman's exposé, virtually all the Jews in the controlled media continue to pretend that the members of the organized crime gangs that came to America from the former Soviet Union are Russians instead of Jews.

And there are a few individual Jews who speak out against the campaign to enact "hate crime" and "speech crime" laws. They warn that this campaign threatens our most fundamental freedoms. Nat Hentoff, a Jew who works for the Jewish newspaper Village Voice and has a syndicated newspaper column, is one of these. Hentoff has for years spoken out against threats to free speech, and he is speaking out now against the "speech crime" campaign being pushed by his fellow Jews.

Of course, Hentoff doesn't refer to it as a Jewish campaign, but that's exactly what it is. I'm happy that Hentoff is at least speaking out against "speech crime" laws, but it is a fact that one cannot really understand what is going on unless one sees the campaign as Jewish and sees how it meshes with long-term Jewish goals. And one cannot effectively fight against this campaign unless one is willing to fight against the Jews as a whole.

Well, I told you that the Anti-Defamation League's teaching of law-enforcement agencies about terrorism is just the beginning. Having established a cozy relationship with police departments around the country, Jewish organizations next put themselves forward as experts on "hate crime" legislation, which is as new and strange to most law enforcement people as terrorism is. "Hate crime" and "speech crime" are the coming things, the Jews persuade the policemen. If you want to stay on the right side of the media in the future, you'll be spending much less time chasing robbers and rapists and instead will be arresting "hate criminals" and "speech criminals." You'll need to know how to recognize them. Let us teach you.

And the Jews are teaching them. In Phoenix, Arizona, the police department has a special "bias crimes detail": an incipient thought police unit. Although the Phoenix cops do not yet have the authority to arrest people for expressing Politically Incorrect thoughts, they do keep official police records -- "information cards," they are called -- on people overheard saying things that might be used later as evidence against them if they ever are charged with a "hate crime." For example, a White man reports to the Phoenix police that he has just been mugged and robbed on the street by two illegal aliens from Mexico. While the police are taking his report he says, "I'd like to see all of these wetbacks rounded up and shot." An "information card" reporting that remark goes into the police files. Two years later the same White man gets in a fight with a Mexican and beats him up. Has a "hate crime" been committed? The "bias crimes detail" finds the two-year-old "information card" in its files and on that basis charges the White man with a "hate crime" carrying twice the penalty that a simple assault would carry.

And Phoenix certainly isn't the only community where the Jews have persuaded the local cops to begin collecting evidence of what people are thinking so that they can be prosecuted later. In Laguna Beach, California, Police Chief Jim Spreine encourages citizens to report to the police any "hate-style comments," to use the chief's words, that they overhear. People who make "hate-style comments" are more likely to commit acts of violence later and so bear watching, the chief told a reporter for the Orange County Register. And I do not need to tell you who it is that advises the chief exactly what constitutes a "hate-style comment."

This is the sort of thing that is happening all over America at a rapidly increasing rate. The whole meaning of law enforcement is being transformed. The police used to protect normal, law-abiding citizens by locking up violent predators. Nowadays in many cities the police are doing less of that from fear of being charged with "racism" or "racial profiling," because violent predators are disproportionately non-White. The police instead are spending their time watching, gathering information on, and in some cases arresting White men who are suspected of having Politically Incorrect attitudes and thinking Politically Incorrect thoughts.

As I told you earlier in this broadcast, there are two principal reasons for this transformation. One is the general feminization of America: the shift from a freedom-loving citizenry to a comfort-loving and security-loving citizenry. The other reason is deliberate subversion on a huge scale, in which the controlled mass media and Jewish pressure groups have played the largest role.

If America is to survive much longer its citizens must once again come to value freedom more than comfort and security. But before this shift in attitude can be effected, the grip of the Jews on the mass media and on the political process in America must be broken. And before that can happen, those Americans who still love freedom must find the courage to speak out and accuse those who are subverting their country.

Certainly, anger is growing. The rage is growing. But along with the rage must grow understanding and courage.

Time to Blast Our Enemies

There are some interesting things going on around the world. I want to describe a few of these things for you and then tie them together and make a few predictions.

Let's begin with Australia. Police in Sydney, Australia's largest city, are trying to cope with a new problem: rapes of young White girls by gangs of non-White immigrants. More than 70 White girls, ranging in age from 13 to 18, have been abducted from Sydney suburbs and subjected to exceptionally brutal gang rapes during the past two years. The frequency of the rapes is on the rise, and they are spreading from Sydney to other Australian cities. In an incident three weeks ago in Guildford, a residential suburb of Perth, Australia's fourth-largest city, on the other side of the continent from Sydney, as many as two dozen men seized a young girl in a school yard and raped her repeatedly, before scrawling anti-White slogans on her naked body.

All of the victims have been White, and all of the rapists have been non-White. Police refuse to be specific, saying only that the members of the rape gangs are of Middle Eastern origin. Although a number of arrests of the rapists have been made, police are pessimistic about curbing the phenomenon or even slowing it down. They say it is a "culturally institutionalized" problem, which means that gang rape of women and girls not under the protection of a strong male is traditional in the home country from which the rapists come: gang rape of unprotected women is an institution in the Middle East and among Semitic peoples generally. Police are hesitant to crack down on the rape gangs from fear of being charged with "racial profiling," the same charge that has hamstrung police in America. So in lieu of moving aggressively against the Middle Eastern immigrant groups to which the rapists belong, Australian police are planning a "social research program" to better understand the phenomenon.

South Africa is experiencing similar problems with gang rape. Rape always has been "culturally institutionalized" among Blacks throughout Africa, including South Africa. The new aspect of rape there is that now White women are increasingly being chosen as victims, whereas during the apartheid period they were exempt because Blacks feared aggressive police action and extremely severe punishment for raping a White woman. With a Black government, that is no longer true; in fact Black police officials in South Africa look with amusement on rape complaints by White women.

South Africa has become the rape capital of the world, with more reported rapes per capita than any other country, according to Interpol. South Africa also has the fastest rising per capita rate of HIV infection. The belief is widespread among Blacks in Africa that they can cure AIDS by having sex with a woman who does not have the disease. They believe that sex with an uninfected woman will "draw out" the disease from their bodies and into the bodies of the women. Therefore they seek out very young girls -- presumably virgins and therefore uninfected -- for rape. And they also seek out White women, among whom the infection rate is only a tiny fraction of the rate among Black women.

Racial hatred also plays a role in the growing incidence of the gang rape of White women in South Africa. Jean Saul lives with her husband just outside Johannesburg. Four Blacks recently broke into their home, robbed them at gunpoint, then tied up both Mrs. Saul and her husband in their beds. They called Mrs. Saul a "White bitch" and then told her husband: "We've got AIDS, and we're going to rape your wife." Then all four took turns raping her, forcing her husband to watch. After that, according to Mrs. Saul's report:

One of the Blacks "stood on the bed, and he actually peed on us: just urinated over both of us.

France and Sweden both are experiencing a growing surge of gang rapes of young girls by non-White immigrants -- not by Blacks, but by Middle Easterners in Sweden and by North Africans in France. As in Australia the police in France and Sweden seem hesitant to crack down vigorously on the rape gangs, simply because the rapists are all non-White.

In England the immigrants causing the worst problems at the moment are Asians, most of them from the Indian subcontinent. I spoke with you two months ago about the destruction that Asian gangs were wreaking in northern England. I spoke specifically about the Asian riots in Oldham, about the Asian gang attacks on Whites there. Well the riots have continued, primarily because the police have refused to crack down on the rioters. The mass media in England have tried hard to put the blame for the riots on "White racism," and under the government of Tony Blair, who is a British version of Bill Clinton, the police in England are as afraid of "racial profiling" accusations as are the police in America.

Last month the heaviest rioting yet in England by Asian gangs hit the city of Bradford, near Leeds. White-owned stores in Bradford were looted and firebombed, two White men were stabbed, and more than 200 policemen were injured. Hundreds of millions of dollars worth of White property was destroyed or stolen.

And what about America? Earlier this year I spoke with you on several occasions about the Black riots in Seattle and in Cincinnati. I pointed out that during the Mardi Gras riot in Seattle the police stood on the sidelines and refused to interfere while gangs of Blacks rampaged through a mostly White crowd, beating, robbing, and stomping individual Whites, mostly young women, and killing one young White man who tried to help a young woman who had been knocked to the ground and was being kicked by Blacks. The police explained that they had been using "restraint" in order not to provoke even worse violence. Actually, as was revealed later, they were afraid of being charged with "racial profiling," because if they had arrested lawbreakers nearly all those arrested would have been Black. As every lemming has learned from TV, Blacks are no more likely to commit crimes of violence than Whites, so arresting more Blacks than Whites during a riot is clear proof of police racism.

The Black rioting in Cincinnati in April also saw the police looking the other way while the Blacks pulled Whites from cars and beat them, looted stores, set buildings afire, and carried on in their customary way. The Black pretext for rioting in Cincinnati was the shooting of a Black criminal with 14 outstanding arrest warrants who was fleeing from police. The media in Cincinnati made such a hullabaloo about the fact that the fleeing criminal was unarmed at the time -- the headlines read: "unarmed Black youth gunned down by White policeman" -- that the police and the city's White politicians became gun shy.

In an effort to deflect charges of "racial profiling" they arrested a young White man who had thrown a brick at a Black during the riot and charged him with a "hate crime": certainly the first "hate crime" charge to be filed as a result of the Cincinnati riot and, as far as I am aware, the only one. During the rioting angry White citizens in the Cincinnati area were calling radio talk shows and asking why the police were refusing even to arrest Black rioters who pulled a White woman from her car and beat and kicked her savagely. The television cameras caught it, but the police ignored it. The White mayor of Cincinnati, Charlie Lukens, obviously was scared to death that if the police waded into the rioters to rescue White victims other Blacks might be shot, and he would be blamed by the media. He refused to criticize the Black rioters; he attended the funeral of the Black criminal who had been shot; and his solution for preventing further rioting was:

We must address the broader issues of racism and economic inclusion in our community.

After the riot in April and the anemic response of Cincinnati police, violent crime is up astronomically in the city. Since the riot there have been 74 more shootings, compared to nine shootings in the same period last year. All but one of the gunmen in the 74 shootings since April was Black. And while violent crime is way up, arrests in Cincinnati are down more than 50 per cent. Clearly Mayor Lukens is hoping to avoid provoking another Black riot and more charges of "racial profiling" from the media. What he's doing now to try to curb violent crime in Cincinnati is recruit more Black policemen. He believes that a more "diverse" police force will lead to less crime -- or at least, to less media criticism of him.

This sort of reaction by White politicians to media charges of lack of sensitivity to Blacks or other non-Whites is not confined to Cincinnati. They are telling White cops to take it easy on Blacks everywhere. On my desk I have a Fox News story from last week -- July 27 -- headed, "Seattle Cops, Wary of Race-Profiling Accusations, Cutting Back on Minority Arrests."

I also have a similar story, which was printed in the Seattle Times a month earlier. That story is headed, "Wary of racism complaints, police look the other way in Black neighborhoods." Here are a few lines from the story:

The cops on the street have different names for it: de-policing, selective disengagement, tactical detachment. They even joke about it, calling themselves "tourists in blue." ... Many officers, wary of being labeled "racists" or "racial profilers," say they hold back or bypass opportunities to make traffic stops or arrests of black suspects.... "It's real. It's happening," said Eric Michl, a Seattle patrol officer for 17 years. "Parking under a shady tree to work on a crossword puzzle is a great alternative to being labeled a racist and being dragged through an inquest, a review board, an FBI and U.S. Attorney's investigation, and a lawsuit."

The same Seattle policeman described a recent incident in which he stopped a car that was being driven recklessly. The driver appeared to be high on cocaine and was carrying no driver's license and had no registration document for the car. Ordinarily, said Michl, he would have arrested the driver on the spot. But the driver was Black, and so Michl hesitated. Instead of making an immediate arrest he went back to his patrol car to run the license plate through the police computer. It turned out that the car was stolen, but by that time the Black driver had fled.

Well, I said that we would tie together all of these things and then draw some conclusions from them. What we have in each of these situations I have described for you is White men on the defensive; White men thinking and acting like women; White men so terrified of being criticized, so terrified of being called "racists," that they will not protect themselves, their women, or their communities. They have let themselves be pushed into positions that are less and less defensible.

Australia, for example, used to be a White country, in spirit as well as in fact. The government had a "White Australia" policy: immigrants from non-White parts of the world simply were not accepted. That's the way the Australians wanted it, and the government was happy to oblige. In the late 1960s, however, the Jews, the controlled media, the Christian churches, and leftist elements in the Labor Party began collaborating on a long-range "anti-racism" propaganda campaign in Australia. It was the same sort of propaganda campaign that was used to soften up South Africa prior to turning it over to Black rule. The formula was: racism is a terrible thing, and you should be ashamed if you have any racist feelings; not permitting Asians and Middle Easterners to immigrate to Australia is racist -- or in South Africa, not permitting Blacks to vote is racist; therefore, if you are in favor of keeping Australia White you are a terrible person and should be ashamed of yourself -- or, if you are a White South African and don't want the Black majority to vote, you are a terrible person and should be ashamed.

By the mid-1970s the campaign had had such an effect on Australians that they were afraid to protest when the government abandoned its "White Australia" policy and opened the floodgates to Asian and Middle Eastern immigrants. And by the early 1990s White South Africans had been so intimidated by the "anti-racism" propaganda in their country that they were ready to commit collective race suicide rather than be considered "racists." In 1991 they abandoned their system of apartheid, and in 1993 they agreed in effect to turn their country over to rule by the Black majority. They agreed to let Blacks vote, so that they wouldn't be thought "racists" by the lemmings in other countries.

As social conditions in Australia began deteriorating and the crime rate began rising under the impact of Asian immigration, the government pushed for a general disarmament of the White population. Everyone would be safer, the government and the media and the churches proclaimed, if no one had a firearm. And the feminized, brainwashed population put up only a minimal protest. Yes, yes! They wanted to feel safer! They wanted to be nicer! Let's get rid of those awful firearms! So in 1997 -- just four years ago -- all privately owned firearms in Australia were confiscated by the government. Since then there has been a 45 per cent increase in the rate of armed robberies across Australia. In the state of Victoria the rate of homicides committed with firearms has risen 300 per cent. That's because the Asian gangs still have their guns, but the Whites don't.

It's really difficult to sympathize with White Australians and White South Africans. Through their own foolishness and weakness they brought their present problems upon themselves. When men begin acting like women, that is what happens. When White men let themselves be bamboozled into feeling guilty and defensive about their natural, healthy racial feelings, that is what happens.

I remember what happened in South Africa just a few years ago. The Christian churches there organized huge anti-apartheid demonstrations. The Jews were lurking in the background and pulling the strings, of course, but it was White Christians out front campaigning for an end to apartheid. It was Christian clerics denouncing racism from their pulpits and calling for interracial brotherhood. And the White lemmings soaked it up. I remember seeing the young White women -- beautiful, empty-headed White women -- marching in these demonstrations arm in arm with Blacks. The White women were so proud of themselves for being ideologically fashionable, for being Politically Correct. And their men -- their fathers, their husbands, their brothers -- let them behave in this way rather than risk being thought racist. And so now the fashionable White women of South Africa are being raped and infected with the AIDS virus, and their spineless men are being forced to watch.

Foolishness and weakness! Foolish women and weak men. But is that not the way most of our people are everywhere, including the United States? Isn't that the way most of our people always have been? Isn't that why the Jews just love mass democracy and praise democracy to the skies in their media?

It's easy for us in the United States to shake our heads at the foolishness and weakness of the Australians and the South Africans. It's easy for us to say to the Australians: "You had a Bill Clinton/Tony Blair style government, a government catering to the welfare rabble and to the worst of the lemmings, so how can you be surprised that your government abandoned your "White Australia" policy and now welcomes a growing flood of non-White immigrants into your country? The Asian immigrants will be the new constituency for your politicians. And you certainly can't complain that now you have no weapons to protect yourselves and your women from these immigrants. You were so afraid of being Politically Incorrect that you permitted the government to confiscate your firearms without even putting up a fight. Now you're getting what you deserve."

It's easy for us to say that about the Australians and to say even harsher things about the South Africans. How could anybody be so stupid as to let a majority of the electorate in their country become non-White and expect their government to continue to protect them and to maintain civilized standards?

It's easy to say these things because the Australian and South African situations seem so different from ours. It's a little harder for us to criticize the people in England for letting the Asians there riot and tear up their cities, The situation in England is a little too close to what we have witnessed in Seattle and Cincinnati. But you know, the situation in Australia really is not so different from ours as we might want to believe. Our government is just as democratic, just as corrupt, and the attitudes and opinions of our people are just as prone to manipulation by the media. We used to have a "White America" immigration policy here too. Under pressure from the Jewish media and the Christian churches that policy was abandoned after the Second World War.

Now our government doesn't even attempt to control our borders. It is more concerned that the mestizos pouring in from Mexico might lose their way in the Arizona desert and suffer from the heat than it is about keeping them out. The U.S. Border Patrol is planning on installing special signalling stations in the desert so that if the illegal aliens get lost on their way north they can call for help. Really! I got that news from a July 28 Associated Press report from Tucson, Arizona, which is on my desk now. With that kind of thinking in our government, our situation in just a few decades will be very similar to that of South Africa's Whites today. We will have a non-White voting majority in the country and a government staffed by a majority of non-Whites who will be just as amused by our cries for help as are the Black police officials of South Africa when White women there complain about being gang-raped by Blacks. And like the Australians we will not have weapons to defend ourselves or our women.

That's where we're headed everywhere in the White world. What is happening now in Australia and in South Africa gives us a clear warning. That warning will do us no good, however, unless we do something about our basic problem. That basic problem is the continued programming of our lemmings by mass media controlled by Jews. As long as the Jews who control America's mass media are permitted to continue teaching our women that frolicking with Blacks is fashionable, and as long as they are permitted to continue teaching our men that being thought a "racist" is a fate worse than death, we will not be able to avoid the future the media bosses have planned for us. Because, believe me, our women are just as foolish and our men just as weak as are those of Australia and South Africa. The governmental structure is in place that will annihilate our race and our civilization, and the masters of the mass media are at the controls of this structure. Whether there is a Democrat or a Republican figurehead at the top of the structure makes very little difference. We must begin dismantling that structure; we must put a monkey wrench in its gears; we must yank -- we must blast -- the controllers from their seats of power in Hollywood and New York, or we are finished.

Demonstrating for Freedom

Two weeks ago my organization, the National Alliance, held a small, peaceful demonstration at the German Embassy in Washington. On Sunday, July 29, we had about 70 men and women carrying signs in front of the embassy protesting the lack of civil liberties for dissidents in Germany. We were protesting the fact that the German government puts its citizens in prison for saying or writing anything deemed Politically Incorrect. In Germany people are locked up even for listening to Politically Incorrect music or for having Politically Incorrect ideas about what really happened during the Second World War. People are in prison in Germany now for having questioned some detail of the official "Holocaust" story, for example, or for singing forbidden songs or for being caught at an underground concert where forbidden music was being played.

There is no freedom of speech in Germany, no freedom of association, no intellectual or artistic freedom, and we want everyone to know this. We want to embarrass the German government. And we want the American people to know about this lack of freedom in Germany and about the repression of political, intellectual, and artistic dissidents. Most Americans haven't the faintest idea about these things. Americans are taught in school and by the media -- especially by Hollywood -- that in the Second World War the Americans fought the Nazis to free the German people and the rest of Europe from the tyranny imposed by Hitler. Americans are taught that under Hitler the Germans had no freedom. They are taught that the first thing Hitler did when he became chancellor of Germany in 1933 was confiscate all of the privately owned firearms in Germany. Then he burned all of the books he didn't like. After that, Americans have been told in countless Hollywood films, he had anyone who criticized him or his government arrested and thrown into a concentration camp. Americans have been taught that anyone who refused to give the Roman salute or to say "Heil Hitler!" on appropriate occasions was in danger of being shot by the Gestapo.

And we are taught that the Americans smashed the wicked Nazi government in order to restore freedom to Germany. We are taught that we gave back to the Germans freedom of speech and freedom of the press and freedom of association, that we gave them back political and intellectual and artistic freedom, and that the Germans were very grateful to us for this. We are taught that we "liberated" the Germans. And to drive the lesson home we are shown photographs and old newsreel clips of American GIs handing out candy bars to grateful German children. We are shown photographs of American soldiers opening the gates of concentration camps and freeing all of the wrongfully imprisoned dissidents, many of them badly malnourished.

Most Americans don't understand that nearly all of this is a calculated lie. They don't understand that Hollywood concocted this lie, and the U.S. government and the American educational establishment went along with it in order to deceive the American people about the true reasons for the American bombing and invasion of Germany and about what actually happened in Germany before, during, and after the war. Indeed, some GIs did give candy bars to German children, but nearly everything else we have been taught about Germany and the Second World War is a lie.

Most Americans don't understand that Hitler didn't confiscate privately owned firearms after he became chancellor. In fact, he encouraged the private ownership of firearms by Germans. It was the U.S. government that outlawed the private ownership of firearms in Germany and then confiscated all civilian weapons from the German people in 1945. After Germany's surrender the U.S. Army posted proclamations requiring all German civilians to turn in their handguns, their hunting rifles and shotguns, even their fencing swords, at Army collection stations. And American GIs were amazed at the enormous number of privately owned weapons turned in by the Germans: everything from modern sporting rifles and pocket pistols intended for self-defense to antique firearms and swords that were family heirlooms. The Americans permitted no German civilian to keep any weapon with which he might defend himself or his family. Hitler didn't take away the Germans' right to keep and bear arms; the U.S. government did.

Americans don't understand that Hitler did not make it illegal for Germans to own books critical of him or his government. Americans have been shown pictures of Germans throwing books on bonfires, and they have been told that these were books confiscated from Germans, that the Nazis were basically "book burners" who consigned to the flames anything they didn't agree with. What they have not been told is that the bonfires were merely symbolic, that the books burned were communist literature, pornographic materials, and other books the Hitler government viewed as degenerate and harmful to public morality. Germans could still own or read such books if they wanted, but the Nazis were making a public demonstration of their opposition to communism, to pornography, to Jewish fashions, to degenerate modern art, and the like.

Their symbolic bonfires served much the same purpose as public bonfires that have been organized in America by Christian church groups to burn records, tapes, and CDs of music with what the church groups consider immoral lyrics. Christian leaders understand that they cannot stop people from owning or listening to such music, but they want to send a graphic message of their disapproval. Such bonfires, whether in Germany or America, have propaganda value, but they do not have legal significance.

Americans don't understand that Germans were not thrown into concentration camps for not saying "Heil Hitler!" or for not joining the Nazi party. Indeed, there were certain limits. Hitler banned the Communist Party, and if someone were caught trying to recruit communists for underground work, he very likely would wind up in a concentration camp. If homosexuals were seen fondling each other in public in Berlin the way they do in San Francisco today, they probably would be sent to a concentration camp. If a child molester or a pimp were arrested in Germany, he might be sent to a concentration camp. He might even have his head cut off.

There were some things the Nazis simply wouldn't put up with. They were quite determined to clean up German life and to set new fashions and new standards for public behavior after a long period during which the Jews had been permitted to promote every sort of degeneracy in Germany. But the fact remains that despite the restrictions on communists and homosexuals and Jews, Germans had more intellectual and artistic freedom -- more freedom of speech -- under Hitler than they did after Germany's so-called "liberation" in 1945. And under Hitler they had more freedom of expression than they do today. But if you say that in Germany now you'll be arrested and sent to prison for it.

In the National Alliance we believe that Americans ought to understand that. It was not just for German freedom that we were demonstrating two weeks ago. It was for American freedom as well. The unfortunate fact is that our government in Washington agrees with the German government's repression of dissidents in Germany. The Bush government would like very much to be able to imprison its critics in America the way the German government imprisons its dissidents. On the very day before our demonstration Mr. Bush's government forcibly sent a young German musician, Hendrik Möbus, back to Germany so that he can be imprisoned for Politically Incorrect statements he made there before fleeing to this country and seeking political asylum here.

Our Immigration and Nationality Act specifically says that asylum is available to:

(A)ny person who is outside any country of such person's nationality ... and who is unable or unwilling to return to, and is unable or unwilling to avail himself or herself of the protection of that country because of persecution or well-founded fear of persecution on account of race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group, or political opinion.

That's what the U.S. law says, and it seems clear enough that, having been convicted twice in absentia by German courts while he was seeking asylum here for things he had said in Germany before fleeing, Hendrik had a "well-founded fear of persecution on account of ... [his] political opinion." And so from the beginning the National Alliance supported Hendrik's struggle for freedom. We hired attorneys for him and paid all of his expenses in the effort to win political asylum for him.

In the final ruling against Hendrik before they turned him over to the German government to be locked up, the U.S. Board of Immigration Appeals said that they found that the German government had a "right" to enforce its laws intended to:

discourage the political activities of groups seen as sympathetic to or supportive of extremely nationalistic or Nazi-like causes.

This quote is directly from the ruling. Well, I'm no lawyer, but it seems to me that being convicted and sentenced to prison for making statements seen by the German government as "sympathetic to or supportive of extremely nationalistic or Nazi-like causes" amounts to "persecution on account of ... political opinion."

You know, I have a strong suspicion that if Hendrik were Chinese instead of German, and the Chinese government wanted to lock him up for having said things it didn't like, the U.S. Board of Immigration Appeals would have viewed his petition for asylum differently. I suspect that would be the case because opposition by a Chinaman to the Chinese government is not seen as a threat by a certain very powerful minority group in the United States, whereas opposition by a German to the German government that the U.S. Army installed after the war to keep the German people under control very definitely is seen as a threat.

Of course, the principal lie about Germany that is propagated by the media and the schools and the government here isn't the lie that Germany is a free country today. It is the lie that for no reason at all Hitler killed six million innocent, inoffensive, blameless Jews in gas chambers during the war. This is the so-called "Holocaust" story that Germans are not permitted to investigate or question. They are required to swallow it whole, under penalty of law -- and to do penance by supporting Israel.

To be sure, Hitler did kill Jews. That was a necessary concomitant of restoring Germany to health. When communists were rounded up and thrown into concentration camps in Germany before the war, many of them were Jews. And during the fight against the Soviet Union, groups of Jews were rounded up and put into concentration camps in the east, because nearly all of them were partisans of the communists. When the Germans failed to round them up, the local citizens in Poland and Ukraine and the Baltic states often rounded them up themselves and killed them, because the Jews had collaborated with the Soviets in persecuting the non-Jewish citizens of these countries. There's a big ruckus in the Jewish media at the moment about the Poles taking revenge against the Jews of the town of Jedwabne in 1941 after the Germans drove out the Reds.

I really don't know how many Jews the Germans killed, but it certainly was less than the number of German civilians and prisoners of war killed by or at the instigation of the Jews after the war. The Americans collaborated in this genocidal campaign against the Germans, allowing gangs of armed, murderous Jews in U.S. Army uniforms to run wild through conquered Germany, raping, looting, and killing. German prisoners of war were starved to death on a massive scale after they had surrendered. Some were poisoned by being fed bread laced with arsenic. And the Americans, who supposedly had been fighting to "liberate" the Germans, turned the whole eastern half of Germany over to the communists at the end of the war. Some "liberation"! It's no wonder that American GIs began using the term so cynically. To "liberate" came to mean to steal, to loot, to despoil, to plunder and pillage.

Anyway, the Germans lost their freedom in 1945, and they still haven't regained it. The Jews who control our news and entertainment media think that's a good thing, and therefore, of course, our government does too. The National Alliance was protesting against the lack of freedom in Germany and also against the attitude of the media and the government in this country that the Germans shouldn't have freedom, nor should Americans who refuse to follow the Jewish party line. So as soon as the National Alliance people began arriving at the German Embassy, they were attacked by a shrieking gaggle of the Chosen Ones who had been bused in from New York for the purpose. The Jews, representing such groups as the International Socialist Organization, the World Workers' Party, something called Anti-Racist Action, and a coven of militant lesbians, began spitting and swinging weapons.

Most of the Jews were masked: that is, they were wearing ski masks or bandannas tied across their faces. The District of Columbia has an anti-mask law, enacted back during the 1920s as an anti-Klan measure, but the police seemed to believe that the law doesn't apply to Jews or communists, because no one was arrested for concealing his face behind a mask or a bandanna. The enemy's weapons were things they could claim weren't really weapons, but that nevertheless could do substantial damage. One of them was swinging a skateboard, and another was using a heavy lug wrench when they attacked Billy Roper, who works with me in Hillsboro, but who was leading our group of demonstrators in Washington.

I wasn't there myself, but I have studied the videotape from a news camera, and one can clearly see these Jewish champions of international brotherhood trying to kill Billy with a heavy skateboard and a lug wrench. They put a nasty gash over his right eye before our people grabbed them and held them for the police. Our people, of course, in obedience to the law, all were unarmed, neatly dressed, and prepared for a peaceful demonstration, but since we had as many people as the Jews had, the odds weren't to their liking and they didn't stick around long. We marched in front of the embassy for two hours, primarily for the benefit of the news media, so that our message would reach the American public as well as the German government. One Washington television station -- Channel 9 -- carried a reasonably good report of the demonstration and of the Jewish effort to stop it; the Washington Post and most of the other media gave minimal coverage.

So our member Billy Roper, a high school history teacher from Arkansas, got a gash over his eye and some bruises, the National Alliance is $20,000 in the hole for legal expenses trying to win asylum for Hendrik; and Hendrik is in a German prison, where he must spend at least the next five years of his life for having said some things that the Chosen People who control both Germany and the United States didn't like. And the American people, like most of the German people, continue watching their television screens in blissful ignorance, growing fatter, and thinking exactly what the Jewish masters of Hollywood and the networks tell them to think.

Excuse me: that's not entirely correct. The situation really isn't as static as that makes it seem. The masters of the media are not content with keeping most of the Gentile population in a stupor of ignorance and consumption. They are consumed with the same murderous hatred for our people that inspired the communists, lesbians, and other Jewish radicals to attempt to murder one of our peaceful demonstrators in Washington by beating him over the head with a lug wrench and a skateboard. The media masters and their allies in the government, in the schools, and in the pulpit are pushing hard for "speech crime" laws in the United States of the same sort that resulted in Hendrik being imprisoned in Germany.

And the other side of the situation is that not all of our people are in a brainwashed stupor. More than ever before, the perceptive and independent-minded few are rousing themselves in alarm over the danger that threatens all of us. The danger to Americans is not just that of the loss of our freedom, leaving us, like the Germans, unable to speak out against those who want to destroy us. The danger comes from a whole flood of evils accompanying the campaign against our freedom. The flood of non-White immigrants into the White world -- in America, in Australia, in Europe -- is causing some to join us. The growing corruption of our courts and our legislatures is rousing others. The all too visible examples of South Africa and Rhodesia -- visible, that is, to those not totally numbed by the Jewish poison pouring forth from their television screens -- these examples of what happens to White nations that succumb to the Jew-inspired, womanish whining of the multiculturalists and the diversity-mongers, the whining of, "Oh, why can't we all just learn to get along together? Why can't we all just love each other: Blacks and Asians and mestizos and Whites? There's plenty for all of us if we'll just share and be nice to each other" -- these examples of the descent into rape and disease and murder and squalor and savagery and degradation and racial extinction wherever Jewish propaganda has prevailed -- are moving others finally to stand with us.

What is coming to America will be terrible and bloody. What will happen even to those who have tried desperately to stay out of the fight will be far more painful that what happened to Billy Roper when he was attacked by a Jewish mob in Washington two weeks ago. But we can see now at least the possibility of light and sanity and health once again after the great bloodletting that is coming. It really is a race now between the Jews and their allies on one side, and the awakening few on our side: the few who still have time to prevail against the enemies of our people everywhere if they can find the courage and the will to act soon.

To Be, or To Be Nice

Have you been paying attention to what's happening in Rhodesia and South Africa in recent weeks? Certainly not, if your only sources of news are the controlled news media, such as CNN or the network television news programs. They've been far too busy giving you interviews with Chandra Levy's parents.

Of course, I have reported to you from time to time on the situations in Rhodesia, now officially known as "Zimbabwe," and in South Africa. It is depressing to me to talk about these things. It is depressing to me to see the predictions that I made long ago coming true. And it has been even more depressing than usual recently as the deterioration of conditions in those countries has accelerated, as the ultimate horror that I predicted has become visible.

Two weeks ago, we talked about the growing phenomenon of the gang rape of White women by Blacks in South Africa. It has been a little over a year, however, since we talked about the seizure and looting of White farms in Rhodesia and the killing of White farm families there by mobs of Blacks. President for Life Robert Mugabe wanted to enhance his popularity among his followers by taking land away from White farmers and giving it to Blacks. When he began this activity Mugabe had to use a certain degree of caution for two reasons. First, virtually all the agricultural product of Rhodesia came from the White farms; Blacks engaged only in subsistence farming, and White farms that were turned over to Blacks essentially went out of production, weakening the country's economy. Second, a substantial portion of White Rhodesians were British citizens, and the British government was protesting the dispossession and mistreatment of its citizens.

It soon became clear to Mugabe, however, that the British government of Prime Minister Tony Blair really didn't care what happened to Rhodesia's Whites and that the government's protests were merely empty words. Furthermore, as the Rhodesian economy, badly damaged by the earlier seizures of White farms, sank further toward chaos, jobless Blacks clamored for even more White land. A government of reasonable men might have salvaged the Rhodesian economy by a combination of austerity measures and strict law enforcement, but that is not the African way. The African way -- more generally, the Black way is to kill the goose and get all the golden eggs now. So Mugabe, in order to maintain his popularity, has continued to let the mobs of jobless Blacks seize White farms and despoil them.

The process is now spiraling out of control. Last week a group of White farmers fought their way through a mob of squatters who were attacking a White farm. They rescued the besieged White farmer, but they injured a number of the Black squatters while doing it. The Mugabe government in turn arrested 23 of the White farmers who had been involved in the rescue, denied them bond, and threw them into prison in chains, where they now are at the tender mercies of Black jailers.

It is mid-winter in Rhodesia, and the unheated prison cells where the White farmers are being held are freezing. When three jailers in the prison responded to a request from the Whites for blankets, Mugabe promptly had the jailers themselves arrested. The Whites are not to be "coddled," he announced, sending a clear message to the other jailers and to policemen that Whites could be abused with impunity. Mugabe has, in effect, declared all White Rhodesians to be outlaws. Blacks may attack them and steal their property, and they may not attempt to protect themselves. In order to make things perfectly clear, last Saturday Mugabe's second-in-command, Vice President Joseph Msika, announced: "Whites are not human beings." In the past year only nine White farmers have been murdered by Blacks during the seizures of White farms, but the death toll is now certain to increase rapidly.

Also last Saturday, Mugabe steeply increased his goal for the dispossession of Whites when he revealed a new plan calling for 95 per cent of all White farmland in Rhodesia to be turned over to Blacks. That, on top of the imprisonment of the 23 White farmers, caused a mass exodus of White families from farms in the area of northern Rhodesia where mobs of Black squatters have been most active recently. Three hundred women and children were evacuated from 130 White farms over the weekend, and more than 60 of those farms already have been invaded and ransacked by squatters, who routinely slaughter all pet cats and dogs left behind, carry off everything of value, even ripping out bathtubs and other plumbing fixtures, and destroy the rest. White evacuees in the town of Chinhoyi were attacked on the streets by Blacks, and White women who attempted to take food and warm clothing to their imprisoned husbands were beaten outside the prison.

And the controlled media here are silent. The politicians are silent. The Christian ministers, who used to preach crusades against Rhodesia when it was a White country, are silent. The various bleeding-heart types, who are terribly distressed over what AIDS is doing to the Black population of Africa and always are running around organizing international conferences and lobbying the government to provide more medical assistance to AIDS-stricken Blacks, are silent.

The media bosses are silent because they are happy with the present situation. This is the way they planned it. The politicians and most of the rest are silent because they really don't care. Those who are a little uncomfortable about the stepped-up genocide being waged against Whites in Rhodesia are afraid to say anything lest they be accused of "White racism." Everyone with any sense at all of Political Correctness understands that any expression of concern or sympathy for White people engaged in a conflict with Blacks is racist. The details are irrelevant: in any racial conflict, one must support the non-White side in order to be Politically Correct. It doesn't matter what the Blacks are doing to the Whites: if you complain about it, you will be accused of racism.

I've seen this happen many times. My organization, the National Alliance, distributes leaflets and stickers with the message, "Earth's most endangered species: the White race help preserve it," and then our address. That's all: no mention of Blacks, Jews, racial conflict, or anything else, just a call for concern about preserving our own kind. And yet every time we distribute this message, the news media begin shrieking hysterically about "racism" and "hate": every time. Some of our "Earth's most endangered species" stickers show up in a school or on a university campus or posted on traffic signs in a community, and the local media people begin shrieking about "hate propaganda" and urge local citizens to call the police if they see one of our stickers.

The big Jewish media bosses have everyone who works for the media, Gentile as well as Jew, so thoroughly conditioned, so thoroughly indoctrinated with anti-White propaganda, that any expression of concern for White people is denounced immediately as "hate" and "racism." I'll guarantee you, if the White Rhodesians were mopping up the Blacks over there, running the last of them out of the country and reclaiming their farms, there would be non-stop anti-Rhodesian coverage on every television news program in America and in Britain. There would be calls from the politicians in the Congress for our government to send in the U.S. Army to save the Blacks and punish the wicked White Rhodesians. A strict embargo on all trade with Rhodesia already would have been imposed. That idiot we have in the White House wouldn't have to study the matter the way he did before issuing a statement on stem cell research; the Jews would have him on television immediately denouncing the Rhodesians and threatening grim reprisals. And his British counterpart, Tony Blair, would be shaking his fist and foaming at the mouth as he raved against the evils of "White racism."

And do you know what the British and U.S. governments have done to discourage Mugabe in his current war against the White population of Rhodesia? The Brits are threatening not to let their cricket team play in Rhodesia when it goes on tour next year. Last week the U.S. Senate passed something called the "Zimbabwe Democracy and Recovery Act." It couples additional monetary handouts from the U.S. Treasury for various programs in Rhodesia to visa restrictions on those charged with violent repression of civil rights. Visa restrictions! That's what's supposed to make Mugabe behave himself!

Of course, there's no hint in the "Zimbabwe Democracy and Recovery Act" of the genocide being waged against White Rhodesians. Really, the whole idea of the thing is to provide money for the so-called "democratic opposition" to Mugabe's dictatorship: money to finance Black democrats, not to save White Rhodesians. Even so, the whole business is being handled very quietly, lest the media make a fuss about it and claim that it's a "racist" act because by helping Mugabe's opponents it may help the White farmers. But really, there's no danger of the media making a fuss about it because the last thing the Jewish media bosses want to do is alert the White lemmings here about what's going on in Rhodesia.

Well, as I said earlier, I don't like to talk about what's going on in Rhodesia and in South Africa, and believe me, what's happening in Rhodesia now will be happening in South Africa soon. It depresses me to talk about this. I talk about it because it is a powerful lesson for us. It was only a few years ago that both of these countries were White countries. They were good, decent places for our people to live. I knew South Africans and Rhodesians. They were better people, on the average, than White Americans: better looking, healthier, better racially, better genetically. They had a small problem with Black terrorists, but it was a small problem. Fewer Rhodesians and South Africans were killed each year by Black terrorists than were killed in traffic accidents. Many, many more died each year from smoking cigarettes than from fighting a bush war against Black communists such as Robert Mugabe. And yet both countries now are under Black rule and are sinking rapidly into savagery and chaos.

How did it happen? The short answer is that it happened because both countries were persuaded to commit collective race suicide. I knew Rhodesians more than 20 years ago, before they all decided to commit suicide. I have known South Africans both before and after their collective suicide in 1993. They had some weaknesses that I noticed from the beginning. For one thing they were far too strongly under the influence of their churches and of Christian doctrine. This was especially true of the Afrikaners, the Boers, but I also noticed it to a lesser extent among Rhodesians and among the English portion, the Anglican portion, of the South African population. The Christian churches trained every Black terrorist leader in Rhodesia and in South Africa, but this fact seemed to make no impression on the Whites there. The churches were a part of White society. The Whites believed the churches were on their side: White, Christian civilization versus Black savagery and superstition, that sort of thing. Even after the churches betrayed them to their enemies, most of them still believed that.

Well, actually, there was more to the psychological weakness of the Whites than subversive Christian "brotherhood" teaching. In a sense, the Whites were too civilized, too genteel. I used to tell my South African visitors, "It may be that the Black terrorists are no real military threat to you, but the only viable long-range solution for you is to get rid of all the Blacks and other non-Whites in your country. Do whatever you must do: force them out, sterilize them, kill them -- otherwise you will lose your country. Of course, it was easy for me to say that and much harder for the South Africans to implement it, with their economy making such extensive use of Black labor. There would have been very tough economic, political, and diplomatic problems to solve.

But the negative reactions of my South African guests to my advice went beyond these practical difficulties, beyond their reluctance to give up their Black gardeners and cooks and cleaning women and their reluctance to face the economic problems of restructuring their economy to use White labor only. They were shocked by my advice. Most of them, I believe, regarded Blacks as fellow human beings who were merely at a lower stage of development and still needed guidance and help from Whites. "Blacks are like children," they told me. "They need our help, and most Blacks know that. They know that they are better off under our guidance than they would be without it. That's why we don't have to worry about their ever trying to take over our government and run it themselves. They know that they need us. It's only a few terrorists who are a problem, and we can deal with the terrorists."

You know, that sounds a lot like the sort of foolishness that I used to hear from my fellow Southerners back in the 1950s and even into the 1960s. None of the Southerners with whom I discussed the matter believed that Blacks were equal in intelligence to Whites or in their ability to build or to maintain a civilization, but they could not quite bring themselves to regard Blacks as vermin to be eradicated. That just wasn't Christian. And even those who were relatively free of Christian influences felt that I was going too far. "Help the Blacks along," they told me. "Make a few concessions to them, show them that we aren't interested in oppressing them, and they will behave themselves. They will see that it is in their interest not to wreck the society that has given them so much more than they could obtain on their own. We can't just exterminate them or force them all to go back to Africa. That would be barbaric. That would be stooping to their level."

Foolishness. Suicidal foolishness. We really have become too civilized and have forgotten one of Nature's most basic rules: Two different types of animal cannot permanently occupy exactly the same ecological niche. One eventually must drive the other into extinction. That is what is happening now in southern Africa. And in fact, it also is happening in America.

We accept the truth of this when other species are involved. Why is it so difficult for many of us to apply the rule to ourselves as well? Why do some of us believe that it is un-civilized or un-genteel to deal with our race problem in a rational way?

I'm sure that everyone has heard the propaganda slogan promoted by the Jewish media and their collaborators to the effect that racists are made, not born. The Politically Correct party line is that children are born without any racial feelings or predispositions at all, and that if we don't teach them to be racists, they will grow up loving everyone equally, and that will be a desirable state of affairs. That's the way to avoid racial conflict, and so we should be very careful to shield our children from any influences that might make racists of them.

Well, for one thing that propaganda is based on a lie. And for another thing the lie is calculated to weaken us and to hasten our annihilation. The fact is that children, while not born with an explicit set of opinions about racial matters, are born with a strong tendency to regard their own kind as friend and those who are not their kind as foe. To this extent, racism does not require deliberate tutelage. Children become racists, which is to say, they develop a strong preference for their own kind, through a natural process known as "imprinting" very early in life. Nature gave us this tendency because it is a survival trait. We developed the trait over millions of years of evolution, because those of us who had it were more likely to survive than those who didn't have it. And the media bosses and their allies, who are saturating us with the lie that racism is unnatural and evil, don't want us to survive.

If you want to read more about the evolutionary basis of so-called "racism," I recommend that you read some of the works of the very distinguished anthropologist Sir Arthur Keith, especially his book A New Theory of Human Evolution. It's a bit hard to find these days because it's Politically Incorrect and has been purged from many libraries that formerly carried it. Sir Arthur Keith was a very civilized and genteel man, but he also was a perceptive and honest student of Nature.

As for me, I make no pretensions to gentility. I tend to be crude and simple and direct. Sir Arthur Keith explains it all in very polite terms, but I say it simply this way: If we want our kind to survive on this planet longer than another generation or two, then we must clear the cobwebs of Christian superstition and Jewish propaganda from our minds and face the facts without being squeamish. One fact is that we must have exclusive possession of those portions of this planet that constitute suitable habitat for us. Another fact is that in order to obtain and maintain that exclusive possession, we must be prepared to kill, to annihilate, any and all competitors. A third fact is that racism is God's gift to any race that wants to survive. Racism is healthy and natural and essential, and we had damned well better clear of minds of the Judaeo-Christian lie that it is evil and wicked and nasty and low-brow.

To sum it up, the law of life is: kill or die. That's still the law, no matter how civilized and genteel we become. We do not invalidate the law by wearing the latest fashions, by being computer whizzes, and by attending very polite tea parties. The law does not say, of course, that we cannot cooperate with our kind, that we cannot collaborate constructively with other members of our own race. It does not say that we cannot design and build a society in which we can work and play and breed and live at peace, more or less, with other White people. Not at peace all the time, but most of the time: enough of the time to still continue building and developing and improving our civilization, and, make no mistake about this, it is our civilization and no one else's.

But the law of life does tell us that if we believe that being nice to members of other races will persuade them to be nice to us, then we are on the way out, just like the Rhodesians. It does tell us that if we deal with Blacks and mestizos and Asians under the assumption that they are like us because they have learned to speak English and to mimic our manners, or that they have the same aspirations and ideals and standards and values and way of looking at the world that we do, then we will doom our posterity to oblivion. If we take the paternalistic attitude, as the South Africans did and as many American Southerners did, that the Blacks are like children, whom we should protect and promote and assist, and think that they will appreciate our help, then the fate of our race will be that of the dodo.

Look at what is happening in South Africa and in Rhodesia now today. Think about how the Rhodesians and South Africans got themselves into their horrible, lethal predicaments. Then ponder the question: should we strive to be nice, or should we strive to survive?

The Saga of Yahweh ben Yahweh

An Associated Press news story recently caught my attention. The story was about the release from prison this week of a Black religious leader, who calls himself Yahweh ben Yahweh. His name actually is Hulon Mitchell. He's a former Black Muslim, and, in fact, he ran a Black Muslim mosque in Atlanta for a while in the early 1970s, until he was accused of sexual improprieties with underaged Muslim girls and of dipping into the collection plate. He dropped out of the Nation of Islam, where he was known as Hulon X, and in 1978 founded his own church, the so-called Nation of Yahweh, with a religion based on Judaism. He calls his followers "Black Hebrew Israelites" and tells them that they, rather than the Jews, are the "chosen people" ordained by God to rule the world, as described in the Old Testament. He took for himself the name Yahweh ben Yahweh that's Hebrew for "God, the son of God."

So why should we be interested in yet another megalomaniac religious cult based on Judaism? Well, the thing of interest to us about the Nation of Yahweh is the initiation requirement Hulon Mitchell established for the elite, inner circle of his church, the so-called "Brotherhood." The requirement was the murder of a White person, and the bringing to Mitchell of some evidence of the murder, such as an ear or even the head of the victim. In fact, Mitchell preached to his whole congregation that the killing of White people, whom he calls "blue-eyed devils," is pleasing to Yahweh.

By the time the police finally wound up Mitchell's race-murder cult in November 1990 and packed Mitchell off to prison, his followers had butchered and mutilated at least 23 men, women, and children, 14 of them in Miami alone. Some of the victims were recalcitrant members of his own church, and the Associated Press story doesn't give a racial breakdown, but a figure that I've seen elsewhere puts the number of White victims at 16. Mitchell spent a little over 10 years in prison. That works out to about eight months for the murder of each "blue-eyed devil." He was released on parole earlier this week.

You didn't hear about it? You didn't see anything about it on CNN or network television? You shouldn't be surprised. It's not the sort of news that the bosses of the controlled media want you to know about. There was a story about it last Saturday in the Washington Post, but the entire thrust of that story is the infringement of Mitchell's civil rights by the conditions imposed on him by the parole board that released him. The Washington Post article is not headed "Black Cult Leader Who Ordered Ritual Murder of Whites to Be Released." Oh, no! A headline like that would be considered "racist" by the people who run the Post; they are afraid that it might make White readers wary of Blacks. It might even lead some readers to ask questions, such as, "Why has this nutcase Black murderer been turned loose?" although I myself am not so optimistic about the ability of White Americans to figure out who their enemies are and react appropriately.

The actual head on last Saturday's Washington Post story is "No Freedom of Religion for Yahweh," and the subhead is "Parole Commission Limits Contact with His Followers." There's no mention at all in the story about the initiation requirements for the "Brotherhood" or of the ritual murder of "blue-eyed devils": just one cryptic mention, at the end, of Mitchell playing with the severed ear of a White victim. The story deals almost entirely with Mitchell's contesting of the conditions imposed on his parole by the parole board. They told him that he couldn't have any further contact with the more than 1,000 members of the Nation of Yahweh. His lawyers have gone to court to have the conditions on his parole removed.

You know, I remember the same sort of reluctance on the part of the controlled news media to report the details of Mitchell's activities 10 years ago, when he was arrested, charged, tried, and sent to prison. There was minimal publicity, as if the media bosses were embarrassed by the whole affair.

It's worth our noting that Mitchell got his idea for the initiation requirement into his so-called "Brotherhood," the inner circle of his church, from a similar operation by the Nation of Islam during the time he was a member of that group. I talked about this in a broadcast a couple of years ago, but it's worth repeating. During a six-month period in 1973 and 1974, when Mitchell was a high-ranking member of the Nation of Islam, an elite group inside the Nation of Islam called the "Death Angels" murdered several hundred White men, women, and children. The exact number will never be known because many of the victims were so-called "street people": runaway teenaged girls on drugs, hippies, and the like people who weren't missed when they disappeared.

There were many of these pitiful lost souls on the streets of San Francisco in the 1960s and the 1970s: products of the great "counterculture" revolution promoted on American university campuses by Jews like Jerry Rubin and Abbie Hoffman. Their corpses often were hacked up and dumped in the ocean or buried. But the San Francisco police who tracked the Death Angels counted 15 very tangible victims from all walks of life, not just street people: 15 murdered White people, and eight others who were seriously injured during attempts to murder them. While they were looking for the killers, the police referred to the series of murders as the "Zebra" killings: all Black on White.

Eventually the Death Angels were broken up when San Francisco police arrested eight of them. Four of them were put on trial, and after the longest trial in California history--a year and six days--they were convicted on all counts. The transcript for the trial fills nearly 14,000 pages and fills 141 volumes. During the trial, one witness, Anthony Harris, a Death Angel himself, spent 12 days testifying to the horrifying details of Death Angel operations. The Nation of Islam taught that the killing of a "blue-eyed devil" is pleasing to Allah, just as Hulon Mitchell later taught that it is pleasing to Yahweh. Inside the Nation of Islam, there was an elite organization whose members had especially pleased Allah. That was the Death Angels. To become a Death Angel one had to murder nine White men or five White women or four White children. In 1974, the San Francisco chapter alone of the Death Angels had 15 accredited members.

Some of the White victims were taken to a loft used by the San Francisco chapter of Death Angels, where they were tied to chairs and tortured to death in ways far too gruesome to describe here. Harris testified that he was given the butchered remnants of one of these kidnapped White torture victims, all trussed up in a plastic sheet like a turkey, and told to drive the package to a bluff overlooking San Francisco Bay and throw it into the water. And the killing wasn't confined to San Francisco or even California. Other chapters of the Death Angels murdered Whites in New York, in Georgia, in Florida. The word spread among Black Muslims everywhere, and it is very difficult to believe that Hulon Mitchell did not get the idea for his "Brotherhood" and its initiation requirement from the Death Angels.

As with the Death Angels in California, many of the ritual murder victims chosen by Mitchell's Black Hebrew Israelites were the easiest White victims: people who wouldn't be missed, including young runaways, street people, low-class Whites who lived in Black neighborhoods or who socialized with Blacks.

Well, as I said earlier, in November 1990 the police finally caught up with Hulon Mitchell, also known as Yahweh ben Yahweh, and charged him and his followers with 14 murders in the Miami area. And now he's out of prison again, and the only question is whether or not he'll be permitted to run the Nation of Yahweh again.

A couple of much more interesting questions for us are, first, why was this hate-crazed mass murderer of White people turned loose under any conditions? Ten years for sending his followers out to murder 23 people or 14, if we count only those in Miami, and then turned loose on us again!

Imagine that this murderer was a neo-Nazi leader who sent his followers out to kill Jews as initiation requirements, bringing back an ear from each victim as proof to their leader that they had done as ordered. Do you think that there's any chance the government would be turning him loose, simply imposing on him the condition that he no longer could be a neo-Nazi leader? Can you imagine the howl you would hear from the media if that did happen? There would be no end to it. There would be tearful interviews with relatives of the victims on network television every day. The media would put on an even bigger circus than the one they put on after the dragging death of a Black ex-convict in Jasper, Texas, three years ago. And we would hear from the media a non-stop chorus of "hate, hate, hate" and "hate crime, hate crime, hate crime, racism, racism, racism." You know that's the way the media would react. You've already heard it from them often enough.

Why, then, the almost total silence about the release of Hulon Mitchell, alias Yahweh ben Yahweh? Why is neither the word "hate" nor the phrase "hate crime" used even once in the Washington Post story about the controversy over the conditions of his release? Why is the general public almost completely ignorant of who this man is and what he did, even if it happened 11 years ago? Why is the public just as ignorant of the hundreds of "Zebra" murders committed by the Death Angels? Why do the controlled mass media never say anything about these atrocious murders of White people by Blacks? It's not that there's a shortage of facts; as I said, there are 14,000 pages of horrifying testimony from the Death Angels trial. Could it possibly be that the reason for the silence of the media is that the murderers are Black and the victims are White, and that fact contradicts the media party line the Jewish party line that Blacks are the good guys and Whites are the bad guys, and that in interracial conflict Blacks are the victims and Whites are the aggressors? Could that be it?

Before I tell you about another recent news story that may help to answer these questions, I'll mention that if you have an inquiring mind and want to dig up the facts on the horrendous "Zebra" killings that inspired Yahweh ben Yahweh, a good place for you to start is with Clark

Howard's 1979 documentary book Zebra. That book will lead you to other sources. Although it is out of print, you should be able to find it in a larger library, if it hasn't been purged by the minions of Political Correctness.

The other recent news story is from Denver's Rocky Mountain News, which is one of Colorado's major newspapers. It's about preliminary court proceedings late last month against a gang of teenagers in Colorado Springs who murdered another teenager and his grandparents in a rural area 50 miles west of Colorado Springs. There are several things about this story that make it potentially interesting at a national level, and yet it has not been touched by the news media outside of Colorado. Is it possible that the media bosses feel that they've already given enough attention to teenaged murderers in Colorado with the saturation coverage of the shootings at Columbine High School in Littleton, less than a hundred miles from Colorado Springs? I really don't think that's their reason for suppressing this story outside of Colorado, but I'll let you be the judge of that.

The murders took place at the beginning of this year, and the murderers were arrested during the past few months, as the police gathered evidence. Charged with murder now are Isaac Grimes, 16; Jonathan Matheny and Glen Urban, both 18; and Simon Sue, 19. Their trials are scheduled for later this year. Grimes, Matheny, and Urban are White. Simon Sue is a non-White immigrant from Guyana, in South America, primarily of Indian ancestry. He is the local gang leader of a paramilitary, anti-racist organization with roots in Guyana. He calls his organization Operation and Reconnaissance Agents, but it usually is identified in news reports from Colorado Springs only by its initials, OARA. Sue preached to the other teenagers about the evils of White racism, and he ordered them to commit several burglaries to steal guns and money to be used for fighting racism.

One of their victims is 15-year-old Tony Dutcher, who was a schoolmate of theirs in Colorado Springs. On previous occasions, Tony had invited his classmate Isaac Grimes to the rural home of his grandparents. During one of these visits, Grimes had decided that the grandfather, 60-year-old Carl Dutcher, was a White racist, and he reported this back to Sue and the other members of OARA. Sue decided that Carl Dutcher should be killed because of his racial beliefs. During the New Year's school vacation at the beginning of this year, Grimes visited Tony at his grandparents' rural home. The two boys camped out in a lean-to behind the Dutcher home. During the night, Grimes crept up behind Tony with a knife and cut his throat as he lay in his sleeping bag. Police said that Tony's throat had been cut all the way to the spinal column, and he bled to death.

Grimes then went into the Dutchers' house and awaited the arrival of another member of the anti-racist gang, Jonathan Matheny. When Matheny arrived, he shot Carl Dutcher with a rifle. Dutcher's wife, 58-year-old JoAnna, barricaded herself in a bathroom, but Matheny shot her through the bathroom door. Grimes finished them off by slitting their throats.

Now, I don't think that it's necessary for me to explain to you why the Jewish bosses of the national news media decided that this was a story you didn't need to hear about. What's indisputable is that it was a horribly atrocious series of murders with several very newsworthy aspects, and that if you live outside of Colorado you didn't hear a peep about it until I told you about it a moment ago.

Suppose that the murderers, instead of being members of an anti-racist gang led by a non-White, had been White racists, and suppose that their victims had been chosen because one of them favored racial mixing. Do you believe that the media bosses would have suppressed the story of the murders or decided that it just wasn't newsworthy?

Of course, stories of Black-on-White crime are suppressed by the media every day. I chose this particular story because it not only illustrates the way in which news is selectively reported by the controlled media in order to support their party line, but it also illustrates the concrete results of the anti-White brainwashing conducted by the media and the schools.

We might with good justification blame the murders of the Dutcher family on the Washington government's insane immigration policy, which permits resentful, hate-filled, non-White trash such as Simon Sue into this country.

With even better justification we can blame the murders on the racial propaganda campaign of the media, the government, the schools, and the churches. That propaganda campaign pumps into the heads of young White people the lies that all the races really are the same under the skin, that the only reason members of all races can't live happily and productively together is the divisive effect of White racism, and that Whites who don't want to live and interbreed with non-Whites are hate-filled and irrational and are the cause of all interracial strife. The propagandists don't come right out and say it, but they certainly imply that these White racists, who are holding back racial progress and making things unpleasant for everyone, ought to be done away with in some way. That certainly was the message that teenagers Isaac Grimes, Jonathan Matheny, and Glen Urban absorbed from television and from their school teachers. That was the message that led them to obey the orders of the hate-filled mongrel from Guyana and to murder the Dutcher family.

Interestingly enough, it's also the message that played a major role in the Columbine massacre in Littleton, Colorado, in April 1999. The two teenaged murderers at Columbine High School, Eric Harris and Dylan Klebold, were fervent anti-racists who fantasized on their Internet Web site about torturing and murdering White racists. Where do you think they picked up those sick and poisonous ideas? Who put the idea into their heads that we live in a "racist" society and that racists ought to be killed?

If you remember, the spin put on the Columbine massacre by the Jewish media bosses right after the killings is that Harris and Klebold were neo-Nazis and racists, even though one of them, Klebold, is a Jew. It wasn't until later, when investigators began looking into the private lives and the Internet postings of the two killers that it came out that they were not racists but rather were fanatical anti-racists. But that fact never received much publicity, even though several pungent excerpts from their Web site were reported in the New York Times. The average American couch potato still believes that the killers were White racists who deliberately targeted Blacks in their massacre, because that was the lie propagated by the media immediately after the massacre, and it was never withdrawn.

The point of all of this is that the controlled mass media in America are consistent and deliberate in their policy of deception. Whether it was their intense anti-apartheid and anti-White propaganda against Rhodesia and South Africa back when those were both White countries, followed by their deafening silence about the horror of what's happening in those two countries today under Black rule; or their silence about the atrocious series of "Zebra" murders of "blue-eyed devils" in this country by the Death Angels and then by Yahweh ben Yahweh's Black Hebrew Israelites; or the spin that they put on their reporting of the Columbine massacre in 1999; or their suppression of the story of the butchery of the Dutcher family in Colorado this year, they consistently suppress or minimize news that might undermine their multiculti, egalitarian propaganda. They consistently suppress or minimize news of non-White aggression against Whites.

They slant the news with the deliberate intention of making White people feel apologetic or even guilty for defending themselves against non-Whites. They deliberately attempt to disarm us morally and keep us off guard. They deliberately conceal from us information that would lead us to question their policies or their motives. They deliberately deceive us with the intention of making us believe that things are rosy wherever their policies have been put into effect, such as in South Africa and Rhodesia, and that everything will be rosy here when their open-border immigration policies and their plans for more "hate crime" and "speech crime" laws have had time to take effect.

They are consistent and deliberate in their use of the media to deceive us because their aim is to weaken us and to destroy us, the way they already have weakened the White people of South Africa and destroyed the White people of Rhodesia. The Jews are our misfortune. The Jews are the eternal enemies of our people.

Self-Discipline and Moral Health

Well, the murder of White farmers and the gang-rape of White women by AIDS-infected Blacks continues apace in South Africa, as does the seizure and trashing of White farms in Rhodesia. Rhodesia's Black dictator, Robert Mugabe, is boasting openly now of his intent to run all Whites out of Rhodesia. He understands now that no other country will come to the aid of the White Rhodesians, and he can do anything he wants to them. The British government of Tony Blair talks about not letting Britain's cricket team play in Rhodesia, and the U.S. government of George Bush talks about imposing visa restrictions on Mugabe and members of his government if he doesn't behave himself, and so Mugabe is laughing at them and proceeding with his plan to ethnically cleanse Rhodesia.

I could talk more about these things happening to our kinsmen in southern Africa and about the failure of our corrupt and treasonous governments to do anything to stop what is happening. I could talk more about the way in which the Jew-controlled news media in America consistently ignore these things: the same media that spearheaded the effort to persuade Americans only a decade ago to apply economic and diplomatic pressure to White South Africans until they turned their country over to Blacks.

I also could talk about more horrible Black-on-White crimes that have been committed in America recently and about the refusal of the controlled media to report these crimes. There's certainly plenty of that happening, and it's important to publicize it, as I often have done in earlier broadcasts.

Today, however, perhaps you will bear with me while I talk about a much more prosaic matter: less blood-stirring than the murder and rape of our kinsmen in southern Africa and less provocative than crimes against our people in America. What I want to talk about today is what's happening to the character and the spirit of our people. That's important, and in a sense it's as much at the root of our other problems as is the control of our news and entertainment media by the Jews or the corruption of our political process and of our governmental and social institutions resulting from that control.

Actually, I've talked about this before, but I'll try to deal with different aspects of it today. In discussing the changing character and moral quality of our people, it's important for us to have some fixed standards to which we can refer. I don't want to sound like some old geezer complaining about how much tougher he had it as a kid than today's kids do. So I've collected input from a number of other observers: teachers, parents, employers. I've tried to get balanced and reasonably accurate views of the state of morals in America today and that of 50 years ago, and to examine the differences and to try to understand what caused the differences.

I've also examined statistics where they were available. It's difficult to quantify some moral elements numerically, but others can be quantified or at least, correlated in a reasonable way with things that can be quantified. For example, I believe that it is reasonable to correlate the level of personal debt with the ability to postpone gratification: the greater the level of personal debt--typically mortgage debt and credit card debt--the less the ability to postpone gratification.

In the last 30 years, the average personal debt in America, measured as a percentage of income, has increased 70 per cent. People are much more likely today to spend money they don't have than they were 30 years ago. And there is, of course, a penalty for that. People end up spending a great deal more for the things they want if they borrow money to buy them, and so they end up being able to buy less than the person who earns his money before he buys and therefore pays no interest.

Without beating around the bush, I'll tell you now what I have concluded about the change in the moral quality of our people during the past half century. American men and women today are softer, weaker, less reliable, less willing to accept responsibility, less patriotic, less able to endure discomfort or hardship, less willing to postpone gratification, and more willing to tolerate weakness and corruption in others than they were 50 years ago. And White American men are less masculine than they were 50 years ago.

I haven't studied the matter enough to decide whether women are less feminine than they were. Certainly, there still are many very feminine women in America, but there also are more than enough unfeminine women running around today, and these un-feminine women, these feminists, certainly have more influence and are doing much more damage than they were permitted to do in the past. Whether American women as a whole are less feminine than in the past, however, I can't say. But it definitely is the case that American men are less manly on the average than they used to be. And by "less manly" I don't mean less sexually active; I mean less dignified, less self-reliant, less dependable, less self-confident, less courageous. Today they talk more and whine more, are less inclined to keep their commitments, and are more inclined to wait for someone to tell them what to do. They aren't as tough as they used to be.

Our people are less disciplined than they used to be. More specifically, they have less self-discipline, less ability to use will power, to make themselves do what they believe they ought to do. There is in each of us a combination of infantile urges and more mature desires and needs. The infant seeks only to gratify himself and to avoid pain. The well-developed man or woman has a more inclusive concept of "self" than the infant. He is concerned not only about his own needs but also about the needs of his family, his community, his clan, his nation, and his race.

And the well-developed man or woman has longer-range needs than the infant. The infant wants instant gratification, instant relief from discomfort. That's all that is of concern to the infant; nothing else matters. The well-developed adult, on the other hand, thinks about future needs and future dangers and is able to balance these against present feelings: against present desires and fears and pain. He subordinates the present to the future. If he decides that a future need is important, he will suppress present desires, endure present discomfort, and face present dangers, in order to achieve his future goal. The ability to do this is a function of a person's degree of self-discipline. The person without self-discipline remains infantile in his behavior, and often in his attitudes as well. The person with a high degree of self-discipline is able to keep his infantile urges under firm control and to marshal all of his resources, all of his strength and intelligence, to accomplish what he believes is most important.

This undoubtedly is an over-simplification, but I believe that it is nevertheless useful to look at all of the aspects of moral decline that I mentioned earlier: the greater softness, the lesser dependability, the lesser self-reliance, the lesser ability to postpone gratification, and the lesser degree of patriotism, as consequences of lesser self-discipline. By lumping all of these aspects of moral decline together as a decline in self-discipline, we only need to ask ourselves: what has caused our decline in self-discipline, by and large? Why does the average American man or woman today have less self-discipline than the average American of 1940 or 1950?

I believe that there's more than one answer, more than one reason for the lesser degree of self-discipline today. In the first place, self-discipline develops as a result of the application of external discipline, especially when we are young. There is, of course, a genetically determined component of self-discipline, the innate self-discipline of the race as a whole, which evolved with us over millions of years and enabled us to survive. Because our temperate-zone environment was less forgiving and imposed a harsher external discipline on us, and on other races that also evolved in the North, than the tropical-zone environment imposed on the races that evolved in the Tropics, we and the North Asian peoples, the Japanese and the Chinese, for example, have greater innate self-discipline than Blacks do. But self-discipline also is the consequence of training, of the deliberate application of external discipline, when we are young. And it is clear that there is much less of that today than 50 years ago.

The raising of children in America has been feminized, softened. Spankings and other forms of corporal punishment are out. In fact, the prevailing attitude among White parents today is that any sort of punishment or denial is a bad thing. Disobedience no longer merits a whipping or the withdrawal of an allowance. Disrespect to a parent no longer earns a hard slap across the face and being confined to one's room for a few days. Self-indulgence in children actually is encouraged today.

Daily chores, which used to be the norm for children, no longer are required. The number of children who are trained on a musical instrument or who are trained in any way at all has declined drastically. In America's feminized child-raising environment, to require a ten-year-old child to practice for two hours every day on the piano or the violin is considered cruel and unusual. To require a 12-year-old to spend four hours a day studying Latin or mathematics after school is equally abhorrent to television-bred parents.

So the lack of external discipline for children today definitely is a big part of the problem. And why is external discipline no longer imposed? Well, for one thing, we live in a less demanding world or so it seems to most Americans at the moment. We are fat and soft and spoiled. Technological advances have given the average family so many labor-saving appliances in the laundry room, in the kitchen, and in the yard that less labor is needed. The tendency today is not to repair things or to clean things and reuse them, but to throw them out and buy new ones. So chores for the kids aren't really the economic necessity they used to be. And with both parents working outside the home, with the day-care center replacing the parents, the enforcement of proper standards of behavior becomes more difficult. Most parents don't even try. They just let their kids absorb their morals from television and then run with the pack.

But there are other reasons for why external discipline no longer is imposed on children: propaganda against it. We experience propaganda that makes discipline a bad word, propaganda that makes the whole concept of discipline suspect and Politically Incorrect. Discipline is "fascist." Disciplined is what the German Nazis were, with their heel clicking and saluting and their "Jawohl, mein Führer!" The disciplined Germans were evil and racist. We've seen that in a thousand Hollywood films and a thousand TV serials. Much better to be relaxed and informal and insubordinate. That's the American way. Take the Black man as a model in this regard. Discipline leads to the gas chambers and to guilt, guilt, guilt! To discipline a child is to warp him and make a little Nazi out of him. That's the party line that has been pumped into us by television and by Hollywood for the past 50 years.

For the most part, the party line that the Jews have fed us from Hollywood has been implicit rather than explicit. Implicit propaganda is generally more effective, because it's less obvious and more difficult to counter. When they launched the "counterculture revolution" on America's college and university campuses 40 years ago, however, they came out of the closet. They denounced any sort of discipline or self-restraint in quite explicit terms. The assault on discipline was just one front in a Jewish war against everything traditional. The aim was not only to turn Gentile students against authority and to get them to abandon their own standard of conduct: it was to turn the whole Gentile world upside down.

At the same time that discipline was denounced explicitly as "Nazi," there were assaults on so-called "racism" and "sexism" and traditional morality and traditional standards of civility and decorum and grooming. There were demands for more Black students to be recruited and more Black professors to be hired, regardless of qualifications; for women to be treated like men; for coed dormitories; for an end to the emphasis on Western, that is, on White civilization, which was denounced as racist and sexist. It was the beginning of Political Correctness: Whites are bad, Blacks are good; heterosexual men are suspect, women and gay men are okay; discipline and self-restraint are stuffy and old-fashioned whereas licentiousness, incontinence, and wantonness are "cool." Fidel Castro, Che Guevara, Ho Chi Minh, Eldridge Cleaver, and Malcolm X became campus heroes and role models.

The amazing thing is that the Jews were able to persuade not only homosexuals and feminists and non-Whites to go along with their crusade against traditional Gentile society; they also were able to persuade heterosexual White men and women. Clearly, there already was a good deal of softness in our society, especially at our universities.

Many groups were behind the crusade against discipline, but no one expressed its spirit better than the two Jewish youth activists, Jerry Rubin and Abbie Hoffman, leaders of the Youth International Party, or "yippies" for short. These two Jews probably got as much media publicity as all the other counterculture revolutionaries together. Rubin's book, Do It!, was published in 1970 by the Jewish publisher Simon and Schuster, which is owned by multibillionaire Jewish media boss Sumner Redstone, who also owns MTV and CBS, among other media. You can find Rubin's book in nearly every public and university library, and it would do you good to read it, but I'll read you just a few excerpts now, in which Rubin explains what the Jewish counterculture revolution is all about. And I apologize ahead of time for the obscene language. Part of the Jewish strategy was to break down all the traditional standards of behavior and discourse and to make civility and polite language seem old-fashioned.

Puritanism leads us to Vietnam. Sexual insecurity results in a supermasculinity trip called imperialism. Amerikan foreign policy, especially in Vietnam, makes no sense except sexually. Amerika has a frustrated penis, trying to drive itself into Vietnam's tiny slit to prove it is The Man. The revolution declares war on Original Sin, the dictatorship of parents over their kids, Christian morality, capitalism, and supermasculinity trips.…

Our tactic is to send niggers and longhair scum invading white middle-class homes, fucking on the living room floor, crashing on the chandeliers, spewing sperm on the Jesus pictures, breaking the furniture, and smashing Sunday school napalm-blood Amerika forever.

We will do whatever is forbidden. We will outrage Amerika until the bourgeoisie dies of apoplexy. We will turn Amerika's colleges into nudist camps.

Rubin says much more for example, he tells his young readers that they should kill their parents because parents are repressive and keep the kids from doing what they want to do, and he always spells "America" and "American" with a "k" instead of a "c" in order to suggest a German and therefore a Nazi flavor. He ends his book with the counterculture manifesto:

At community meetings all over the land, Bob Dylan will replace the National Anthem. There will be no more jails, courts, or police. The White House will become a crash pad for anybody without a place to stay in Washington. The world will become one big commune with free food and housing, everything shared. All watches and clocks will be destroyed. Barbers will go to rehabilitation camps, where they will grow their hair long. There will be no such crime as "stealing" because everything will be free. The Pentagon will be replaced by an LSD experimental farm. There will be no more schools or churches because the entire world will become one church and school. People will farm in the morning, make music in the afternoon, and fuck whenever they want to.

Again, I apologize for the language, but I really wanted you to get the flavor of what the Jews were pushing on our university campuses. I was there at the time, as a professor. The kids were absorbing the Jews' propaganda, and most of the parents were too busy with their own affairs to pay attention. Books such as Do It! were very widely read, and despite the childish phrasing and shock-effect style were taken seriously by millions of young, White Americans, just as was the Jewish singer Bob Zimmerman, who used the name Bob Dylan.

Although Rubin and Hoffman and the other Jews on our campuses went further and expressed things more brazenly and more crudely than the mainstream media, the mainstream media supported them, as witnessed, for example, by Simon and Schuster's publication and distribution of Rubin's book. All of the Jews in the media were peddling the same poison, just packaged differently for different segments of our population. And very few people who knew better were willing to speak out against what was happening, from fear of being denounced as "anti-Semitic" or "racist." The people who knew better also had become too soft and too lacking in self-discipline.

Certainly, we ourselves are to be blamed for failing to structure our society in a way to keep ourselves disciplined as our technological advances freed us from natural disciplinary pressures.

The attitude in America during the past few generations has been, "I want my children to have an easier life than I had, a softer life." The attitude instead should have been, "It is my responsibility to ensure that my children grow up to be strong, self-disciplined men and women." And we should have structured our schools and other institutions, and our child-raising practices, accordingly. But we didn't. And because we didn't, we have a generation of White Americans who are softer and flabbier mentally, morally, and physically than we had two generations ago.

In addition to this huge mistake on our part, however, we made the even bigger mistake of permitting Jews to infiltrate our society and to take over virtually all of our mass media of news and entertainment, which in the television age are able to determine what most of our people think. And the Jews have used their control of the media to exacerbate the indiscipline resulting from our own laxity. They have done everything they could to make us even softer and flabbier and therefore less willing and less able to resist their further encroachments.

Nature does not for long tolerate softness and indiscipline in man or in beast. Either we will free ourselves from Jewish influence and then restructure our society so as to make our race fit once again, or we will cease to exist as a race. This is a fact of life, and it is a fact that justifies whatever means are necessary, even the bloodiest and most radical means, to bring our people once again to moral health.

When Unreason Rules

In the 19th century, in 1865, an Englishman, using the pen name Lewis Carroll, wrote Alice's Adventures in Wonderland, in which he described a number of events in a fantastic dreamworld. The characters in this dreamworld behaved in erratic and irrational ways. In Wonderland, things just didn't make sense. That's the way many things are in our world today. They just don't make sense. Our society seems to be operating according to some very badly flawed logic. The behavior of public officials and private citizens alike is often irrational: far more often than it should be or than it has been in healthier times. Let me give you some examples.

The members of my organization, the National Alliance, distribute much printed material to the general public. Every day, National Alliance members are handing out leaflets at shopping malls, or posting stickers on bulletin boards or power poles or construction fences, or tossing packets of informational material on front porches in residential neighborhoods. Some of the material that we distribute contains figures on race and crime, which we obtain from the Department of Justice in Washington, or on race and HIV infection rates, which we obtain from the government's Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta. This material is designed to inform the reader on matters that we believe are important. Other material that we hand out or post in public places has only a very brief and simple message intended to put open-minded and responsible people in touch with us. An example of this material is a sticker that says simply: "Earth's most endangered species, the White race help preserve it." That's all, and then it gives a contact address for the National Alliance.

None of our material is insulting or derogatory or threatening. It's not intended to offend anyone or to generate any sort of hostility. It's intended only to inform people and to put them in contact with us. And it does put many people in touch with us. But the reaction from the mainstream news media and from people who are directly dependent on the good graces of the news media--politicians and bureaucrats, for example--the reaction is really Alice in Wonderland stuff. Every time they see one of our "Earth's most endangered species" stickers they become semi-hysterical and denounce it as "hate" literature. Really. To them the message "help preserve the White race" is "hate." I'm quite serious. It's not just a few unstable media people who react in this way. They all do it. They all denounce that message as "hate." And of course, so do all of the people in public office who feel that they must stay in the good graces of the mass media.

And they react similarly to our informational material on racial crime and AIDS statistics. If one of our leaflets points out that the Justice Department's crime data show that a White person is 55 times as likely to be assaulted by a Black as a Black is to be assaulted by a White, the media people go berserk and begin shrieking "hate!" "hate!" And they are echoed by the politicians and the bureaucrats, including local police officials, who already know that the data are factual. They also know that this information is never supposed to be mentioned in public. The public is not supposed to hear about them.

One of our leaflets cites data from the government's Centers for Disease Control to show that a heterosexual Black male is 14 times as likely as a heterosexual White male to be infected with HIV. Actually, that figure is several years old, and the ratio of Black to White infection rates has been increasing. The actual figure today is more than 15: a heterosexual Black male in the United States is more than 15 times as likely as a heterosexual White male to be infected with the AIDS-causing virus. The aim of this leaflet is to make White women aware of their much, much greater risk of catching AIDS if they have sexual contact with a Black. But the mainstream news media, all of them, denounce this informational material of ours as "hateful" and "racist" every time we distribute it in a community to any significant extent. And public officials regularly join their hysterical chorus of name-calling. Local police chiefs refer to our AIDS informational material as "hate literature" and lament the fact that there is no law against it.

This is Alice in Wonderland behavior. I mean, the news media are supposed to keep the public informed about significant matters of public interest. They're not supposed to try to keep the public from hearing about any news, whether that news is agreeable or disagreeable. The police are supposed to protect the public from significant dangers. Does anyone really believe that racial crime data are not interesting to the public? Does anyone really believe that warning the public about the danger of being infected with AIDS by having sexual contact with high-risk groups is not protecting the public? How can trying to keep the public from learning about the danger of AIDS infection possibly be compatible with the police mission of protecting the public?

But in fact the people who control the mainstream news media do try their best to keep you from hearing a lot of news. It's not just their screaming bloody murder whenever they see one of my pamphlets or leaflets with information they don't want disseminated; it's also their management of the news: their deliberate exaggeration of every White offense against a non-White and the minimizing or suppression of every non-White offense against Whites. I've certainly given you plenty of examples of the latter in recent broadcasts: their total blackout of news on last December's Wichita massacre, the non-reporting of what is happening to White people in Rhodesia and South Africa today.

Well, we all understand their reasons for the way they distort and censor the news: the media people are totally committed to the concepts of egalitarianism and multiculturalism. They want everyone else to be totally committed to these things also. In fact, they insist on it. So whenever any evidence appears that Blacks and Whites really aren't the same, that there are profound psychological and behavioral differences, as manifested in the much higher rate of criminal activity among Blacks, for example; or that there are significant physiological differences, as manifested in a much higher susceptibility to infection by HIV, then this evidence must be concealed. If it can't be concealed, then it must be explained away.

How do you explain away the criminal behavior of Blacks? It's difficult, so you confuse the issue. Every time a White commits a crime against a Black you raise an enormous hullabaloo and drown out all of the other news. If Whites are still concerned about Black criminality after that, you start beating the drums for reparations. You begin talking fast about how much Whites owe Blacks for two centuries of slavery. You try to make Whites feel guilty for not wanting to live with Blacks or to have their children go to school with Blacks. You trot out a few Christian preachers to give racial brotherhood sermons. You persuade the White public or, at least, the softer-headed Whites that if Whites will just be nicer to Blacks and will give them lots of reparations payments for slavery, then Blacks will stop raping, robbing, and killing Whites, and we all can live together in multicultural bliss and Whites won't have to feel guilty any longer.

What about the much greater danger of our women coming down with AIDS if we let them consort with Blacks? What about that 15-to-one ratio between heterosexual Black males and heterosexual White males? Well, you simply deny it. You say that it isn't true, that the statistics from the Centers for Disease Control are misrepresented, and you count on most of the public being too lazy or too inept to look into the matter for themselves. And of course, you scream about "hate" and "racism," and you trot out the Christian preachers again for more sermons on racial brotherhood and togetherness. And you give a big play to all of the new films coming out of Hollywood in which the White heroine beds down with a Black and doesn't catch AIDS as a consequence. You make interracial sex seem not only safe but also fashionable. And you never stop screaming that anyone who tries to persuade the public that sex with Blacks is risky is a "hater" and a "White supremacist" and a "neo-Nazi." These tactics of denial and obfuscation and name-calling and guilt mongering generally work because the people who know better--the medial researchers and the officials at the Centers for Disease Control--will keep their mouths shut rather than risk being labeled "haters" themselves.

One other thing you do, just to be sure, is try to persuade the public that it may be illegal for us to distribute crime statistics from the Justice Department or racial infection rates from the Centers for Disease Control. It may even be illegal for members of the public to receive this information from us. They may get themselves into some kind of trouble if they accept a leaflet from us in a shopping mall or find a package of informational material from us on the front porch. You don't want to come right out and say it's illegal, because you run the danger of discrediting yourself. So instead you trot out a politically ambitious chief of police to announce sternly that he is investigating the distribution of "hate material" and that he has instructed his officers to be on the lookout for whoever is distributing it.

Then you send out reporters to interview a few Nervous Nellies and self-righteous soccer moms who will say how shocked and horrified they are that "hate" has raised its ugly head in their peaceful community. You quote one of them saying she is saddened that in the 21st century there still are bigoted people who have not accepted equality and multiculturalism. And you report that a team of police officers is going door-to-door collecting the material that was distributed before it disturbs more citizens. All of this usually is enough to convince at least the dimwits in the community that there is something dangerous and threatening about anyone who tries to distribute material that calls into question the equality of the races or the desirability of more multiculturalism. If one of these more impressionable citizens sees one of us coming, he'll run for cover and dial 911.

This is nuts. It's crazy. Really, the Mad Hatter and the March Hare and the Queen of Hearts in Wonderland behaved more rationally than the media people and police officials and many members of the White public in America behave today. What sort of nightmare world are we living in, where the people who are supposed to keep us informed instead deliberately misinform us about some of the most important things happening to us and try to keep us ignorant and confused, and the people who are supposed to protect us collaborate with those who misinform us in order to keep us from being warned about some of the greatest dangers facing us? And a great many members of the public themselves don't behave much better. I mean, really, isn't that Alice in Wonderland stuff?

How does a race that has sent men to the Moon get away with such wacky behavior here on Earth? Do you really want to know? The answer is rather depressing, but I'll tell you anyway.

In the first place, the general public always has been a bit wacky and inclined to irrational behavior. The average citizen always has been ready to believe in witchcraft or miracles and to go see witches burned in the town square or watch in awe as some statue is persuaded by a priest to weep "real" tears. He's always been ready to believe things that his own eyes and a little common sense should tell him are not true. I've talked to World War II veterans who were persuaded 60 years ago by the news media that Adolf Hitler was getting ready to invade America, and we had to invade Europe in order to stop him, and they still believe that if we hadn't teamed up with the Soviet Union to smash Germany and force half of Europe under the communist yoke, the German Army would have invaded the United States, and we'd all be in concentration camps now.

I spoke with other people just a couple of years ago who really believed that at midnight on December 31, 1999, airliners would fall from the sky and elevators all over the world would stop working. I laughed at their claims that there would be chaos on New Year's Day 2000 and then explained to them why they were wrong and that the whole Y2K hoax was being promoted by hucksters who had something to sell. Then they became hostile and accused me of working for the enemies of America because I encouraged people not to waste time and money preparing for what they claimed was the imminent Y2K disaster.

And I've spoken with even more people who have let themselves be persuaded that there really is no difference between the races and that anyone who does not profess such a belief is a "hater." The great mass of our people always have been like that: ready to swallow every hoax and swindle that comes along, if it is being promoted by clever enough snake-oil salesmen, and certainly the people who control America's mass media are clever. The soccer moms and the Dudley Dorights who profess themselves shocked and horrified when they see a flyer with crime statistics or HIV infection statistics suggesting that Blacks and Whites really are quite different, these people are just the 21st century version of the 19th century types who were shocked and horrified that anyone would deny the creation myth in the Book of Genesis and of the 16th century types who were shocked and horrified that anyone would assert that the Earth is not the center of the universe.

As I said, wacky attitudes and behavior are nothing new for the general public. In good times, the public was fortunate enough to have strong and benevolent leadership by individuals not subject to the general wackiness: strong enough to crack heads in order to keep the snake-oil salesmen from taking excessive advantage of the public's gullibility and benevolent enough to provide a positive example and protection for those members of the public independent-minded enough to free themselves from the reigning superstition. In bad times, the snake-oil peddlers were in the ascendancy, and witches that is, those citizens who seemed reluctant to participate in the general wackiness, were burned by the thousands.

Today the snake-oil salesmen definitely are riding high. At the moment, they do not have the power to consign heretics and skeptics to the torture chamber and then burn them at the stake, but the people who should be our leaders and who should keep the snake-oil salesmen in check, the people who are rational by nature and who hardly should be expected to have been taken in by the foolish notions that the races are equal in capability and identical in nature, and that multiculturalism is a desirable state of affairs, these leaders are going along with the snake-oil salesmen.

In past centuries the leaders might be forgiven for permitting the snake-oil salesmen to operate. The snake oil, by providing behavioral and ideological guidelines for the masses, whether those guidelines were entirely rational or not, kept them out of trouble, kept them from becoming restless, and allowed the leaders to go about their more enlightened affairs without having to crack the whip over the mass of citizens. Today the foolishness of egalitarianism and multiculturalism certainly are not keeping the masses out of trouble; they are carrying the whole society, the whole race, lemmings and leaders alike, to disaster.

Why are the leaders of our society the intellectual leaders, the business leaders, the military leaders, the political leaders all collaborating with the snake-oil peddlers and behaving as irrationally as the Duchess and her household retainers behaved in Alice's nightmare world of Wonderland?

I could talk for a week about that, but the short answer is that our society today is more corrupt than it has been in centuries. The corruption has spread to every level. Greed and cowardice have infected the White leadership stratum as much as the masses. There used to be some aristocratic qualities in our leaders: a bit of pride and dignity. Today they all are very democratic and don't mind making fools of themselves and behaving like the characters in Alice's nightmare, as long as they can hang onto their wealth and privileges.

Actually, there's more to it. In past centuries the snake-oil peddlers could wave their holy water around and threaten hellfire and damnation, but that frightened only the dimwits. Today, the snake-oil salesmen can wave fists full of money and threaten to cut off credit and impose boycotts and withhold government contracts, and that frightens all too many of those who should be leaders. Furthermore, through the process of democracy, the snake-oilers have brought the government under their spell and are able to use the power of government to intimidate leaders, who as a class are more easily intimidated today than in the past.

Finally, things really are more difficult and discouraging than they used to be. If I were a university president or a general in the Army or the chairman of a big multinational corporation or a U.S. senator, I'd be very discouraged about trying to fix things by working within the system and according to the rules. And even when one contemplates breaking the rules, things don't seem very promising. If I were a top general contemplating a military coup, I'd be very discouraged by the fact that the patriotism and the sense of personal honor that used to be taken for granted among my fellow officers are mostly gone now. What other generals could I trust? The corruption has spread too far. Better, perhaps, to just continue parroting the same irrational, Alice in Wonderland nonsense as everyone else. When everyone is acting like a fool, then one's own foolishness is not so likely to cause embarrassment.

Well, that's one way of looking at the nonsensical nature of our society today and the irrational behavior of so many of our people. As for me, I believe that it's not half so important to make excuses for it or to explain it, as it is simply to recognize that it is terminally corrupt and is carrying us all to our destruction and then to begin dealing with it as such. It has become a bit late for the easy ways for the electoral solutions and the military coups, and so we'd better be thinking about the hard ways, the radical ways, the total ways, and we'd better be thinking about them now.

Provocation and Response

The situation in Palestine is interesting, both in terms of what is happening over there and in terms of the reflection over here. It's not just the occasional good lick the Palestinians manage to get in against the Jews over there; that's always good to see, of course, but more interesting are the reactions of the media and the government in the United States.

For example, the media Jews and their Gentile step'n'fetchits here -- Time magazine writer Charles Krauthammer is an example of the former, and columnist George Will is an example of the latter -- have been coming out openly in favor of government-sponsored terrorism and assassination, as long as it's Israel doing the sponsoring. And they've been doing that since well before this week's attacks on the Pentagon and the World Trade Center.

It is a time-honored Western tradition that the leaders of nations at war treat one another with chivalry. In the past, when leaders actually rode into battle at the head of their men, that meant that it was all right to kill the enemy king or general in a fair fight, but it wasn't all right to send someone sneaking around his castle or his house at night to poison his well or to leap from the bushes and cut his throat. Perhaps it wasn't all chivalry. Perhaps it was in part the understanding that if you engaged in that sort of ungentlemanly behavior, your enemy might retaliate in kind.

In any event, assassination of enemy leaders, even in time of war, remained taboo until fairly recently: that is, until Western tradition gave way to Semitic tradition, which is a quite different sort of tradition. That's what happened in the Second World War. After the war the U.S. government and its allies rounded up the leaders of conquered Germany and, after a farcical show trial, hanged them. It wasn't just the generals who were hanged: it also was Germans whom the Jews hated simply because of things that they had said or written. Julius Streicher and Alfred Rosenberg are just two examples of this: neither man had any leadership role in the war, but before the war each had made unflattering remarks about the Jews and their activities and so was hanged for it.

Even with their tight grip on the media, the Jews weren't able to keep a few Westerners from expressing their dissatisfaction with this Semitic way of doing things. It did not sit well with many independent-minded Americans that German leaders and writers were hanged, while Soviet and American leaders and writers who had been far more egregious in their behavior were held up as heroes. The Jews responded with outrage to any criticism of the travesty of justice they had sponsored at Nuremberg after the war. The Germans had dared to raise their hands -- or their voices -- against God's Chosen People, and so they had to be punished, and Western tradition to the contrary be damned.

It's pretty much the same today with the few Westerners who are bold enough to criticize the Israeli government's policies of torturing Palestinian prisoners or sending disguised death squads into Palestinian territory to assassinate Palestinian leaders in their homes. To the Jews this behavior is merely "self-defense." It's the sort of thing they've always done. The Palestinians are trying to take back the land the Jews stole from them, and the Jews are merely defending themselves. How dare anyone criticize them for that!

Charles Krauthammer has a column in the August 27 issue of Time magazine titled "In Defense of 'Assassination,'" with the word "assassination" in quotes, meaning that when Jews do it it isn't really assassination. He concludes his column with a whining complaint about the Gentile criticism of this Jewish behavior:

The abuse Israel has suffered for this scrupulous exercise of self-defense -- in a war it did not start -- is yet another example of the outrageous double standard applied to it by a cynical, complicit world.

Did you get that?: a "scrupulous exercise of self-defense" in a war the Jews didn't start. If not the Jews, then who? And a "cynical, complicit world" is ganging up on the poor, inoffensive Jews again. Oy, veh, vasn't six million enough, already? The Jews really have a corner on the market in brass.

Nearly always, this sort of whining self-righteousness works for the Jews. The bought politicians and the Christian preachers and the George Will types certainly go for it every time. And George Bush isn't about to buck the Jews on anything. He's as obedient a lackey as his predecessor was. But there are signs that, as was the case with the postwar lynchings at Nuremberg, a few Western observers have had about all of this Jewishness they can stomach. And not just Westerners.

Watching the bickering at the big United Nations anti-racism conference in Durban, South Africa, has been amusing. The Jews nearly always are able to manipulate such conferences to their advantage by threats and bribery: threats of U.S. retaliation against anyone who refuses to toe the Jewish party line, and bribes from the U.S. Treasury for those who go along. This time, however, so many delegates at the conference were incensed at the recent Jewish treatment of Palestinians that things didn't go so smoothly for the Jews and their U.S. bully boy.

There are even a few signs of unrest among the Jews' front-line troops in the Western media. Do you remember the 12-year-old Palestinian boy, Mohammed al-Durrah, who was shot to death deliberately by Jewish gunmen in Jerusalem nearly a year ago as he huddled against a wall with his father and begged for his life? The Jews pumped four rifle bullets into him. They also shot the boy's father, and then they killed a Palestinian ambulance driver who arrived to give aid. It all would have been just a bit of amusing target practice for the Jewish gunmen, except that a French cameraman caught it all on film. Before the Jews could squelch it, shocked television viewers around the world had seen it.

A British journalist, Sam Kiley, who worked for The Times of London, recently decided to follow up that story. His editors at the newspaper were not enthusiastic about the project, to say the least. In Kiley's own words:

When I pulled off a little scoop by tracking, interviewing, and photographing the unit in the Israeli army which killed Mohammed al-Durrah, the 12-year-old boy whose death was captured on film and became the iconic image of the conflict, I was asked to file the piece "without mentioning the dead kid."

Well, Kiley is a thoroughly "wet" liberal who normally dotes on Jews and thinks they're just wonderful. But when told that he would have to write his story about the Israeli gunmen who murdered the 12-year-old Palestinian boy last September "without mentioning the dead kid," lest it offend the Jews, Kiley resigned from the staff of The Times and began speaking out about the way journalists are constrained to report news of the conflict in Palestine only in a way that is favorable to the Jews.

We shouldn't jump to any conclusions from Kiley's rebellion or the refusal of the delegates at the U.N. anti-racism conference to knuckle under, but it is something. It is a number of similar happenings recently that has Krauthammer whining in Time magazine that the world is ganging up on the poor Jews again. I wish it were so, but there hardly can be much complicity between the people who take an uncompromising stand against the Jews as Jews, on the one hand, and on the other hand the miscellaneous anti-racists, such as Kiley and the delegates in Durban, who at the moment are miffed by the Jews' atrocious treatment of the Palestinians.

It is the Jews, of course, who have built the anti-racism movement and have pumped all of the Gentile journalistic lackeys who work for them full of anti-racist sentiment. The Jews used this anti-racist sentiment to destroy Rhodesia and White South Africa, just as they're using it to destroy America, and it would be ironic if it is turning even slightly against them now as a consequence of their atrocious behavior in Palestine. I welcome that, but I don't hold out much hope for it in the near future: the Jews' grip on the mass media remains too strong, and it is that grip which controls the behavior of politicians and of governments. Remember, we saw the same sort of disgust with Jewish bloodlust and self-righteousness after the Second World War, but the Jewish media kept it under cover, and it never affected the lemmings or governmental policies.

What's necessary for combating the Jews effectively is a recognition of what they are -- not just what they happen to be doing at the moment. It's good when their hypocrisy and their self-righteousness work against them, as when their innate racism shows through their mask of anti-racism and disillusions a few of those whom they have duped. But the Jews' racism is not something we can count on using against them in a decisive way. After all, every healthy individual and every healthy nation is racist. It is in the Jews' nature to deny that fact and to attempt to weaken the racial feelings of others while secretly nurturing their own. That is the way they fight against the non-Jewish world. The motto of Mossad, Israel's principal agency for state-sponsored terror and assassination, is, "By way of deception shalt thou do war," but in fact that is the principle which governs the relations of Jews as a whole with the non-Jewish world. That is a consequence of what they are.

There are times when we too find it expedient to be deceptive. We do whatever we must to survive. But we do not make deception the cornerstone of our existence. And we must never think in terms of alliances with people like Sam Kiley or the delegates at the U.N. anti-racism conference. Cheer them on whenever they are refusing to take orders from the Jews. Even provide them with ammunition when we can. But never count on them. They are people who despite their occasional flashes of independence have been terribly flawed by their acceptance of an ideology manufactured by the Jews to serve Jewish purposes.

Among ourselves, at least, we must be honest. We must see things as they really are. We must try to understand the fundamentals and then govern ourselves accordingly. One fundamental is that people do not change their nature, any more than the leopard changes his spots. The Jews will not reform themselves. They will not voluntarily stop meddling in the affairs of non-Jews or attempting to use non-Jews for their own purposes. Until they are stopped by a superior opposing force they will behave as they always have behaved. They always will be hostile to non-Jews, and as long as we permit them, they will attempt to deceive non-Jews, just as the great bulk of our people always will be gullible and will be susceptible to Jewish deception if they are not provided with proper guidance.

Another fundamental is that we cannot counter the Jewish deception of the great bulk of our people as long as the Jews retain their control of the mass media of news and entertainment and we have no equivalent media. At this time we can only influence the thinking and behavior of the hardheaded, independent-minded minority of our people, but we always must have as our ultimate goal the guidance of all of our people, the shielding of all of our people from deception.

A third fundamental is that we must not foolishly imagine that we can achieve some quick and easy victory by building alliances with people whose goals or interests are essentially different from ours -- Middle Easterners or other non-Whites, for example -- or even with people who believe that their goals and interests are different from ours, as is the case with any of our people who still are under the influence of Jewish ideology: Sam Kiley, for example. We must count only on ourselves: on those whose most essential interests are the same as ours and who understand and accept that fact.

Our task is difficult, and at this time our progress is slow -- but there is progress. The number of people listening to these American Dissident Voices broadcasts increases week by week. The number of people who seek out one of our Web sites on the Internet increases day by day. At natvan.com they are averaging 19,000 a day now, which is up 50 percent from a year ago. Every Saturday, when a new broadcast goes on the net, the number of visitors to natvan.com jumps to nearly 30,000. That's not much compared to the number of viewers of any of the popular Jewish television propaganda programs: a fraction of one percent. We don't have television yet -- but we will within the next month. We've just finished making our first music video with a message in both the music and the images, and you'll be able to see it in a couple of weeks. Look for it at resistance.com. By the end of this year we'll be producing video documentaries with a message, and some of those will be on cable TV.

Of course we know that we won't have anywhere near as large an audience as Mike Wallace or Oprah. But our viewers will not be the slack-jawed, beer-bellied couch potatoes and multi-culti-trendies who make up most of Mike Wallace's and Oprah's audiences. They still can outvote us by a wide margin, but the time is approaching when numbers will not be all that counts. Nor will money be the only thing that counts in determining how large an audience one can reach or how much influence one can have on the people one reaches.

The whole world is entering a new era now, where all their money and the hundreds of millions of mindless lemmings in their television audiences and being able to manipulate the political system and the government of what is still the world's most powerful country -- at least, in a material sense -- no longer are enough to guarantee the Jews' continued hegemony. What happened in New York and in Washington this week is just one small manifestation of this new era. George Bush and the other politicians under the Jews' control can order the bombing of every pharmaceutical factory in the Middle East in response to recent events here, but that will only take us further into this new era.

I've said this before, and I'll say it again now. Not everyone in the world is willing to be dominated by the Jews. What happened this week is a direct consequence of the American people permitting the Jews to control their government and to use American strength to advance the Jews' interests at the expense of everyone else's interests. When people are driven into a corner -- as the non-Jewish people of the Middle East have been -- sometimes they will fight back. That is happening now, and it will happen even more in the future. The Jews will scream for the blood of their enemies, as Diane Feinstein and other Jews are now. Their lackeys in Washington will strike at their enemies for them, just as Bill Clinton and others before him did. And the consequence will be that the number of the Jews' enemies will grow without limit -- and not just in the Middle East.

Even here in the United States there are many people -- including many people who never have listened to one of my broadcasts and who probably would disagree with me on many fundamental issues -- who understand exactly why the United States was attacked this week. Not everyone in this country is a soccer mom or a baseball fan or an Oprah viewer. Some people can still think for themselves -- actually millions of them can. And at least some of these millions know that it was no gratuitous attack out of the blue by Middle Eastern terrorists that is responsible for all of those deaths in New York and Washington. They understand that when a nation no longer has leaders whose primary concern is the security and welfare of the nation, then bad things are likely to begin happening.

They understand that the people who flew those planes into the World Trade Center and the Pentagon did it because they had been pushed into a corner by the U.S. government acting on behalf of the Jews instead of on behalf of the American people. Certainly the soccer moms and the baseball fans will have their anger directed toward Arabs and Muslims, but there will be plenty of people who will understand that as long as we continue to let the Jews control our country one calamity after another will be inflicted on us. I certainly intend to do everything I can to help even more people understand that.

Four million subscribers to Time magazine had a chance to read Charles Krauthammer's explanation that terrorism and assassination are all right when it's the Jews assassinating their enemies. And those four million Time subscribers will read in the weeks ahead why terrorism and assassination are reprehensible and must be punished severely when it's the Jews' enemies striking back in desperation. But you know, not everyone will swallow that line.

After the bombing of the Federal building in Oklahoma City, which clearly was a reprisal against the government for the government's mass murder of innocent civilians in Waco two years earlier, the mass media largely ignored this linkage and tried to place the blame for the bombing on "right-wing extremists." Some of them still refer to me as the architect of that bombing. Now they will try to keep the public from tracing the blame for the attacks this week back to the long-standing subservience of the U.S. government to Israel. Every media spokesman and every politician is referring to this week's attacks as "cowardly" and "unprovoked." You read that right. The Jewish party line, and therefore the party line of every media spokesman and every politician, is that the attacks were "unprovoked." I've been listening to them all week, and not one of them will even hint at the possibility that maybe there was a reason for these attacks, that they were provoked by our own behavior. It's a "no, no" even to consider that.

But that sort of deception is not going to work as well as it has in the past. A lot of people are going to figure it out. And I'm going to help them -- and you should too, because the reprisals against America are just beginning. Many, many more innocent people will be killed because of what the U.S. government has done at the behest of the Jews. We already have killed close to a million people in Iraq alone because the Jews demanded it. The Jews, from Madeleine Albright on down demanded that we maintain the blockade that is starving Iraqi children. That is a provocation, and it is only one among many. More and more people need to think about that when looking for those ultimately responsible for this week's attacks.

And as I said, this week's attacks are just the beginning of what's in store for America. Of course, I don't know exactly what will be next, but certainly biological terrorism is coming. When it does come the death toll will dwarf anything we've seen so far. And again most of the television viewers will believe whatever the Jews tell them to believe, and Mr. Bush will declare the biological attack "unprovoked," and he will order the bombing of still more aspirin factories in Iraq and Iran and Afghanistan and Sudan in order to show the lemmings that he's a strong leader and is doing something. But among the people who can think for themselves, the number who will understand where to place the blame will continue to grow. And the demand for a real solution, a final solution, will grow too. In this new era I won't be the only one pointing the finger of blame in the right direction and talking about final solutions to our problem.

Who Is Guilty?

Observing the responses to last week's attacks on the Pentagon and the World Trade Center has been interesting, to say the least. It has been 11 days now, and nearly every spokesman for the controlled media and for the government has been avoiding the obvious question: "Why was the United States attacked?"

Nearly all of them are afraid of that question; they are pretending that there is no answer to that question, that there was no reason for the attack, that it was an unprovoked attack -- because the answer to the question, "Why was America attacked?" also is obvious. We were attacked because we have been letting ourselves be used to do all of Israel's dirty work in the Middle East. We were attacked because we have supported -- militarily or diplomatically or financially -- every bit of aggression and every atrocity Israel has committed against its neighbors for the past half-century. Everyone in the world with even half a brain understands that, even if talking about it is considered Politically Incorrect.

I've been warning about reprisals against the United States for many years. Seven years ago, on February 25, 1994, an American Jew, Baruch Goldstein, walked into a mosque in Hebron and machine-gunned Palestinians at prayer, killing 29 of them before running out of ammunition and being beaten to death by the Palestinian survivors. This act of mass murder immediately made Goldstein a saint for religious Jews everywhere. They built a shrine to him near Hebron, and Jews from the United States and other countries still make pilgrimages to this shrine.

There were no reprisals from the Palestinians at the time, and the mass media in the United States barely mentioned the massacre, even though the murderer, Goldstein, was an American. But the Palestinians -- and Muslims everywhere -- remember such things. They blame not just the Jews, but also the people who finance and arm and shelter the Jews: that is, they blame America. And right after the massacre, I warned my fellow Americans in an article that I wrote for my magazine National Vanguard. The article was titled "Stay Out of Tall Buildings," and it reported the massacre and the minimal response of the media here, and then it warned:

New Yorkers who work in tall office buildings -- anything close to the size of the World Trade Center -- might consider wearing hardhats to work for the next few months.

Well, of course, it took the Muslims more than a few months, and there were many more American provocations meanwhile. But last week the response eventually came. Of course there had been lesser responses earlier -- the bombing of a couple of American embassies in Africa and of the U.S. Navy destroyer, the USS Cole, for example -- but those events were a long way from here, and to most Americans they weren't real: hardly enough to distract them from the latest ball game on TV. What happened last week finally caught the attention of the American people. It's about time that Americans began to pay attention to such things.

Unfortunately, the great majority of Americans still get all of their opinions and attitudes from TV, and so they will not learn what they should learn from last week's attacks. What they're learning from TV is that the attacks were "unprovoked," that the attackers were "cowards," and that "we'll smoke them out of their holes, by golly." They're also taking to heart a lot of slogans along the lines of: "We're the greatest country on earth, and these attacks will only unite us and help us all pull together." When real lemmings hear slogans like that they become misty-eyed, put their right hands over their hearts, and begin singing "The Star-Spangled Banner." And they begin looking for enemies, so they can demonstrate their patriotism, a sentiment which will be in fashion again for a few months.

One lemming was arrested in Washington trying to ram his car into the Saudi Arabian Embassy. Others around the country have been throwing bricks through the windows of mosques. All of them have been flying American flags. But among all of them there is hardly a grain of understanding. The dimwit who tried to ram the Saudi Arabian Embassy doesn't understand that the Saudi government is more afraid of Muslim fundamentalists than anyone in the West is. If Muslim fundamentalism experiences a surge of growth as a consequence of the success of the attacks last week, it will be either the government of Saudi Arabia or that of Egypt that will fall first, followed quickly by every other Middle Eastern government that has collaborated with the Jews -- or, what is the same thing, with America.

And the chests of all the dimwits swell with pride when their government in Washington rattles its sabers and issues demands to the government of Pakistan and other governments in the Middle East. Washington has demanded cooperation with its effort to catch the people who attacked New York and Washington last week. The rulers and top politicians in these countries are pledging their cooperation, for their own reasons, but this sort of thing doesn't sit well with their countrymen. Patriotic Pakistanis, both among the educated classes and among the religious elements, can only hate America even more as a result of these humiliating demands and the ignominious response of their own leaders.

Of course, I don't know who organized the attacks on Washington and New York last week. Neither does Mr. Bush, and I doubt that he will know with any degree of certainty even when he begins ordering missile attacks against various Middle Eastern targets, more for proving his "leadership" to the flag-waving lemmings here than for actually punishing the people who organized the events of last week.

Aside from these domestic political considerations, the principal determinant of the American response will be whatever the Jews think is best for Israel. Former Israeli Prime Minister Benyamin Netanyahu set the tone last week while the fire was still burning in the Pentagon and in some of the buildings of the World Trade Center complex. He said that it will not be enough to kill Osama bin Laden and his followers; the United States must destroy all of the governments of those countries where terrorist groups might arise in the future. We must do it now, Netanyahu demanded, while there is popular support among the American people for such a pre-emptive war. If you wait, Netanyahu said, you will lose your chance. New and stronger terrorist organizations will spring up to take the place of Osama bin Laden's group. So strike now! And other Jewish leaders, both in Israel and in the United States, were pushing similarly for a full-scale pre-emptive war.

There's no doubt that the U.S. military forces could depopulate the entire Middle East with ease. With minimal loss to ourselves, we could make a huge, self-illuminated, glass parking lot out of Pakistan, Afghanistan, Iran, and all of the other countries bordering the Persian Gulf, the Red Sea, and the eastern Mediterranean -- except Israel, of course. Actually, that's not the solution the Jews prefer. Instead they want us to send in ground troops, whip their armies, take over their countries, and install puppet governments that will follow the Jews' orders. Then they can control and milk the whole area. That grinning idiot we have in the White House, George Bush, is perfectly willing to go along with such a scheme if that's what they tell him to do. The media are sampling public opinion now and reporting that most of the lemmings will go along too.

Whether or not that is the way the Bush government goes remains to be seen. There are serious liabilities and risks if the United States undertakes such a major, protracted war. Occupation armies will be required to keep the area pacified. And even though the lemmings are feeling all warm and fuzzy and patriotic and morally indignant now in the wake of last week's attacks, they may become restless during a protracted war intended to bring the whole Middle East under Jewish hegemony, especially when our casualties begin mounting. Presumably all of these considerations will be taken into account before the Bush government is told what to do. Mr. Bush's advisers also should take into account what happened to the Soviet Union during its attempt to conquer Afghanistan. The Soviet Union spent more than eight years trying to whip Afghanistan's Muslim guerrillas and had 15,000 of its own soldiers killed in the attempt before finally giving up in 1989. And during this attempt the Soviets already had a pro-Soviet government in Kabul: a government whose leaders were condemned as traitors and infidels and butchered by the Muslims as soon as the Red Army pulled out. Any government of Afghanistan that might otherwise be inclined to make a deal with the United States certainly will remember that.

Of course, just because the Soviet Union was unable to whip Afghanistan doesn't mean that the United States can't do it -- if the U.S. government is willing to make a big enough effort and to sacrifice the lives of enough Americans. We certainly have more than enough firepower, more than enough high-tech weaponry, to do the job. We are a bit short in some departments, to be sure: intelligence, for example. I am astounded that as complex an operation as that against the World Trade Center and the Pentagon last week could have been planned and carried out without the Bush government having any hint of what was going on.

Was this another Pearl Harbor scenario, where our government knew of an impending attack but pretended it knew nothing and waited for the attack to come so as to have an excuse for becoming involved in a war? The Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor in 1941, of which the Roosevelt government had plenty of forewarning, transformed the sentiment of the American public from anti-war to pro-war overnight and allowed the Roosevelt government to become fully involved in the war against Germany, which was Japan's ally. Roosevelt was itching for a war because all the Jews around him were pushing for it. Did the Bush government know about last week's attack ahead of time but pretended not to so as to have an excuse for launching a war against the Jews' enemies in the Middle East? I really don't know. I think it much more likely that the government of Israel had some intelligence about the attack ahead of time and deliberately withheld that intelligence from the United States. That's the sort of thing the Israelis often have done in the past, and they certainly welcomed last week's attack.

Well, that's a minor question. The big question is: Why should we start another war now? What advantage do we gain, even if we pulverize Afghanistan and kill its entire population? Do we thereby prevent any further attacks against America by people in the Middle East who object to our government's support of Israel? I think not. Afghanistan is not the only country in the Middle East capable of supporting guerrilla fighters, and guerrillas who are willing to sacrifice their own lives by flying into their targets will not be easily intimidated. We may be able to install puppet governments and occupation armies to support those governments everywhere in the Middle East, and we may be able to introduce all sorts of new security programs in the United States intended to make the job of an attacker more difficult, but the ultimate cost of all this will be very, very high. And again, the question is, why should we do these things? Why should we continue making ourselves a target for terrorists so that these things even bear consideration?

You know, there are Americans who have a chip-on-the-shoulder attitude. They don't want to hear that we should stop letting Israel wag America like its tail. They don't want to hear that we should stop doing the things in the Middle East that make the people of the Middle East retaliate against us. Their attitude is, "By God, nobody's going to tell us what to do. We'll continue supporting Israel with money, weapons, and diplomacy if we want to, whether it's in America's interests or not, and if any of those towel-heads in the Middle East don't like it we'll kick their asses. We're bigger and tougher than anybody else, and we'll push anybody around we want to, and they'd better not complain about it." This swaggering, bully-boy attitude is what we're hearing from some American politicians now who're courting Jewish support -- and also from some military leaders with political ambitions, unfortunately.

I think that's really stupid. Let's let the attacks on New York and Washington last week serve as a wake-up call for every thinking American: a wake-up call for us to begin paying attention to our government's policies and to begin insisting that our government act only to protect and promote the interests of the American people, and nothing else. For far too long we have watched cynically from the sidelines as our government became more and more corrupt, more and more irresponsible, more and more negligent of America's interests. We watched the Jews corrupt our political system with their money and their media and then use America's power and wealth for their own purposes. Most Americans, because of the Jewish control of their mass media, are not aware of this, but thinking people in most of the rest of the world certainly are aware of the way we're being used. This has earned America the contempt of the whole world, including not only Israel's enemies, but Israel itself. The deliberate Israeli attempt to sink our ship the USS Liberty in 1967 was just one indicator of that contempt, which has grown more profound since.

You know, there are two reasons why the people of the Middle East hate America. One reason is that to the Muslims America is the Great Satan, the corrupter of the world. They don't want us meddling in their affairs and trying to change the ideas and attitudes of their people. They don't want our Hollywood films and our Madison Avenue fashions and our immorality and our lust for money to corrupt their people. They don't want to be contaminated by us. They want us to take all of our Jewish fashions and our Jewish television and our Jewish attitudes and ideas and get out of their lives, go home, leave them alone. For many Muslims the view of America as the Great Satan, the great corrupter, as an actual source of corruption in the Middle East, is enough reason to attack us.

But if we were not meddling in their affairs, if we were not supporting puppet governments in their part of the world, if we were not supporting Israel, if we were not bringing our corruption to them, if we would in fact go home and leave them alone, their contempt for our lack of character and morality would not be a sufficient motive for them to attack us over here. The reason for their attack last week is our support for Israel's aggression against them. Our lying media and our lying politicians in Washington will deny that, but it is crystal clear to anyone with eyes to see; it is obvious to thinking people everywhere. The attack last week was not "unprovoked." We were attacked because we support Israel financially, diplomatically, and militarily. As long as we continue to support Israel we will remain a target for the patriots and the religious fundamentalists of every other country in the Middle East. Is that really what we want to do? Does that really serve America's interests?

I think not. Let's emphasize just two things in connection with last week's attack. First, anybody in the media or in the government, any politician or other public figure, who tells us that the attack was "unprovoked" is lying to us: consciously and deliberately lying, because although the lemmings may not know any better, every government official and every media boss does know better. And anyone who deliberately lies to the American people on such an important matter is thereby declaring himself an enemy of America, an enemy of the American people, whether the liar is George Bush or a top media Jew or a general in the Pentagon. Anyone who tries to steer us away from the truth that this attack was a retaliation for the American support of Israel's atrocious behavior in the Middle East is an enemy of America.

Second, when we hear media spokesmen or government spokesmen tell us sternly, their voices quivering with phony indignation, that we need to hunt down and punish the evil men responsible for last week's attack, we can only agree with them. Yes, the people responsible for the attack are evil and should be hunted down and punished. But we don't have to go to the Middle East to find the responsible people and punish them. They're a lot closer than the Middle East. They're evil, but not because a lot of Jewish real estate in New York was destroyed; yes, that's right, the owner of the World Trade Center -- that is, the owner of a 99-year lease on the property -- is a Jew, Larry Silverstein. They're evil, but not because a great many Jewish lawyers and Jewish financial consultants and Jewish middlemen had offices in the World Trade Center. They're evil because thousands of young White women who worked as receptionists and secretaries and file clerks in both the World Trade Center and the Pentagon were killed, along with hundreds of airline passengers and crewmembers. That is what calls for punishment.

And who are the evil men who should be punished, these men responsible for the death of so many of our people? Mr. Bush assures us that he's got the FBI and the CIA on their tails, and that he'll find them pretty soon. Hey! Mr. Bush! Call off the FBI and the CIA. If you want to know who's responsible, just walk into your bathroom and look in the mirror. Of course, it's not really fair to put all of the blame on Mr. Bush. His last ten or so predecessors in the White House also are responsible. Republican and Democrat alike, they've all danced to whatever tune Israel was playing. By ignoring America's interests and letting themselves be used by Israel against Israel's neighbors for the past half century, they all helped to incur the debt that was only partly repaid last week.

And indeed, we can cast the net of blame much wider. We have a system of government in the United States that the Jews have learned to manipulate. With their money and their media they are able to swing elections, buy politicians, and control public policy to suit themselves, without regard for the interests of the American people. After the Second World War they were determined to change American immigration policy in a way that would dilute the White majority with a flood of non-White immigrants, and they found a multitude of White politicians and White clerics and White businessmen willing to collaborate with them and push through the immigration changes they wanted. And when the Jews launched the so-called "civil rights" revolution in the 1960s, again they found many thousands of White politicians and clerics and businessmen and lawyers to help them strike down the laws against miscegenation and push through new legislation requiring the racial integration of schools and workplaces and neighborhoods.

And the same pattern can be seen in the entire history of America's policy in the Middle East. From the beginning it has been a policy intended to promote Jewish interests and to sacrifice American interests, but the Jews could not have pushed these policies through by themselves. They had a multitude of Gentile collaborators willing to sacrifice the interests of the American people in order to curry favor with the Jews. And these people, these traitors to their country and to their race, who put their own selfish interests above those of their people, certainly have been aware all along of the debt that was being built up. Sally Soccer Mom and Joe Six Pack may not have figured out why everyone in the Muslim world hates America's guts and why a few Muslims are willing to die in order to punish America for what America has done to them on behalf of Israel, but the traitors understand it perfectly well. They understand who is responsible for last week's tragedy, and that's why they all try to keep the public confused by always referring to last week's attack as "unprovoked." And I'll guarantee you this: America will continue to have tragedy after tragedy, not because we don't have strict enough security measures at our airports, and not because of Osama bin Laden, but because we don't have a government which represents the interests of the American people. Until we regain control of our own news and entertainment media and have leaders whose sole concern is what's good for America -- not what will win them Jewish support in the next election -- we'll remain a nation adrift, hated by all, respected by none, and fair game for anyone who has a grievance against us.

Regaining Control

As I noted in my broadcast of September 15, and as various politicians also have noted in a somewhat different sense, on September 11 America entered a new era. For the first time in a long time American civilians have had to pay a price in blood for abdicating their responsibility to control their government. Excepting some entirely inconsequential Japanese efforts against the Pacific Northwest during the early days of the Second World War, the U.S. mainland suffered its first attack from the air this month. In the past we dished it out -- the terror bombing of German cities throughout the Second World War, the bombing of Baghdad a decade ago, and the bombing of Belgrade in 1999, not to mention selective air strikes against an aspirin factory in Sudan and against the home of Libyan leader Muammar al-Qaddafi -- but until this month the American people hadn't been on the receiving end.

The psychological shock has been profound. The attitude used to be that our government could do whatever it wanted to do against the people of other countries, and Americans could enjoy the spectacle on TV from the comfort of their living rooms, watching the bombs falling and buildings burning while sipping their beer and munching potato chips. Americans felt invulnerable, and the feeling of invulnerability led to a diminished sense of responsibility. We could kick other people in the teeth all day long, kill other people's wives and children, burn other people's homes, and they couldn't do a thing about it. We didn't have to worry about the consequences of our behavior.

Even Americans who disapproved strongly of the bombing of Belgrade by Madeleine Albright and Bill Clinton two years ago didn't disapprove as strongly as they would have if it had seemed more real to them, instead of just a spectacle on TV. What happened in New York and Washington this month seemed very real indeed. What people saw on their television screens -- and still are seeing as the wreckage continues to be cleared and the corpses hauled away in body bags -- was a stark reminder of the truth in the ancient adage: as ye sow, so shall ye reap.

That adage, of course, is about the last thing of which the media bosses and their lackeys in the government wanted to be reminded. Mr. Bush declared that what happened on September 11 was "an attack against freedom and democracy," rather than retribution for anything we had done. The people who seized the airliners and flew them into the Pentagon and the World Trade Center are described as "cowards" and characterized as hate-crazed loonies who hate America because America stands for "freedom and democracy." Really: that's what the media bosses and the politicians want us to believe.

And that's the excuse the Bush government is using for pressuring other governments into collaborating in his new Persian Gulf War. This is not a war to serve Israel or help the United States get revenge for the September 11 attack, the Bush line goes; this is a war against the enemies of freedom and democracy, wherever they may be. If you believe in freedom and democracy then you must stand with us; those who are not with us are with the terrorists.

No head of state anywhere believes Bush's baloney about the September 11 attack having been against "freedom and democracy." They all understand with perfect clarity that it was a very specific retaliation for the U.S. government's support of Israel's aggression in the Middle East. The responses of other countries to Bush's efforts to build a coalition reveal the worldwide spread of Jewish corruption. Some European countries are nearly as much under Jewish media influence as the United States and have governments nearly as corrupt. This is the case in the United Kingdom and France, for example.

The situation is mixed in Islamic countries such as Pakistan and Turkey, with corrupt governments but with populations relatively free of Jewish media brainwashing. What we might hope for in Pakistan is an overthrow of the present government; or, barring that, the large-scale sabotage of any U.S. military effort mounted from Pakistan. Afghanistan, Iraq, and Iran are almost the only countries showing any real character in resisting the Bush government's efforts to build a pro-Israel coalition in the Persian Gulf area under the pretext of waging war against the enemies of freedom and democracy.

The most worrisome aspect of the present situation is the talk from Bush administration officials about a full-scale war to take out Iran and Iraq as well as Afghanistan, so that Israel will have a free hand in the Middle East. That is the course that has been urged by Benyamin Netanyahu, Ariel Sharon, and every other Jewish spokesman, both in Israel and the United States, and the Bush administration is obediently parroting that line. The banners on all of the TV news programs are proclaiming a state of war. They don't report the news any longer; they report the latest developments in "America's New War." That is a deliberate effort to get the lemmings into a war mood. Of course, Israel is never mentioned by those pushing for a full-scale war. The purpose of the war has nothing to do with Israel, they would have us believe; the war is to save freedom and democracy, and so we should wage war not just against the people who attacked the United States on September 11, but against all enemies of freedom and democracy. That's the sort of lie that worked for two world wars in the past century, and so the lemmings ought to go along with it again, they figure.

And if we believe the public opinion polls, they are right. The intellectually challenged George Bush, who always has a sly little smirk just about ready to break out whenever he's reciting his lines for the TV cameras, has been portrayed by the media ever since September 11 as the bold, determined, resolute leader of the nation, and he has the approval of 90 percent of the public. Furthermore, approximately 80 percent of the public will back him in a war against Afghanistan, and 70 percent or so would like to see him take out Iraq while he's at it, even though there's no indication Iraq had anything to do with the September 11 attack. It really seems that the yahoo flag-wavers among the lemmings have been absorbing the war-mongering propaganda of Netanyahu and Sharon and the other Jews.

We ought to remind ourselves that this is the same American public that gave Bill Clinton an overwhelming approval rating after he admitted lying about his Oval Office affair with Monica Lewinsky. We also ought always to be cautious in accepting the results of public opinion polls. The Jews continuously sample public opinion on dozens of key issues, so that the media can adjust their propaganda in order to keep opinion moving in the way the Jews want it to move. If anything were to cause public opinion to swing against Israel, however, they not only would adjust their propaganda accordingly, they also would keep the negative results strictly to themselves. They would tell Mr. Bush, "George, the latest polls show public opinion solidly in favor of Israel, and the people will support a U.S. war against Israel's enemies." Actually, in the present case, I have no reason to believe that the opinion polls are not correct. The Jews are calling for a war, the collaborators in our government are calling for a war, and the lemmings are responding as they always have responded.

There are a couple of things that might derail the Jews' war plans. One is the failure of the Bush government to build or to maintain its coalition of collaborator governments in the Middle East. A popular uprising in Pakistan might stiffen the spines of governments in several other countries and cause them to reject collaboration as well. Without land access to the countries the Jews want conquered, the Bush forces will be restricted to aerial bombardment. They can kill a lot of people and damage a lot of infrastructure that way, but they are not likely to win a war.

Another thing which might put a monkey wrench in the war plans would be more and larger strikes against the United States: that is, a large-scale follow-up to the September 11 attack. Whether such a follow-up has been prepared by the people who launched the September 11 attack -- or by others -- remains unknown at this time. The propaganda of the media and of the Bush government is that the September 11 attack helped to unify America, rouse our fighting spirit, and so forth. And indeed, many people did run out and buy American flags. But there also can be no doubt that many Americans have been unnerved by the September 11 attack.

As I mentioned at the beginning, what happened was a profound psychological shock to many Americans who previously had felt invulnerable. The collapse in the price of airline stocks is not due to the loss of four aircraft or the expense of collecting fingernail clippers and pocket knives from passengers; it is due to the fact that many Americans are now afraid to fly.

If there is a large-scale follow-up to September 11 -- especially if it comes in the form of a biological or chemical attack, with as many or more casualties than the World Trade Center attack -- many Americans who now are blindly following the party line on television may be ready to break ranks and start thinking about why America is being attacked. They'll want a better answer than the one they're getting from TV now: namely, that the attack is because Osama bin Laden hates freedom and democracy. A few of them will even begin to understand that the real reason we are being attacked is because of our government's support for Israel's atrocious behavior against its neighbors in the Middle East.

Well, I suppose that's a bit optimistic. Expecting Americans to begin thinking is expecting too much. A large-scale follow-up to September 11 may cause panic, but probably not much understanding. It may make some elements of the public more open to new ideas, but independent thinking and understanding are fundamentally foreign to most of the public.

Today Sally Soccer-Mom and Joe Six-Pack don't have a clue about what's really happening in their world, what the real issues are, and what's really at stake. Sally and Joe always have been clueless, throughout all of history. They are herd animals, and they know only what the herd knows, care always and only about the things the herd cares about, cheer always and only for whatever the herd is cheering for at the moment.

Let me give you one of those little capsule oversimplifications I'm fond of. Although it is an oversimplification and is, therefore, not an exact model of the real world, I find it very helpful in making sense out of what's happening in the real world.

There are four basic types of people -- White people -- in the world: First there are the Sally Soccer-Moms and the Joe Six-Packs. They constitute about 95 percent of the White population. Some are rich, and some are poor; some are factory workers, and some are lawyers; some are barely literate couch potatoes on welfare, and some are academics with pretensions to intellectualism. What characterizes all of them is an inability to think independently or to hold any opinion not held by the herd. I often call them lemmings.

Second, there are the exploiters. They are rational people, who see the world as it is and attempt to use the world -- including the rest of the population -- for their own advantage. They recognize the lemmings for what they are and manipulate them in order to use them, nearly always through deception. Prior to the 20th century most of the exploiters have been White people themselves: the leaders of the Church, the leading members of the aristocracy, and the very wealthy -- the plutocrats -- for example. Exploiters have not necessarily been malevolent, nor have they always been powerful. Aristocrats and plutocrats often have advanced the interests of the herd while advancing their own interests. What distinguishes exploiters is neither malevolence nor power, but rather the ability to think independently and the placing of their personal advantages ahead of everything else.

During roughly the past century an extremely dangerous transformation in the racial nature of the exploiters has taken place. From nearly all White, they have become substantially Jewish. The White exploiters, instead of fighting off the exploitation of the White herd by Jews, have made alliances with the Jews. They have made agreements with the Jews for sharing the spoils. All of the top Jewish media bosses are exploiters: Sumner Redstone, Michael Eisner, Gerald Levin, and the rest. And so are White men like Rupert Murdoch and Bill Gates.

Third, there are the Judases: White people who might be considered a sub-type of the exploiters, but whose behavior is more in the nature of knowingly cooperating with the exploiters or knowingly letting themselves be used by the exploiters rather than engaging in exploitation themselves. For the most part Judases are people who understand the situation, more or less, and would be happy to be exploiters but are not quite bright enough, tough enough, or energetic enough, so they settle for collaboration. Many lower- and middle-echelon Gentile media people fall into the Judas category, while other Gentile media people -- especially those in the lowest echelon -- are merely lemmings. The same can be said of politicians and bureaucrats. Bill Clinton and George Bush are outstanding examples of Judases. Though apparently in the top political echelon, neither has the qualities to be a successful exploiter without Jewish backing. Clinton lacked the self-discipline, and Bush lacks the intelligence. The ranks of the bureaucracy, of the military leadership, and of the educational establishment are filled with Judases and lemmings, with Judases predominating in the upper ranks.

Fourth, there are the independent-minded people who understand much of what is happening in the world -- that is, they are not lemmings -- and are not inclined to be either exploiters or Judases. We'll call them "observers." They make up somewhere between two and five percent of the White population. Observers are mainly interested in looking out for themselves, but they're more concerned with the welfare of their fellows than the exploiters are. They understand that as the herd fares, so fare they. If the race goes down, everyone goes down with it. So they do feel some sense of responsibility for what is happening in the world: just not enough, in most cases.

I've always considered the observers the key element in our population: certainly, the key element in getting the Jews off our backs and regaining control of our destiny. Three of the four categories of people in my oversimplified model understand the issues involved in what the Bush government is doing now -- or at least they are capable of understanding -- but the exploiters and the Judases don't care about the things we care about. Only the observers -- two to five percent of the population -- are capable of understanding and caring. If something happens to cause them to focus their minds on the simple fact that seven thousand Americans were killed on September 11 as a direct consequence of the Jewish control of the U.S. government -- seven thousand Americans were killed because our government has for decades been used to further the interests of Israel at the expense of the interests of the American people -- if they will focus on that simple fact and also on the fact that many more Americans are likely to die in the future if the Jewish control of our government continues, perhaps some of them will put their minds to the problem of breaking that control.

And so all of my own efforts have been directed toward helping the observers to focus. I don't waste time now on the lemmings, because I can't compete effectively with Hollywood and CNN for their attention -- although part of what I'm doing is building the media that will give us the capability for competing in the future. I don't waste time on the exploiters among my own people, because they won't break their alliances with the Jews until they have been convinced that doing so will be to their advantage, and the time when they can be convinced of that is still a long way off. And I don't waste time on the Judases, because such people aren't worth any time at all. The time will come for dealing with them as they deserve, but that time isn't here quite yet.

But with the observers there is hope for doing things now, hope for persuading some of them -- perhaps many of them -- that it is immoral and irresponsible merely to sit and observe and do nothing while the Jews and the Judases continue to use America, to use our people, for their own purposes and in doing so to bring disaster after disaster down on us and to insure a future of misery and shame for our children and our grandchildren.

There is hardly anything more irresponsible than waging an unnecessary war, hardly anything more reprehensible than waging a war for any reason except to safeguard or promote the interests of one's own people. If waging war against Afghanistan and Iraq and Iran were in the interests of my people, then I would be for it.

You know, we've talked about this before, but it's worth reminding ourselves again and again: there's more to the September 11 attack and the Bush government's response to that attack than the simplistic picture being presented to us by the government and the media. It's more than a case of Osama bin Laden hit us, so now we're going to find him and kill him. It's more than a case of we have been hurt by terrorists, and so now we are going to wipe out the governments which make it possible for terrorists to operate. If the U.S. government really thought it worthwhile to wipe out the governments that sponsor terrorism or harbor terrorists, the government of Israel should be the first one to be wiped out. Israel has sponsored terrorism and assassination from the beginning and still does. The current prime minister of Israel, Ariel Sharon, is himself a professional terrorist who supervised the massacre of thousands of Palestinian civilians in refugee camps in Lebanon in 1982.

And it's not even a case of our excusing Israel's terrorism because Israel is our friend. Israel is no friend of ours. Have we forgotten Israel's terrorist attack on the USS Liberty, when the Israeli government thought it would sink our ship, machine-gun everyone in the Liberty's lifeboats, and then blame it on the Egyptians? The Israelis almost got away with that.

No, terrorism is a hazard inherent in what the world has become. Americans must deal with it as best they can, and that means dealing with it intelligently; that means among other things understanding why we have been attacked when we become the victims of terrorism, not stupidly accepting the claim that it is because the terrorists hate our "freedom and democracy" and then running off to start a new war on that basis.

Finally, the most important thing for observers to focus on is this: the calamity that befell America on September 11 was the consequence of our having lost control of our own government. We want to avoid future terror attacks, of course. But more important than that -- more important than anything else -- is regaining control of our government and never again permitting another country or another people to use us for their own purposes.

America's Real Enemies

Watching mainstream television news programs these days is a fascinating experience -- and an enormously educational experience for those Americans able to read between the lines. CNN Headline News still carries the red, white, and blue banner "America's New War" in a transparently obvious effort to build public support for a full-scale war against Israel's enemies rather than a simple punitive expedition against the group that organized the September 11 attack on New York and Washington. Fox News, which is heavy on interviews with bureaucrats, diplomats, generals, and the like, slants its interviewee choices and the substance of the interviews to build public support in the same direction.

There are plenty of knowledgeable Americans who are solidly against dragging America into a war to clean up the Middle East for the benefit of Israel, but they have no voice in the mainstream news media. The people whose opinions are heard by the lemmings want everyone to believe that the failure of the United States to take out Iraq and Iran now, in the wake of the September 11 attack, will reveal us to the world as spineless wimps just asking for another terrorist attack. They tell us that every patriot should be in favor of a full-scale war against every country in the Middle East that these pro-Israel hawks label as an enemy of "freedom and democracy." And there are lots of reports on public opinion polls aimed at convincing the lemmings that the public really wants a full-scale war.

To me the interesting thing about this media effort is its obviousness. It is so blatant that it should be quite clear to anyone able to observe it with detachment: the media bosses want a war; the media deliberately are pushing public opinion toward approval for a major war. Even clearer is the lesson to be drawn from the way the news media avoid the obvious questions: Why were we attacked? Did our government's policies in the Middle East provoke the attack? If so, should we re-examine these policies and perhaps change them, regardless of what we do to punish the attackers? The media people and the "experts" whom they've been interviewing shrink from such questions like a vampire shrinks from a crucifix. Any sensible person would ask such questions, but the media and the people they interview don't. Fascinating!

The most interesting people to watch giving their opinions in the media are the Gentile neo-conservatives: the Jeanne Kirkpatricks, the George Wills, the Jack Kemps, the William Buckleys, the Rush Limbaughs. These are people -- writers, editors, bureaucrats, lecture-circuit types -- who make a pretense of conservatism and patriotism, and who keep the businessman/Republican/flag-waving side of the public in line. They earn their living by keeping their noses up under the Jews' coattails at all times. They all understand that their magazines would disappear from the newsstands, that their radio sponsors would cease being sponsors, and that there would be no more lecture invitations if they failed to follow the Jewish party line. They are a rabid bunch of attack dogs for the Jews without any real patriotism or any sense of shame at all. Every one of them is now beating the war drums on behalf of Israel and calling for the annihilation of Israel's enemies.

These Gentile attack dogs for the Jews really have no opinions of their own: they simply follow the party line which is laid down by Jews, most of whom are behind the scenes. During the Clinton administration I remarked more than once that it was the most Jewish government America ever had had: a Jewish secretary of state, a Jewish secretary of defense, a Jewish secretary of the Treasury, a Jewish secretary of agriculture, two Jewish Supreme Court justices, a Jewish national security adviser, a Jewish ambassador to the United Nations, and hundreds of other Jews appointed by Clinton to powerful government positions.

George Bush's government is different. The people out front, in the public's eye, are Gentiles -- of a sort: a mulatto secretary of state, a White Gentile secretary of defense, a Negress as a national security adviser, a White Gentile Treasury secretary -- and, except for Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan, no really prominent Jews. That is, there are few Jews out front, where they can be seen. But the Jews are there, just as in the Clinton government, but working behind the scenes. There's Richard Perle, who's been gnawing at America's foundations since the Nixon days, as one of Bush's principal advisers on military policy, for example. And there's Paul Wolfowitz, nominally the deputy secretary of defense, but in reality more influential in defense policy than his nominal superior, Donald Rumsfeld. Wolfowitz and Perle both judge every policy by the single criterion, "Is it good for the Jews?" And both are relentless and outspoken advocates of the destruction of Iraq and Iran, although there is no evidence that either of those countries had anything to do with the September 11 attack. For Perle and Wolfowitz it is sufficient that those countries are enemies of Israel. In a top-level military strategy briefing for Bush on September 13, Wolfowitz urged "ending states who sponsor terrorism." That's still the position of Perle and Wolfowitz and all of their neo-conservative camp followers.

How do you "end a state"? What happens to the people?

Hey, the people of Iraq and Iran aren't Jews, so don't worry about it! What are you, some kind of bleeding-heart, liberal wimp? Don't ask questions, just do it!

And, of course, no one among all of these bloodthirsty, neo-con warmongers even hints at putting Israel on the list of "states who sponsor terrorism" and which, therefore, needs to be "ended." Have you ever heard of Mossad? That's not just some rogue group of assassins and terrorists that operates without the sanction of the Israeli government. It's an agency of the Israeli government. It's part of the government of Israel. Mossad sends out its murder squads all over the world to kill people the Israeli government doesn't like. Usually they don't get caught, or if they do the media hush it up. But they've been caught shooting a Moroccan with a silenced pistol in Norway, squirting poison in the ear of a Muslim religious leader in Jordan, putting bombs in the hotel rooms of Arab diplomats in Syria. They've shot down civilian airliners if there was someone aboard they didn't like. They send assassins dressed as Arabs into Palestinian towns to murder Palestinian leaders in their homes in the dead of night. In 1981 Israeli aircraft launched a surprise bombing raid on Baghdad to destroy a research center there.

Israel has had several prime ministers who were professional terrorists before they went into politics, including Menachem Begin, Ehud Barak, and Ariel Sharon, the current prime minister. The first leaders of the state of Israel were terrorists who carried out the terror bombing of the King David Hotel in Jerusalem in 1946, killing 91 people. Ever hear of letter bombs? They are an Israeli invention. The Mossad has sent hundreds of letter bombs to scientists, journalists, and academics in Egypt, Syria, and other countries to kill and terrorize Israel's opponents.

Indeed, there are states in the Middle East that sponsor terrorism, in some cases because they have no other way of fighting back against their oppressors. But Israel has engaged in far more state-sponsored terrorism than any other state in the region. And yet the "experts" who speak grimly on American television about "ending states that sponsor terrorism" pretend as if they have never heard of Israeli terrorism.

As I said, all of this is painfully obvious, more obvious than Jewish television propaganda has been for a long time. After the Oklahoma City bombing in 1995, the unanimous refusal of the controlled media and the government to acknowledge that bombing as the outraged response of one patriot to the Clinton government's massacre of innocents in the Branch Davidian church in Waco two years earlier, and instead to attempt to blame militias and political dissidents generally, was a pretty transparent exercise in deceitful propaganda. But the present attempt by the media and the government to deflect blame for September 11 from our country's blind support for Israel is even more obvious. It provides a wonderful education for those observers capable of being educated.

The effect on the general public of the pro-war propaganda today is somewhat less salutary but still interesting. The lemmings are responding as expected, but there is more diversity in the response of the public than the media bosses like. I have a Jewish Telegraphic Agency report on my desk showing the results of public opinion polls taken in the United States a few days ago. The September 28 JTA report is headed "Polls following terror attacks on U.S. give Israel high marks." The first part of the report gives the depressing information we expect. A poll of 1,011 Americans conducted by the Institute for Jewish and Community Research and the Center for Middle Eastern Studies at the Hudson Institute found that 92 percent of those questioned endorse "full cooperation" between the United States and Israel in combating terrorism. The president of the Institute for Jewish and Community Research, Gary Tobin said:

se to unanimous as you'll ever get in a national poll. It means that the American public is almost completely behind Israel and American support for Israel and American cooperation for Israel.

Well, the support is not quite as nearly unanimous as Mr. Tobin would have us believe, but we'll get to that in a minute.

A second poll of 1,032 Americans, conducted by CNN, USA Today, and Gallup, found 55 percent of Americans saying they back Israel in its conflict with the Palestinians, while only seven percent back the Palestinians. The pro-Israel results are up from about 40 percent before September 11, while the pro-Palestinian results remained relatively unchanged. The JTA report quotes Tim Wuliger, president of the American Israel Public Affairs Committee, the huge and powerful pro-Israel lobby feared by every politician in Washington:

These polls demonstrate the solidarity between Americans and Israelis. In the wake of the September 11 terrorist attacks on America, Americans understand that we should support another country which has been relentlessly attacked by terrorists and which shares our values of democracy, sanctity of human life, and tolerance for differences in personal beliefs.

Really, that's what the Jew said: Israel, where collective punishment and the torture and killing of prisoners are government policy -- Israel, the world capital of the White slave trade, where buying and selling kidnapped Gentile women as sex slaves is legal -- is a country that respects the "sanctity of human life." What Wuliger forgot to mention is that religious Jews believe that only Jews are human.

The JTA report also quotes David Makofsky, of the Washington Institute for Near East Policy, another pro-Israel group. Makofsky says that the rise in sympathy for the Jewish state is a direct result of Americans experiencing firsthand the threat of terrorism that has plagued Israel. "Americans identify with Israel's plight," he said.

Could it possibly be that the way the Jewish news media present the news to the American people, always representing the efforts of Palestinians attempting to regain their country as "terrorism" and the efforts of the Israelis to repress them as "self-defense," has something to do with the way Americans view the situation in the Middle East?

Well, of course, it does. Nevertheless, a larger part of the American public than I would have guessed apparently hasn't been fooled by the spin put on the news by the controlled media. The Jewish poll I just cited, which showed 92 percent of the public agreeing that the United States should cooperate with Israel in combating terrorism, found that slightly more than 20 percent of the respondents blamed the September attack on U.S. support for Israel. The implication is that many of those who understand that U.S. support for Israel was the cause of the attack still are willing to collaborate with Israel. In any case, the 20 percent figure is encouraging. Also encouraging is the finding that those most likely to blame Israel are young people and people with relatively high incomes.

Another finding of the same poll is that 12 percent of the public believe that we now should distance ourselves from Israel, while 74 percent believe that we should not, with the pro-Israel respondents concentrated in the Bible Belt, where many primitive Christians actually accept the claim of the Jews to be God's Chosen People. Remember, these are the findings of a poll taken by a Jewish organization and reported by the Jewish Telegraphic Agency, where the motive is to absolve Israel of blame and to show maximum U.S. support for the Jewish state.

A separate poll taken by Time and CNN reports that 21 percent of the respondents feel less favorable toward Israel after the attack, while only 10 percent feel more favorable. The 21 percent figure in this poll is consistent with the finding of the Jewish poll that 20 percent of the public blame the attack on U.S. support for Israel.

Polls can be tricky, with the results very much dependent on the exact wording of the questions, but certainly the polls cited in the JTA report are encouraging, indicating that a significant portion of the public is able to see the obvious. Perhaps lemmings make up only about 80 percent of the population instead of the 95 percent that I have estimated in the past.

The unfortunate fact remains, however, that although approximately one in every five Americans understands that the September 11 attack was the consequence of our government's support for Israel's aggression in the Middle East, one never would guess that from watching television news, where the pretense is rigidly maintained that U.S. support for Israel had nothing to do with the attack: that it was an attack by people who simply hate our "freedom and democracy," as George Bush puts it. Not one of the "experts" being interviewed daily on television will give the slightest hint that anyone except a few "haters" and "extremists" believes otherwise. That must be intimidating to the enlightened 20 percent: no one wants to be labeled a "hater" or an "extremist." And, of course, it's intended to be intimidating; it's intended to keep the one in five who understands from explaining the facts to the four in five who don't.

It will, of course, be yet another tragedy for Americans if we let ourselves be lied into another war to advance the interests of the Jews at the expense of our own. There is an even greater tragedy looming than another war, however: that is the loss of our most fundamental freedoms. The same people who are using the September 11 attack as a pretext to push America into a full-scale war on behalf of Israel also are using it as a pretext to stifle dissent. They have the lemmings under control, but they're worried about that 20 percent or so of the population who aren't buying the television propaganda that the attack was "unprovoked" and that it was an attack on "freedom and democracy." They want to use the power of government to shut these people up, so that they can't influence others.

Intimidation through propaganda is a powerful weapon in the hands of the warmongers. Perhaps you remember how it was during the previous Persian Gulf War, ten years ago. Flag-waving yahoos were ready to beat up anyone who didn't seem an enthusiastic enough supporter of the war effort. Anyone who questioned America's terror-bombing of Baghdad was looked at with scorn and considered a subversive. The lemmings all tied yellow ribbons to everything in sight -- parking meters, door knobs, their car antennas, the fences around their yards, the columns on their front porches -- lest anyone suspect that they weren't gung-ho to kill as many Iraqis as possible.

The same war fever is being encouraged by the media and the government today. But that's not enough to satisfy the warmongers, because some people just aren't intimidated. The warmongers want to lock those people up. So-called "conservatives" in our government have wanted for years to have the power to silence troublemakers, dissidents, anyone who refused to march in lockstep with everyone else. Our present attorney general, John Ashcroft, is one of the worst of these. They want new laws to permit them to suppress any speech or opinion or activity that they don't like. Despite their claims of support for freedom and the Bill of Rights, these lying bastards want to take away our freedom. They are far more dangerous enemies of America's freedom than Osama bin Laden could ever hope to be.

They are disguising their fight against our freedom as a fight against terrorism. They already are ramming new laws through state legislatures, and they certainly will be pushing hard for new Federal laws as well. They want laws that not only will give the FBI and other secret police agencies additional powers to tap people's telephones and read their e-mail and scrutinize their bank records, but will broaden the definition of "terrorism" greatly. They want laws that will define as a "terrorist" anyone who speaks in favor of or helps to support a person who has been labeled by the government a "terrorist," or an organization that has been labeled a "terrorist organization." They want laws that will make such people subject to the death penalty. And who will decide which organizations are "terrorist organizations"?

Hey, you don't have to worry about that! Mr. Wolfowitz and his helpers in the Anti-Defamation League and the Southern Poverty Law Center will make a list. Attorney General Ashcroft will endorse the list. And if someone is charged under the law with being a terrorist, and you don't think he is and you give him a donation to help him hire a lawyer to defend himself, you have just given money to a terrorist and will be charged with being a terrorist yourself. Pretty slick, eh?

The people who are pushing for these new laws, ostensibly to protect Americans from terrorism, are the same people who for more than a decade have been backing "hate crime" and "speech crime" laws. All of the laws, whether ostensibly against "hate" or against "terrorism," have exactly the same purpose, and it's not really about terrorism at all: it is to silence dissenters, to silence people with Politically Incorrect ideas. The Jews and their Gentile hangers-on are afraid that the 20 percent of the public that doesn't believe the propaganda coming from television will be able to influence the other 80 percent if they aren't muzzled. The people in New York and Hollywood and Washington who truly hate America's freedom are hell-bent on using the tragedy of September 11 as an excuse to stamp out that freedom. They are America's real enemies. They are the ones against whom we should wage an all-out war, until the last of them has been annihilated.

Face Crime and Anthrax

Some novels are worth reading just because they're entertaining or exciting. Others are worth reading because we can learn something worthwhile from them. Occasionally, a novel may even be prophetic: we can learn something about the future from reading it. It is a rare novel indeed that is both entertaining and prophetic. Such is the novel 1984, written in 1948 by the Englishman Eric Arthur Blair using the pen name George Orwell.

I first read 1984 in 1955 when I was a graduate student and found it so fascinating that I reread it at least three times in subsequent years. What fascinated me about the novel was the feeling that I had, while reading it each time, that it not only was prescient, that it not only was telling me things about the future that I felt were likely to come about, but it also was revealing to me very fundamental things about the nature of people and governments: things that I had not been taught elsewhere because they were Politically Incorrect -- although the term "Politically Incorrect" had not yet been coined.

Here's an example: Orwell talks about the ideological regimentation of the English public by the government. People were punished not only for doing or writing or saying something Politically Incorrect; they were punished for thinking Politically Incorrect thoughts: "thought crime," it was called. The Thought Police were the all-powerful enforcers of Political Correctness. In 1984, there also was another type of crime for which people were punished: it was called "face crime," and a person committed a "face crime" if he had a Politically Incorrect expression on his face at any time. For example, if a person smiled when he should have frowned, or showed distaste or disapproval when he should have shown admiration, then he had committed a "face crime" and could be severely punished.

Well, that's only fiction, but in the real world a little over a decade ago Jewish organizations and the media began their big push to have all sorts of "hate crime" legislation enacted in America. "Hate crime," of course, is essentially "thought crime." "Hate crime" legislation punishes a person for what he supposedly was thinking at the time he committed some act. The politicians predictably put up almost no resistance. The Jews demanded it, so the politicians went along with it and began passing the laws that the Jews wanted. The Sally Soccer Moms and the Joe Sixpacks also thought "hate crime" laws were good things. Who wants to be in favor of hate? Outlaw it, get rid of it.

I've spoken often in these broadcasts about the Orwellian nature of the program to enact more "hate crime" laws. It was largely in connection with the mindless willingness of the public to go along with this trashing of their most fundamental freedoms that I began using the term "lemming" to describe people who believe whatever they are told to believe by their television screens and who then adjust their attitudes and opinions accordingly. Orwell also clearly understood this aspect of human nature. He understood that most people are susceptible to thought control by the media and by the government. He understood that no matter how repressive a government becomes, most people will never think of rebelling or even want to rebel, as long as they believe that most other people approve of the government.

I found this aspect of Orwell's book most interesting and also most profoundly depressing: his portrayal of the ease with which the thinking of the public can be controlled by the government and the media. Prior to absorbing the message of Orwell's 1984, I'd had a rather idealistic view of people -- that is, of my people, my fellow White men and women. I had thought of the White public as being comprised of a mass of individuals, each able to think for himself and make his own decisions about the world around him. I had thought that if it were clear to me that the government is corrupt and is not serving the interests of our people, then all I had to do to persuade other people that the government does not deserve their support is show them the evidence. I thought that most other people could reach rational decisions about such matters. But when I read 1984, I had the nagging conviction that Orwell was right about the nature of most people, and I was wrong. Orwell's portrayal of people had the ring of truth.

For a long time, however, I resisted accepting Orwell's view of the nature of the public because I didn't want to accept it. I wanted to keep my idealistic view of my fellow men. But eventually my own observations and my reason convinced me that Orwell was right, and that most people are, in fact, not individuals at all, but are lemmings.

I thought about the implications of that quite a bit, and I finally decided that it wasn't necessarily a bad thing. If the race had evolved that way, then it must have been for a reason. It must have survival value. And, of course, it does. We are able to have stable societies only because most people are lemmings: only because most people think and act only as members of the mass, not as individuals. In a time of war, for example, it is essential for a community or a nation to be united in its thinking. That's one of the reasons that multiculturalism weakens a nation. That's one of the reasons I've condemned as traitors the people trying to keep America's borders open to the Third World, trying to bring more "diversity" to America. They are weakening America, damaging America.

Anyway, lemminglike behavior was one thing before the age of television; it's something with quite different consequences when the powerful tool of television is in the hands of an alien minority with its own agenda, with its own interests, which in many cases are diametrically opposed to the interests of our people. My own concern, all of my work, has not been to change the nature or the behavior of our people; it has been to liberate them from the destructive influences that take advantage of our people and that manipulate them in ways opposed to their own interests. That's why I've focused so much on the all-important fact of Jewish media control.

Let me go back to Orwell's 1984 and to its all too prophetic descriptions of a government enforcing laws against "thought crime," and the people going along with this sort of ideological regimentation without complaint. Remember Orwell's description of "face crime"? I have on my desk a news report from the St. Louis Post-Dispatch last week. It's about an 11-year-old fifth grader at a St. Louis-area school who was suspended from school last week for smiling inappropriately. The news story is headed, "School suspends boy who drew picture of attack, then grinned while showing it."

The boy's class had been given the assignment of writing about the September 11 attack. The boy drew a sketch of the twin towers of the World Trade Center with flames and smoke coming from the upper floors. The principal of the boy's school asked to see the drawing. The boy, Paul Volz, showed it to the principal and smiled. The principal, Jeff Boyer, suspended Paul form school and sent him home with a note. The principal's note to Paul's father read:

When I asked him why he did this, he just looked at me and smiled. This is totally inappropriate, and Paul's behavior has to change.

Paul's father complained to the newspaper, and a reporter tried to contact the principal, but the principal refused to return his call. The reporter then contacted a spokesman for the school district, Ben Heit. Heit told the reporter that it was Paul's smile, not the drawing itself, that brought the suspension. All of this is in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch of October 4.

Think about this story for a minute. I believe that most of us think of the attack on the World Trade Center as a very serious matter. Certainly, 6,000 people being killed is not a laughing matter for most of us. Paul Volz's smiling about the picture he drew may very well have indicated that the 11-year-old boy didn't take the attack seriously. But you know, in America, we used to be free to make up our own minds about what we would take seriously and what we wouldn't. When a neighbor -- or an 11-year-old kid -- didn't agree with us about what should be smiled at and what shouldn't, that was nobody's business but his. We couldn't sic the FBI on him -- or suspend him from school. It's clear that Paul's principal believes that that view of things is old-fashioned. He believes that the time has come when it is appropriate to punish people for "face crimes."

My concern is that many Sally Soccer Moms and Joe Sixpacks feel the same way about it that Principal Jeff Boyer does. In this case, I suspect that the war hysteria being drummed up by the media emboldened the principal to act as he did. I'm concerned that before this war is over, people like Principal Boyer, with an Orwellian Thought Police mentality, will use the war to justify many more 1984-style curtailments of our freedom. The media bosses have been preaching for years that the First Amendment was never meant to protect "offensive speech" or speech that hurts other people's feelings: "hate speech" they call it. And there are literally millions of American voters who have let themselves be persuaded to go along with that view. Who needs "hate speech"? they think. It just hurts people's feelings and stirs them up against other people. Who wants to be in favor of speech that hurts people's feelings? Outlaw it, get rid of it. And what better time for the media bosses and their political lackeys in the government to push for new "speech crime" laws than when America is at war? Americans need to be united now, they say. We need to pull together. We must not have people saying things that divide us. That only serves the purpose of the enemy. So let's outlaw "hate speech" now. And simultaneously with this campaign to destroy our most basic freedoms, they tell us that we need to wage war against the enemies of our "freedom and democracy" in the Middle East. I'll bet they're really laughing up their sleeves about that.

And really, don't they have a right to laugh at us, to feel contempt for us? They use our democracy -- that is, our electoral system, in which the lemmings, whose opinions they control through their television, are used to put their approved politicians into public office -- to take away our freedom, and they use our people to help them do it. And they facilitate the whole process by getting us to fight a war against their enemies in the Middle East, telling us that it's a war to safeguard our "freedom and democracy." Wise men, such as George Orwell, warned us about this sort of thing more than 50 years ago, but if we judge by people like Principal Jeff Boyer and school board official Ben Heit, the warnings haven't helped much.

Clear indications of the contempt they feel for us and of their confidence in their ability to continue manipulating us for their own purposes are visible in many places, but probably nowhere more than in Israel itself. There's been a lot of discussion among the Israeli politicians in the Knesset during recent weeks about how to take the best advantage of the September 11 attack on New York and Washington. The Israeli Prime Minister, Ariel Sharon, is all in favor of carrying out a massive program of ethnic cleansing against the Palestinians while the Americans are preoccupied with annihilating the Jews' other enemies in the Middle East. Simon Perez, a former prime minister and currently Israel's foreign minister, favors a more cautious policy -- at least, in public he favors caution.

The discussion between Sharon and Perez is almost like a bad cop, good cop routine. Sharon is a certified war criminal, a professional terrorist with a record much longer than that of Osama bin Laden, and a mass murderer, who is currently defying the efforts of an international war crimes tribunal in Brussels to put him on trial for organizing the butchery of Palestinian women and children in the Sabra and Chatila refugee camps in Lebanon in 1982. His principal constituency among Israeli Jews is the raving-mad Orthodox element and the Jewish settlers in the so-called "occupied territories." Perez, a member of the Labor Party, appeals more to the rootless, cosmopolitan, pseudo-liberal Jewish element and pretends to be in favor of the badly misnamed "peace process."

Deception characterizes nearly everything that the Israelis do publicly. Privately, the Jews in both the Sharon and the Perez camps are enormously pleased by the September 11 attack on New York and Washington and by the Bush government's declaration of war against Israel's enemies in the Middle East. Sharon, however, pretends to be angry about the American efforts to build a coalition of so-called "moderate" Arab states to help in the war against Afghanistan and Iraq. Sharon blusters that the Bush government is trying to "sell Israel out" by making agreements with Arab states. These agreements may later turn out to be disadvantageous to Israel, Sharon complains.

Sharon is a master of what the Jews proudly call "chutzpah," which is a combination of incredible arrogance and spectacular brazenness mixed with a breathtaking degree of bald-faced deceit. American long-term support for Israel's aggression led to the attack of September 11 in which 6,000 Americans were killed; America then launched a war to destroy Israel's enemies in the Middle East under the guise of "fighting terrorism" and protecting America's "freedom and democracy," and Sharon complains that we're doing it at Israel's expense! It's the old Jewish trick of never being satisfied, no matter how much is given to them: of always complaining that they don't have enough and demanding more, as if we owe it to them! If we remind them of how much we already have done for them, of how many sacrifices we already have made for them, the response is an expression of injured innocence and, "Yes, but vot haff you done for us today?"

Really, one hardly can blame them. I don't know who coined the saying, "Never give a sucker an even break," but the Jews certainly have taken it to heart. That is quite evident to anyone monitoring these Knesset discussions. Most of the discussions can be found in Jewish Telegraphic Agency or Reuters news reports, but some of the most lurid discussions are not reported in print. The week before last, the Hebrew-language Jerusalem radio station Kol Yisrael -- that's Hebrew for "all Israel" -- reported one debate that I have not found in print anywhere. According to Kol Yisrael, Sharon and Perez were discussing the Israeli government's actions against the Palestinians. Perez was arguing that the Israelis should at least maintain the pretense of seeking an end to the violence in order to keep the Americans happy. Sharon turned angrily to Perez and shouted:

Every time we do something, you warn me that America will do this or America will do that. I will tell you something very clearly: don't worry about American pressure on Israel. We, the Jewish people, control America, and the Americans know it.

This outburst from Sharon was followed by another warning from Perez that Sharon should be careful not to say such things. Clearly, when Sharon said that the Americans know that the Jews control their country, he wasn't talking about the Sally Soccer Moms and the Joe Sixpacks, who don't know anything they aren't told by television. He was talking about the politicians and the bureaucrats: about George Bush and Bill Clinton and the rest of the crowd that always has done Israel's bidding.

I'm reminded of something that happened 25 years ago, when General George Brown was the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. He was showing an Israeli delegation some new, high-tech American weapons. The Israelis said they wanted them. General Brown told them that they weren't available for export, that the Congress hadn't approved them for use by anyone except the United States. The Israelis replied arrogantly, "Don't you worry about the Congress. We'll take care of the Congress." And, of course, they did. They got the weapons they wanted. And General Brown got in a lot of trouble and was even accused of "anti-Semitism" for telling others about this incident.

You know, we have a big, big problem here in America. The problem is not that people all over the world hate our guts and are willing to sacrifice their own lives in order to inflict damage on us. The problem is not that we are subjected to terrorist attacks with hijacked airliners or with deadly biological warfare agents such as anthrax. We could lose a lot of people to terrorist attacks and still survive as a nation.

The problem is not terrorism. The problem is that we have lost control of our own government. Our government no longer responds to our needs; instead it responds to the demands of an alien minority and has done this for a long time. It's even worse than that. The Jews' control of our mass media of news and entertainment, which has enabled them to gain control of the politicians and the government, has weakened -- really sickened -- our whole people. In order to gain control of the government they first had to subvert our people. They had to change our beliefs and our attitudes. They had to distract our attention from the important things and get us preoccupied with unimportant things. They had to make us forget our values and traditions. They had to break down our pride and independence. They had to change the way we raise our children. They had to subvert our educational system and our churches and other institutions, one at a time. They had to confuse us and make us feel guilty for being what we were. They had to make us ashamed of our forefathers. They had to make us afraid to say in public what we felt about our own people and about others. They had to corrupt our political system, the way we chose our leaders. And then they were able to take control of our government and use us for their own purposes.

I've been preaching about this for more than 30 years -- about the effects of Jewish television on our people. I've been writing about it in books and in pamphlets and in leaflets. It was more than 25 years ago when I wrote my book The Turner Diaries, warning about what would happen to America. I've been warning about it on the Internet. I've been talking about it every week in the American Dissident Voices broadcasts. Many people listened. Many people agreed with me. But they thought that they didn't have to do anything. They thought that they could sit it out. But nobody can sit out what is happening to America now. We are beginning to pay the price for allowing ourselves to be subverted, for giving up control of our government, of our destiny. We are beginning to pay the price for letting ourselves, our nation, be used by an alien minority to advance their own interests at the expense of ours.

We are beginning to pay the price, and before we have finished paying the price we will discover that it is a heavy price indeed. Bombing the whole Middle East flat will not solve our problem. Our problem is here, not in Afghanistan or in Iraq. What Osama bin Laden gave us on September 11 was just a wakeup call. What the people mailing out anthrax-infected letters are giving us is just a reminder that we can have no real security -- in fact, no real future for our children and our grandchildren -- until we regain control of our own government. You must not believe the generals and the politicians who tell you confidently from your television screens that, if we just use enough cruise missiles and smart bombs and kill enough of the Jews' enemies in the Middle East, we'll be safe again. Americans will never again have real security or real peace of mind until they have regained control of their government and their media.

Let's get started!

Advice for Patriots

Today, let's talk about some of the things that have changed in America since September 11. I'm not thinking about all of the new rigmarole at airports or about how Mr. Bush's campaign of cruise-missile diplomacy in the Middle East is going, or even about how opening the mail each morning in media offices around the country and in politicians' offices in Washington has become a much more exciting operation than it used to be when Ted Kaczynski was the only person putting dangerous things into letters.

I'm more interested in the changes in the Politically Correct party line laid down for the lemmings by the media. I'm interested in changes in the way Americans view the world. And I'm interested in the changed prospects for the future of America.

The most interesting thing about the new party line is its stupidity. The Jews were caught by surprise last month, and they had to whip up something in a hurry in order to deflect blame from Israel and from the U.S. government's support for Israel. Apparently the best they could do on a moment's notice is the explanation that Osama bin Laden attacked us simply because he hates our freedom and democracy. Since they first cooked up that explanation they've refined it quite a bit. Both the Foreign Ministry in Israel and the American Israel Public Affairs Committee, Israel's enormously powerful lobby in Washington, have been circulating "talking papers" to their own people, to politicians, and to everyone else who is likely to be making a public statement about America's new war or about Washington's past policy in the Middle East.

These "talking papers" tell people how to counter what the Jews call Osama bin Laden's "lies" and also how to respond to anyone who suggests that our government's support of Israel might have had something to do with the September 11 attack. The papers warn people never to raise this subject, but if someone else insists on talking about it, it is to be countered with the explanation that support for Israel had nothing at all to do with the attack, that we would have been attacked even if we weren't supporting Israel, and that the only reason for the attack is Osama bin Laden's irrational hatred of America's freedom and democracy.

I believe that it's clear that many people actually believe this nonsense, judging by the number of cars with red, white, and blue ribbons tied to their antennas. But these are the people who believe everything Tom Brokaw or their beloved Big Brother in the White House tells them. If George Bush came on TV and told them with that mock-solemn expression of his that a Martian invasion force had just landed, that the Martians were demanding one million sacrificial virgins as their price for not destroying Hollywood and Washington, and that U.S. Army troops would be going door to door to collect virgins, the folks with the ribbons on their antennas would believe it, and they would prepare to hand over any virgins in their households. They would consider it to be their patriotic duty. The party line may change from time to time, but lemmings never change.

Well, the lemmings may believe that U.S. support for Israel had nothing to do with the September 11 attack or with the anthrax-laced letters now going around, but no one else believes it. Last week the media bosses were kicking themselves because they had let the text of a statement Osama bin Laden had made be published in the United States. They said that they had made a mistake in putting this statement before the American public. They wouldn't publish any further Osama bin Laden statements, they said, because the statements might contain secret instructions for his operatives.

Everyone I've spoken with laughed at that excuse. In his last statement Osama bin Laden said that Americans would not be secure and would have no peace of mind as long as Palestinians were not secure in their own land. That's the sort of powerful and simple message that even Sally Soccer Mom and Joe Sixpack might understand, and that's what the Jewish media bosses don't want the public to hear. They're not worried about secret instructions; they're worried about the lemmings figuring out what's going on.

Actually, I think there's very little danger of that. And really, the changes I'm more interested in are in the outlook of the minority of the population able to think for itself: the minority that doesn't believe whatever Tom Brokaw says. You know, I've been talking to this minority for years -- decades, actually -- warning them about the consequences of letting their government get out of control, warning them of the consequences of permitting the Jews of Hollywood and New York to run our country through their control of our mass media, warning them of the consequences of continuing to sit on their hands and keep their mouths shut from fear of being denounced by the media as "anti-Semites" or "racists."

And I wasn't having as much success as I wanted at getting them to pay attention and change their ways. Many of those who listened wouldn't do anything because what I was warning them about didn't seem quite real. Despite all the changes they could see around them -- the deterioration of our cities and our schools, the darkening of the racial complexion of America, the trashing of our culture by the mass media, the increasingly obvious efforts of the Jewish media bosses to persuade our young women that they should bed down with non-Whites -- despite everything, they themselves managed to remain comfortable and economically secure, so the things I was warning them about didn't seem quite real. They had convinced themselves that they were above it all, that they could continue to watch the destruction of their country and their people all around them, and it would never affect them personally: that they could remain secure and comfortable while everything around them went to hell.

Osama bin Laden jolted some of them awake on September 11: some of those whose attention I hadn't been able to catch with my own warnings. He convinced some of them that what they had been observing going on around them for years was in fact real: that continuing to ignore the degenerative processes promoted by the media and the government and hoping for the best really wasn't a good strategy for personal survival. In particular, he convinced many members of the thinking minority that losing control of our government really is a serious matter, that permitting our government to be used by the Jews against their neighbors in the Middle East -- and also against the genuine interests of the American people -- could have real consequences at home.

I have the feeling that many of these thinking people are paying at least a little more attention now to the things we've been talking about here every week. The fact that the number of people who download my weekly American Dissident Voices broadcasts has nearly doubled since September 11 is a pretty good indication of this. Just as I'm getting more hate mail from the red-white-and-blue-ribbon types, I'm also getting more thoughtful responses from the people who understand and care. Which is to say, I think that I now have an audience that not only is bigger but also is more attentive and responsive. That is really important.

I'm not discouraged by the fact that the attentive and responsive people still constitute only a minority of a minority. I'm encouraged by the fact that the attentive people now make up a larger minority of the thinking portion of the population than they did before September 11. Important things always are done by minorities. Majorities don't make decisions; individuals do; small minorities do. History is made by active minorities. Sometimes an active minority may use the passive majority as a tool or as a weapon, but the minority always acts in accord with its own will.

What's important is which minority is making the decisions, which minority is active at any particular moment. For at least the past 60 years it's been the wrong minority, an alien minority that is implacably hostile to our people. If we are to survive, that must change. Our minority must become active instead. Our minority must grow to include more of the thinking portion of our population. And that is happening now. That's been happening since September 11.

The people who understand and care have been forced to begin paying attention. I have a very strong premonition that there will be other things in the reasonably near future that will make them pay even closer attention. The Bush government, just like the Clinton government before it, thinks that it can stop terrorism with cruise missiles and smart bombs. But just think for a moment: whether Osama bin Laden survives the Bush government's current war against Israel's enemies in the Middle East or not, he already has become immortal. In the eyes of Muslims he has been elevated to a status in heaven alongside Mohammed. His name will be praised, and stories will be told about him around campfires throughout the Muslim world for countless generations to come, long after the Bush government has gone and been forgotten. Cruise missiles can't take Osama bin Laden's immortality away from him. There's nothing the Bush government can do to diminish his glory in the Muslim world. In fact, the more cruise missiles and smart bombs the United States unleashes on the Muslim world, the higher will Osama bin Laden's esteem rise; the more will his strike against the United States seem justified to his fellow Muslims.

Don't be fooled by the tame "house Muslims" the media bosses have been trotting out to explain to the lemmings that violence is abhorrent to "real Muslims." The real Muslims are the ones rioting against the government in Pakistan now. The real Muslims are the ones singing Osama bin Laden's praises now. And there will be no shortage of other young Muslims lusting for a share in his glory, lusting to have their praises sung around campfires too. Cruise missiles don't frighten them. There are enough of them already in this country to keep things jumping, thanks to the government's insane immigration policy of recent decades. The anthrax-laced letters that have been going around all were mailed from inside this country. And anthrax is by no means the nastiest thing that can be mailed in an envelope. The media won't even mention the biological warfare agents the government is really afraid of, because they don't want to give anyone ideas.

The fact is, terrorism has been made much more fashionable since September 11, and the stakes have been raised. Simple truck bombs won't get much respect in the future, but I have a suspicion that we'll see a few more of them anyway. And I suspect that we'll also see people trying to outdo Osama bin Laden's September 11 televised extravaganza. The government and the media suspect the same thing, and they're frightened. That's why they're trying so desperately to stifle dissent and keep everyone pledging allegiance to the flag.

At the University of California in Los Angeles a library worker, 53-year-old Jonnie Hargis, has been suspended without pay because he sent out an e-mail letter criticizing U.S. support for Israel's aggression. The university administration explained that it has a policy against using university computers for political messages, but Hargis, who has worked at the UCLA library for 22 years, pointed out that no one who has been sending out pro-Israel and pro-war messages has been punished.

There are similar situations at other universities around the country. Jews and neo-conservatives post belligerent, bloodthirsty messages calling for the annihilation of all of the Jews' enemies in the Middle East, including Iraq and Iran as well as Afghanistan. Anyone who calls instead for eliminating the cause of the September 11 attack -- that is, for stopping the blind support by the U.S. government of Israel's aggression -- is censured and threatened with expulsion or with being fired.

There are still people around who can remember how it was at our universities during the Vietnam War. That was when treason ruled on campuses. Students burned their draft cards and put up Viet Cong flags and posters of Ho Chi Minh in their dormitories. Jewish activists in groups such as Students for a Democratic Society organized pro-Viet Cong rallies on campuses. Professors encouraged this activity, and administrators didn't interfere, citing free speech.

The switch to red, white, and blue ribbons and saluting the flag came rather suddenly last month, and a lot of thinking people understand why it came. They understand that it is when America is involved in a war to promote Jewish interests that pledging allegiance to the flag suddenly is declared fashionable. When Israel's welfare is threatened, Jews, ordinarily noted for their cynicism and irreverence, suddenly put their hands over their hearts and begin singing The Star-Spangled Banner, and they glare at anyone who isn't singing loudly enough. And people who make the mistake of asking why get fired or suspended. But you know, firing people or suspending people who have dissenting opinions doesn't go down well with the independent thinkers. And I'll guarantee you: there will be a lot more dissent before this war is over. And the Jewish media won't be able to hide it all.

What we are beginning to see now is a sharpening division between the Jews, their bought politicians, and the "I pledge allegiance," authoritarian types on one side, and everyone else on the other side. We also saw a division, along different lines, during the Vietnam War, with the authoritarians and the Jews on opposite sides instead of the same side. I believe that the division this time will develop faster and become sharper.

I don't know how the war itself will develop. It was clear before it began that the U.S. military machine is quite capable of flattening Afghanistan or any other Third World country without suffering any significant losses to its own personnel, simply because we can hit them from a distance with a great deal of destructive power, and they don't have the means to hit back -- except through what we call "terrorism." It is certain that there will be more terrorism, although, of course, I cannot predict the form it will take or its magnitude.

I can predict, however, that the media and the politicians will denounce it as "cowardly" and will act as if America has been wronged: that whatever form the next blow against America takes and wherever it comes from, it will be declared "unprovoked." And I can predict that the polls published by the media will continue to show nearly every American wildly enthusiastic about the war, even as the opposition to the war grows.

One interesting thing about the opposition this time is that it is growing both among the Gentile Left and among genuine patriots. During the Vietnam War the members of the Gentile Left all were on the Jewish side. Despite the current agreement between leftists and patriots on the single issue of ending support for Israel and limiting the war in the Middle East, I don't see much chance of real collaboration between these two elements. The Gentile Left is still hopelessly confused on such essential issues as race and feminism and homosexuality and permissiveness. But the war is indeed driving a wedge between Jews and Gentile leftists -- a deeper wedge than that driven by the development of Jewish neo-conservatism after the Vietnam War, and for that we should be thankful.

There may be other hopeful developments as well. The assassination in Jerusalem this week of one of Israel's most bloodthirsty Jewish militants by the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine certainly was a welcome move. Until now all of the assassins have been Jews, and all of the victims have been Palestinians. It's too soon to know whether or not this one act of retribution against the Israeli leadership will be followed by other successful blows, but it may be that the events of recent weeks have emboldened the Palestinians to act with more imagination and enterprise than before.

Looking ahead a bit, there are several signs of hope here on our own home front. The heightened sense of reality among non-lemmings, the lessening of their sense of detachment, the stronger realization that they cannot survive by continuing to sit on their hands and watch the Jews destroy the world around them -- this is the single most important consequence of recent events. This, together with the growing alienation between Gentile leftists and Jews, leaves the Jews in a weaker position than they have been in a long time. They will crack their whips more frantically than before, trying to keep everyone in line, but the principal effect of that will be to generate even more resentment against them.

Things are a bit brittle now. A few dozen more anthrax cases, another truck bomb in a well chosen location, and substantial changes could take place in a hurry: a stock market panic, martial law measures by the Bush government, and a sharpening of the debate as to how we got ourselves get into this mess in the first place. As the debate sharpens, the Jews and their collaborators will pull out all of the stops in an effort to stifle it, but I don't think that even a declaration of martial law can stifle it now. Too many people already smell the stink in Washington. Too many people already understand on whose hands is the blood of 6,000 innocent Americans who died last month. Too many people understand the true motivation behind the current war against Israel's enemies in the Middle East. The genie is out of the bottle now, and not even Mr. Bush's new anti-terrorism agency -- what does he call it? -- the Office of Homeland Security? -- can put it back in the bottle.

It's a strange thing: in a novel I wrote more than 12 years ago -- the title is Hunter -- I talked about the formation of a new anti-terrorism agency, separate from the FBI. And I pointed out that the principal aim of the new agency would not be to protect the public from terrorism, but to protect the government from an increasingly restless and disillusioned public: a sort of modern Praetorian Guard. I think that we'll be seeing more developments in that direction in the next few months, with the timing depending upon when the next surprise comes and its magnitude.

Of course, I don't know what will happen next to shatter already jangled nerves, but it is likely that something will happen. My advice to responsible patriots now is this: Expect a surprise, and remain calm when it comes. But don't wait for it to come to raise your voice. Speak out now. Don't be intimidated by the mindless yahoos waving their flags or by the government or by the media. If you point out calmly and in a reasoned way who is responsible for what happened to America last month you will have more people agreeing with you than you might imagine. If you call for your fellow Americans to join you in regaining control of their government, the response will be greater than at any time in recent years.

Send Them All Back

A friend in New York has sent me a collection of New York newspapers with stories about the September 11 attack on the World Trade Center. I've scanned at least 20 issues of the New York Times, the New York Post, and the Daily News from the past six weeks. I wasn't paying much attention to the repetitious stories about how many thousands of tons of rubble had been removed or how many bodies had been recovered. Instead, I was trying just to capture the flavor of the party line being fed to the public by the media in New York, which is pretty much the same flavor as that being fed to the rest of the country, except perhaps a little stronger.

There are several components of this flavor, but the strongest is the intense, almost maniacal hostility directed against anyone who questions the assertion by the media and the government that the September 11 attack was based solely on the hatred that fundamentalist Muslims -- especially Osama bin Laden and his followers -- supposedly have for America's "freedom and democracy." Fundamentalist Muslims, according to the Bush government's party line, believe in a theocratic society, of the sort established in Afghanistan by the Taliban. Since America doesn't have such a society, they hate us, and that's why they attacked us. And it's the only reason, and don't you even dare to think that there might be some other reason for the attack. If you even hint at another reason, then you're a dirty, lying, criminal anti-Semite, and you're probably in league with the terrorists.

Really, the response of the media to a suggestion by anyone that the U.S. government's support of Israel's aggression against its neighbors might have been even partly responsible for the attack is a hysterical outpouring of scorn and hatred against the heretic. I have never been to Afghanistan and don't know how the Taliban responds to critics, but the government over there hardly could be more intolerant toward dissenters than the media here are in this matter of questioning the reason for the September 11 attack.

Here's an example: The whole front page of the October 12 issue of New York's Daily News is taken up by a photograph of Saudi Arabia's Prince Alwaleed bin Talal viewing the wreckage of the World Trade Center just after he has given a personal check for $10 million to New York Mayor Rudolph Giuliani to be used in the recovery effort. Under the prince's photo, in a huge headline, are the words, "Shove It!" Not a very nice way to thank someone who has just donated $10 million to the city. Not even a nice thing to say in polite society. Why the newspaper's hatred for the prince, who is one of the world's wealthiest men? Is it because he is an Arab, and the newspaper's editor believes he may have some link to Osama bin Laden? No, it hardly could be that: the editor understands that the fundamentalist Muslims hate people like the Saudi prince, whom they consider a traitor.

What caused the nasty headline was a comment the prince made as he was touring the wreckage of the World Trade Center. After denouncing Osama bin Laden and calling the attack "a tremendous crime," the prince said:

I came here to show my allegiance to New York. We are here to tell America and to tell New York that Saudi Arabia is with the United States wholeheartedly.

That sounds kosher enough to please any media boss, doesn't it? But then a minute later the prince said:

At times like this one we must address some of the issues that led to such a criminal attack. I believe the government of the United States of America should reexamine its policies in the Middle East and adopt a more balanced stance toward the Palestinian cause. Our Palestinian brethren continue to be slaughtered at the hands of Israelis while the world turns the other cheek.

Oh, boy, that really blew it! After all of his public groveling and after his gift of $10 million to the city, the prince dared to suggest that U.S. support for Israel's aggressive behavior in the Middle East might have had something to do with the attack. He had violated the taboo. He had deviated from the party line. He had spoken the unspeakable. Thus the scornful and insulting headline telling the prince to take his $10 million gift and "shove it" on the front page of the Daily News. And Mayor Giuliani, as soon as he was told of the prince's words, angrily ordered an aide to return the prince's $10 million check and announced that the city would not accept the prince's "tainted" money. Commentary about the prince in other New York newspapers was just as nasty as that in the Daily News. Columnists and editorial writers expressed not just disapproval of the prince's statement; they were hysterical with hatred and rage.

Well, that's New York. Rudolph Giuliani always has kept his nose well up under the Jews' coattails. That's how he became mayor. And I suppose that one shouldn't be surprised by the headline on the front page of the Daily News, which is owned by New York Jewish real estate developer Mortimer Zuckerman. What's really interesting is that virtually all of the other mainstream media around the country -- and all the other politicians as well -- echo the same party line. And the Gentile editors and columnists and politicians are, with a few exceptions, as vicious and hateful as the Jews themselves in attacking anyone who questions the party line that U.S. support for Israel had nothing at all to do with the events of September 11.

Two journalists in Oneida, New York, in an essentially Gentile area of the state more than 250 miles from Giuliani's turf, didn't toe the party line closely enough and learned to their sorrow what happens to those naïve enough to believe in freedom of the press. Last Wednesday Jean Ryan, managing editor of the Oneida Daily Dispatch, and Dale Seth, the paper's city editor, were fired by the paper's publisher because they ran an editorial that quoted a Pakistani who pointed out that the state of Israel was founded on terrorism and that throughout the Middle East Israelis were looked on as the region's preeminent terrorists. Furious Jews demanded the heads of the two editors, and the publisher, in order to avoid an advertising boycott, gave them up.

It is not too much to say that the Jews and their camp followers in the media and the government become hysterical whenever the question of responsibility for the September 11 attack is raised. They refuse to discuss or debate the matter; they just begin shrieking and spitting. On the part of Jews I guess that is understandable. It is crystal clear that the principal reason for the attack was the U.S. government's support for Israel's atrocious behavior in the Middle East, against the Palestinians and others. No rational person doubts that, and Osama bin Laden himself acknowledged it in public statements. The Jews are terrified that if they permit the matter to be debated in public, then even the lemmings -- which is to say, the voters -- may begin to see the light. And if the voters ever figure out what is going on, then many politicians may rebel against Jewish control and cut off U.S. support for Israel. And that would mean a quick demise for the Jewish state; without U.S. weapons and U.S. money Israel cannot survive. Thus the hysterical shrieking and name-calling whenever anyone links U.S. foreign policy to the September 11 attack. The aim is to keep a lid on the subject by keeping everyone intimidated, keeping everyone afraid of being denounced as an "anti-Semite" or a "sympathizer with terrorism" if he fails to toe the party line.

You know, terrorism is real. It's not just an invention by the media. It's something that we actually must learn to cope with in the sort of world that our government has made for us with its criminally irresponsible policies. But both the media and the government are badly misusing the term, much in the way they misuse such terms as "racism." For example, when one of Ariel Sharon's cabinet thugs, Rehavam Ze'evi, was assassinated last week by the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, George Bush referred to it as an "act of terrorism," a term he would not have dreamed of using to refer to any of Israel's numerous assassinations of Palestinian leaders.

Ze'evi, by the way, was a close associate of Jewish mobsters involved in Israel's international trade in White slaves. His friends and political allies operated the sex-slave rings which kidnap young Russian and Ukrainian women in the lands pauperized by Jewish communism and bring them to Israel, where they are forced to work as sex slaves for the enrichment of their Jewish pimps. Killing Ze'evi was more like flushing a toilet than an "act of terrorism."

The Jews have even called me a "terrorist," and the corrupt government in Washington has gone along with this name-calling. The fact is that I have never been involved in any criminal activity whatsoever, much less terrorism, nor have I ever urged others to engage in terrorism, and yet listen to what this government report, published by the government's Centers for Disease Control, says about me. Under the general heading "Emerging Infectious Diseases" on the CDC's Web site is a report written by a Jewess, Jessica Stern, identified in her own report as a member of the notorious Council on Foreign Relations. In her report, titled "The Prospect of Domestic Bioterrorism," she writes:

Politically motivated terrorists who desire to change societies rather than destroy them might avoid killing very large numbers of people because the political costs would exceed the benefits. Some terrorists, however, want to annihilate their enemies or demolish the societal order. William Pierce, leader of the neo-Nazi organization National Alliance, aims to initiate a worldwide race war and establish an Aryan state.

She certainly makes it sound like I'm one of those "some terrorists" she mentions in the sentence just before the one in which she names me. That Centers for Disease Control report is currently on the CDC's Web site at cdc.gov.

Now, one expects this sort of name-calling and deception from the Jews, and one expects it from the news media under their control. But it becomes a more worrisome matter when the Jews are able to use the government as a willing tool to propagate their lies and to help them in their deception of the American public. Just as George Bush will knowingly repeat any lie they tell him to repeat, the Jews are able to use a government agency such as the Centers for Disease Control, an agency charged with protecting the public health, to discredit as a "terrorist" any law-abiding citizen who exposes their lies or who otherwise displeases them.

If they can do it to me, they can do it to you or to anyone else who annoys them. And if you believe that there's anyone in the terminally corrupt government in Washington who even cares about the way in which the Jews misuse the U.S. government for their own purposes, you are sadly mistaken. Tell them about it and they will just smirk at you and lie the way George Bush smirks and lies. The civil servants who cared were weeded out of the bureaucracy long ago. The last honest elected official threw in the towel at about the same time. And if you suggest that I sue the Jewess who wrote the report calling me a terrorist or the Council on Foreign Relations, to which she belongs, or the Centers for Disease Control, which published the report, for libel, then you don't understand how the legal system in this country has been subverted.

Well, back to the party line in all of those New York newspapers I've been reading: One cornerstone of the party line is to prevent any public discussion of the real reason for the September 11 attack; another cornerstone is to whip the lemmings up into a war hysteria, so that they will go along with a prolonged war in the Middle East on behalf of Israel. To this end the newspapers are full of stories and pictures designed to warm the hearts and stir the blood of the Joe Sixpacks and the Sally Soccermoms of the nation: pictures of schoolchildren waving flags and singing "The Star Spangled Banner"; speeches about "unity" and about all Americans pulling together, regardless of race or creed, to "fight terrorism." And the photos of the "proud to be an American" types, displaying their flags and holding their hands over their hearts, are all appropriately multicultural, with Blacks, mestizos, and Asians mixed in with the Whites.

The columnists and the cartoonists in all of the New York papers are singing in tune with the editors and reporters. The columns were full of folksy anecdotes designed to get everyone into a flag-waving mood. A column in the September 24 New York Post quoted a woman at a rally against terrorism in Yankee Stadium: "They sought to divide us," she said. "But instead they united us as never before."

I quote columnist Steve Dunleavy:

Throughout Yankee Stadium on a Sunday blessed with sunshine you almost felt like you could touch the emotion in the air with your finger. Every color, every creed, every race, every religion together.

And Dunleavy talks about the tears on people's faces as they sing the old songs designed to build patriotism during the First and Second World Wars. And let me tell you, for most Americans this is powerful stuff. People who have been alienated by the unnaturalness of multiculturalism and modern urban life long for a feeling of togetherness, of solidarity, of purpose and mission. They want to feel strong and proud again, instead of impotent and empty and guilty for being White. Even people who ought to know better get swept up in this feeling.

And after they've got the lemmings feeling strong and proud again, the media tell them whom to hate, whom to direct their righteous wrath against. First there are the internal enemies to be hated, and then there are the external enemies. The internal enemies are those who aren't marching in lockstep with everyone else, those who aren't singing loudly enough, those who question the wisdom of rushing off to a major war against all of the Jews' enemies in the Middle East, those who seek to damage our wonderful feeling of unity -- to divide us -- by asking about the causes of the September 11 attack. Special scorn is directed at the dissenters on America's university campuses and at citizens who express concern about the Bill of Rights being trampled by those eager to wage war and to keep everyone else in line. The neo-conservative Jew William Kristol has a newspaper filled with such scorn. It's called The Weekly Standard, and its columns and editorials are prominently reproduced in the New York papers that I scanned.

As for the external enemies, well, of course, there's Osama bin Laden, but the hatred and wrath of the aroused lemmings are being directed far wider than that. A cartoon in the same issue of the New York Post that I cited a minute ago features a garbage barrel with rats being dropped into it. The barrel is labeled "Barrel of Vermin." One of the rats is labeled "Taliban," another is labeled "Iraq," and a third is labeled "Iran." Not "Iraqi terrorists" or "Iranian terrorists"; just "Iraq" and "Iran," the whole countries, the two Middle Eastern nations most feared by Israel, but which, so far as we know, had nothing to do with the September 11 attack. The cartoon appears right above a William Kristol column beating the drums for a general war and disparaging pacifists. The message of the cartoon is clear: they all wear towels on their heads; they're all vermin; let's kill 'em all.

That message doesn't exactly jibe with the Bush government's campaign to build a coalition of so-called "moderate" Muslim states, but the general tenor of the propaganda in the New York papers is that we shouldn't be splitting hairs now. We should hug the nearest non-White who doesn't have a towel on his head, sing "The Star Spangled Banner" with him, and then go marching off to war together.

Just to avoid any misunderstanding, I'll say again now what I've said before. I have no real fondness for anyone in the Middle East. I do not believe that Middle Easterners, Arabs or Jews -- especially Jews -- should be permitted to live in America or in Europe. I have no sympathy for Islam or any other Semitic religion from the Middle East. But I do not believe that we need to go to war against Iraq or Iran or even Afghanistan in order to protect Americans from terrorism or to protect any other American interests. And I strenuously object to going to war against anyone to protect Israel's interests.

If we really have proof that Osama bin Laden organized the September 11 attack, then let's punish him without waging war against another country. Confiscate Osama bin Laden's assets wherever they can be found, expel all Middle Easterners from the United States so that he has no followers left here to mail anthrax-infected letters around the country, and send a team of CIA assassins into Afghanistan to find him. But quit waging war on other countries or trying to install puppet governments in other countries for the sake of Israel.

And after Osama bin Laden has been terminated, let's go after the people who are really responsible for the September 11 attacks. And you know who those people are: they are the politicians in Washington who have been putting the interests of one particular tribe of Middle Easterners ahead of American interests for the past 50 years. The members of that particular Middle Eastern tribe don't wear towels on their heads; they wear little, round caps called yarmulkes, and they've done infinitely more damage to our people than the towel-heads ever dreamed of doing. The politicians in Washington serve this tribe because the members of the tribe have gained control of nearly all of the mass media of news and entertainment in America and through this control are able to manipulate the American political process.

This tribe was not satisfied with the wealth and power it acquired in America, however. Always remembering its Middle Eastern roots, it lusted for control of the Middle East too, and with the support of the American government that it had corrupted it began seizing land in the Middle East, killing or pushing aside the indigenous Muslim peoples. Every U.S. President, from Harry Truman through George W. Bush -- even Richard Nixon, whom they forced from office -- served them, helping them brutalize and kill their neighbors and expand their power in the Middle East. And every U.S. Congress during the past half century has taken orders from them as well. And every U.S. President and member of Congress who served them understood that in supporting this tribe -- in supporting Israel -- he was damaging the interests of the American people and generating hatred against America: hatred of which we all saw an expression on September 11.

So let's punish Osama bin Laden for killing all of those innocent Americans, but then let's go after the real criminals -- the traitors in Washington -- who really are the ones responsible for the September 11 attack. And then let's send all of the Middle Easterners, including those now controlling Hollywood and Madison Avenue and our television networks and the rest of our news and entertainment media, back to the Middle East for good.

Why Revolution Is Necessary

One of the most interesting developments that I've seen since September 11 is the public hinting by people in the Federal Bureau of Investigation that it really would be helpful to them if they were permitted to torture suspects or other people from whom they wanted information, like the police in Israel do. These hints haven't been given a big play by the news media, but there is a report on the subject in the October 21 issue of the Washington Post and a column by Jonathan Alter in this week's issue of Newsweek.
These stories seem to be what the media people call "trial balloons": give a new proposal just enough exposure to get a bit of public reaction from the perceptive minority without alarming the lemmings. If the response isn't strongly negative, then push the proposal hard.

I'll read you just a few sentences from the October 21 story in the

to give you the flavor of the proposal:
FBI and Justice Department investigators are increasingly frustrated by the silence of jailed suspected associates of Osama bin Laden's al Quaeda network, and some are beginning to say that traditional civil liberties may have to be cast aside if they are to extract information about the September 11 attacks and terrorist plans.… Said one experienced FBI agent involved in the investigation: "We are known for humanitarian treatment, so basically we are stuck.… Usually there is some incentive, some angle to play, what you can do for them. But it could get to that spot where we could go to pressure.… where we won't have a choice, and we are probably getting there." Among the alternative strategies under discussion are using drugs or pressure tactics, such as those employed occasionally by Israeli interrogators, to extract information

Well, the article goes on to quote other FBI officials who are "frustrated" by their inability to "extract information" from some suspects and who wish that they could use drugs or "pressure tactics" -- that's a euphemism for torture -- like the Israelis do, and more than "occasionally." Actually the story, by Walter Pincus, is pretty low key. It nowhere says that there already is a plan to use torture, just "wouldn't it be nice if we could." And he quotes a former senior FBI official who believes that the American public will go along with such a plan if there is another terror attack on the United States. And, of course, there will be. As I said, the article reads like a "trial balloon."

After the Oklahoma City bombing in 1995, the Jewish media were all over my 1978 novel, The Turner Diaries, claiming that a fictional bombing of the FBI headquarters building in Washington that occurred in the novel was a "blueprint" for the Oklahoma City bombing. They presented this amusing nonsense over and over, nearly every time my name was mentioned anywhere on TV or in print. They really wanted to tie the Oklahoma City bombing to me and to everyone else who had criticized the Jews' monopoly control of the news and entertainment media. I won't be surprised when they discover that the last chapter of The Turner Diaries describes a suicide attack on the Pentagon with a bomb-carrying airplane and then begin claiming that that was a "blueprint" for the September 11 attack on the Pentagon. There's something else in The Turner Diaries, however, that I'm quite certain they won't try to blame on me, and that is my description of the FBI's adoption of torture as an interrogation technique. In the book, published 23 years ago, I described quite vividly the FBI's torture of a terrorism suspect, using the services of an experienced Israeli torturer. The media bosses won't blame the current yearning in the FBI for the authorization to use torture on my book because they themselves also are solidly in favor of the use of torture. It is no mere coincidence that both the Washington Post story and the Newsweek column are written by Jews.

They also are solidly in favor of every other measure to strengthen the hand of the government in dealing with its opponents -- and not just with terrorists. They would like to put an end to all dissent, to all Politically Incorrect speech or writing or expression of opinion: an end to all opposition to them and to the government. And really, the media and the government are far too close to being one and the same these days. That's quite a different situation from the one we had 30 years ago, during the Vietnam War, and the situation is far more dangerous today than it was then. Then, when Jewish and Marxist groups were burning ROTC buildings on our university campuses, setting off bombs in banks and other businesses they claimed were supporting the White government in South Africa, and committing other acts of terrorism on a continuing basis, if the FBI had suggested that perhaps it should use torture in interrogating terrorist suspects, the media would have gone ballistic and screamed for the head of the FBI director.

Well, if the FBI begins using torture now, at least the government can claim that it is just going along with tradition. After all, it wasn't so long ago that witches were tortured to make them confess to having congress with the devil -- and also to reveal the names of other witches or sorcerers. The torture was justified on the grounds that it was essential for the safety and welfare of the public: you can't allow witches and sorcerers to run around putting spells on people; the government needs to find out who they are so that it can get them off the street. Of course, the danger from witches wasn't real, so the government wasn't justified in using torture in the 17th century, but the danger from terrorists today is real, and many people believe that it justifies the use of torture and the curtailment of other civil liberties. And my answer to that is that the danger of terrorism today is real only because the government has made it real through its own policies: policies that it could change at will, eliminating the danger of terrorism without limiting the freedom of Americans.

Unfortunately, however, the government not only refuses to admit that any of its policies are the cause of terrorism against Americans; it is moving with unseemly haste to silence anyone who dares to suggest that is the case. The ghastly new law, the badly misnamed "USA PATRIOT" law signed by George Bush last week, is a giant step in that direction. The "USA PATRIOT" title is a highly contrived acronym standing for "Uniting and Strengthening America by Providing Appropriate Tools Required to Intercept and Obstruct Terrorism." The new law is both un-American and unpatriotic. It is also unconstitutional, although you shouldn't make any wagers that the Supreme Court will overturn it. The law specifically trashes the Fourth Amendment, and it is aimed at intimidating opponents of the government or its policies into silence by threatening to put them into the category of being suspected "supporters of terrorism," whereupon they immediately lose all of their civil liberties and become, in effect, outlaws.

The new law certainly succeeded in intimidating nearly every legislator in the Congress even before George Bush signed it on Friday of last week. The bill's sponsors rammed it through the Congress without any of the customary debate or public hearings or opportunity to modify it. The customary legislative process of "regular order" was completely short-circuited, and terrified Congressman dared not protest or vote against the bill from fear of being denounced as "unpatriotic." Denounced by whom, you ask? By the media, of course, which were solidly behind the new law. It was reminiscent of the witch trials of 400 years ago, when people who knew that the accused was innocent were afraid to speak up lest they too be accused of being in league with the devil.

If you still believe that the people elected by the voters to the U.S. Senate and House of Representatives are America's "leaders" and are looking out for the interests of the public, you should contemplate in detail the course of the "USA PATRIOT" bill through the Congress. Nearly 90 per cent of the members of the Congress, Republicans and Democrats, all of whom took a solemn oath to uphold and defend the Constitution, let themselves be stampeded by fear of media criticism into damaging the Constitution in a grievous way -- perhaps into striking a deathblow against the Constitution -- by voting for this bill. And George Bush was his usual smirking self as he triumphantly signed it into law last Friday.

Now Jewish billionaire Larry Ellison, the principal owner of Oracle, the country's second-largest software company, is trying to persuade the government to require all Americans to carry a national identity card that will allow the FBI to keep track of their movements. Ellison has generously offered to provide the software without charge to the FBI to operate the tracking system. In the government the biggest booster of Ellison's national identity plan is Senator Diane Feinstein, who heads the Senate subcommittee on terrorism.

Clearly, it is not Osama bin Laden who hates America's freedom; rather, it's our government, our media, and people like Larry Ellison and Diane Feinstein.

If you've been listening to many of my broadcasts, you know what I think about democracy and democrats. I think democracy is a lousy political system, and it is inherently crooked. It pretends to put power into the hands of the majority of the people -- which is a stupid idea in itself -- while it actually puts power into the hands of the tiny minority that control the opinions of the majority: namely, the media bosses. And I loathe Democrats: they are demagogues who seek power for themselves by appealing to society's resentful losers and by dispensing bread and circuses paid for by society's more productive elements.

But as much as I hate Democrats, I hate and fear Republicans even more: especially conservative Republicans: for example, Chief Supreme Court Justice William Rehnquist, Attorney General John Ashcroft, Vice President Richard Cheney, and George W. Bush. It is among the conservative politicians and bureaucrats that one finds the greatest mania for regimenting people, for making everyone march in step and sing in tune, for slapping down anyone who gets out of line, for sticking the government's nose into every aspect of people's lives. And I'll guarantee you, the mania these conservative politicians and bureaucrats have for controlling citizens and suppressing dissent is not based on either patriotism or a conviction that it's for our own good. They are crooks and liars, and the only good they're concerned about is their own.

You know, just because I have one view of an issue, and a politician has a different view, doesn't in itself mean that the politician is a crook and a liar. People -- even politicians -- are entitled to have different opinions about things. But when a politician like George Bush announces to the nation in completely unambiguous terms that the September 11 attack was unprovoked and was simply an expression of hatred by fundamentalist Muslims for America's freedom and democracy, it's not a difference of opinion; the man is simply lying. He's lying consciously and deliberately. He's lying to the whole nation on a matter of the utmost importance. This is much, much more reprehensible -- much, much more dangerous for the country -- than Bill Clinton's lies about the sexual services he was receiving in the Oval Office from a Jewish intern.

George Bush has lied us into a war for two very obvious reasons. First, just as the members of the Congress were afraid to question the new anti-terrorism bill from fear of being painted by the media as "unpatriotic," George Bush is afraid to talk about the provocation that caused the September 11 attack -- namely, the U.S. government's support of Israel's aggression against its neighbors -- because he knows that the media would then accuse him of "anti-Semitism."

And second, if he raised the subject of the provocation, he would have to explain why the government pursued such a policy. He would have to talk about the enormous power of organized Jewry over government policy, and again that would cause the controlled media to denounce him as an "anti-Semite." And he also would stand revealed as a man who had consciously followed a policy dictated by organized Jewry while knowing that it was a policy harmful to America. He would stand revealed as a man who was at least partly responsible, along with his predecessors, who knowingly followed the same policy, for the September 11 attack. He would stand revealed as a traitor, who had served a foreign power to the detriment of American security and welfare.

You know, being a traitor is a bit like grabbing a tiger by the tail. Once you embark on that course, you can't go back. It's either hang on or be hanged. So George Bush lies to the whole country about a matter of the utmost importance and continues serving his alien masters. And he smirks about it.

Such a man cannot be trusted. A government headed by such a President cannot be trusted. Any reasonable patriot must fear such a government when it is given the powerful tools for repression that are in the new "USA PATRIOT" law and when its secret police agencies begin suggesting that it would be nice if they were permitted to torture suspects in order to extract information. And such a government especially should be feared when it is in cahoots with the news media. In a free society, one force that keeps the government from getting completely out of control is a free press. Even when the media also are crooked, if they at least are hostile to the government they can keep the government in check. But when crooked media are in cahoots with a crooked government, the country is in real trouble. And that is the situation we're in now.

In America's present situation, terrorism is the least of our problems. Certainly, it is a bad thing when our government's policies have made our country so hated by much of the rest of the world that airliners are hijacked and flown into office buildings, killing thousands of Americans. Certainly, it is a bad thing when anthrax-infected letters are mailed around the country, killing innocent people and causing major disruptions in the postal service. But these things are nothing compared to the loss of our civil liberties. They are nothing compared to the danger of a treasonous, lying government. They are nothing compared to the damage done to our society through the control of the mass media of news and entertainment by an alien minority pursuing its own agenda.

Americans made far greater sacrifices 225 years ago, to secure civil liberties that King George III was denying them, than they made in New York and Washington on September 11. When we are obliged to fight again to restore the civil liberties that are now being given up so lightly by an irresponsible and thoughtless public seeking more security, the loss of lives and property will be far greater than in the World Trade Center attack. When we take the necessary actions to regain control of our mass media and our government, the disruption and the suffering will be incomparably greater than that caused by the current anthrax terrorism.

In other words, even if the terrorism threat to Americans were a thousand times greater than we have experienced so far -- even if terrorism cost us five million lives instead of five thousand -- it would not be as harmful to us and as great a threat to our national survival as a treasonous government and alien-controlled mass media. The public, frightened of terrorism, may be willing to give up its freedom in the hope of gaining more security, but it will end up with neither. Unfortunately, the minority of us who really value our freedom will lose it too.

And you know, none of this is necessary. It is easy for us to eliminate -- or at least greatly to reduce -- the threat of terrorism without giving up any of our civil liberties. Without scrapping the Bill of Rights it is possible for the Sally Soccermoms and the Joe Sixpacks to go back to cruising the malls and watching the ball games without having to worry about being hit by a hijacked airliner or opening an anthrax-infected letter. It is possible for them to have their comfort and security and for us to have our freedom at the same time.

Regimentation is not necessary for security. The authoritarians in our government would like to regiment the people whether there is a threat of terrorism or not, but regimentation isn't necessary. The way to eliminate the threat of terrorism is to eliminate the causes of terrorism. And as far as terrorism from outside the country is concerned, the cause is the U.S. government's blind support of Israeli aggression in the Middle East. Every recent terrorist attack against Americans by foreigners has had this single cause: the 1993 bombing of the World Trade Center, the 1998 bombing of our embassies in Kenya and Tanzania, the 1996 bombing of our servicemen in Saudi Arabia, last year's bombing of the USS Cole, and the September 11 attack on New York and Washington. In fact, we can go back much further, even to the bombing of the Marine barracks in Lebanon in 1983, which killed 241 Americans. None of these attacks would have occurred if the U.S. government had pursued a policy in the Middle East based on American interests, instead of on Jewish interests.

To eliminate or greatly to reduce domestic terrorism, more than a change in U.S. foreign policy is required. Here's an example: the Jewish media now are entertaining the theory that the anthrax letters causing so much anxiety are being mailed by neo-Nazi groups inside the United States. Even though the anthrax letters refer specifically to Israel and close with the words "Allah is great," Jews are speculating that because all of the letters were mailed inside the United States and so many of the targets were media figures -- that is, Jews -- they could have been mailed by domestic anti-Semites rather than by Muslim backers of Osama bin Laden.

Perhaps so, but that still remains to be seen. The relevant fact is that domestic terrorism that would have been inconceivable 50 or 60 years ago is becoming increasingly common. Fifty years ago, no American would have considered launching a campaign of anthrax terrorism in this country. Today, it is at least conceivable. And it's not that the technology is new. Any reasonably resourceful graduate student in microbiology can find anthrax spores or other lethal pathogens in the natural environment, identify them, isolate them, cultivate them in a small laboratory using inexpensive equipment, and grow enough of them to inoculate hundreds of letters. And he could have done the same thing 50 years ago. The spores always have been around, and the techniques are not new. What is new is the motivation.

What is new is the enormously greater corruption and irresponsibility of our government today and the consequent distrust of the government by perceptive citizens. What is new is the enormously greater intrusion of the government into the lives of law-abiding citizens today and the consequent hatred of the government by freedom-loving Americans. What is new is the enormously greater degree of alienation on the part of most Americans -- at least on the part of those Americans who care about more than mall cruising and televised ball games. The principal cause of this alienation is, again, the government, with its destructive immigration policy and its destructive program of forced multiculturalism.

That's easy enough to understand, but to act on our understanding in order to eliminate the cause of either foreign or domestic terrorism will require the replacement not only of the present U.S. government but also of the system on which it is based. Which is to say, until we have a thoroughly cleansing revolution in America, we must endure more and more terrorism and more and more loss of freedom at the same time.

Terrorism and Hate

I love to read my hate mail. The shriller it gets, the better I feel, because shrillness is a sign of fear and lack of confidence on the part of the haters. These days my hate mail is pretty shrill. And that's understandable in view of the events of the past couple of months.

There's a lot of flag-waving and strutting and boasting by the politicians and by the media and by their hangers-on among the general public. I call the latter people "yahoos." A yahoo is a lot like a lemming, but louder and more obnoxious.

"We're really giving those towel-heads in Afghanistan a licking," the yahoos are bragging. "We've blown the bejesus out of them with our cluster bombs and our cruise missiles, and they haven't been able to hit us back with even a single missile or bomb. We've really taught them not to mess with us, because we're the greatest, we're the toughest, and if you even look sideways at us, we'll clean your clock."

That's the public stance of the politicians and the media people and the yahoos and the retired generals and other "experts" hired by the media to provide bellicose statements to keep the yahoos fired up. But behind the confident, swaggering front all is not well. For one thing, the Afghans are proving themselves a bit tougher than the Bush government thought. For five weeks, U.S. forces have carpet-bombed them, reduced a number of their villages to rubble, destroyed their air-defense system, hit every cave in which they think Osama bin Laden may be hiding with bunker-busting bombs, wrecked their power plants, supplied mercenary rebel forces inside Afghanistan with bribes and weapons, and repeatedly predicted the imminent collapse of the Taliban government. And yet the government has not collapsed, and Osama bin Laden continues to issue public statements.

On the public-relations front, the Bush government and the Jews are losing everywhere. The bought politicians in Pakistan and other places may be cheering every time the Americans send their bombers over Afghanistan, but the people in the streets are not. The Jews don't have the total control over the mass media in every country that they have in the United States, Canada, and most of Europe. The people throughout the Middle East and Asia are not happy seeing on their television screens night after night the bodies of Afghan villagers killed by American cruise missiles. They are not happy seeing images of maimed Afghan children who have lost eyes or arms or legs to American cluster bombs.

The Jews and the Bushites can't understand it. The people being killed by the bombing of Afghanistan aren't Jews, and they aren't even Americans. Why should anyone care what happens to them? Besides, the Americans are dropping food packages to make up for the bombing and killing. Doesn't that make everything all right? It is inconceivable to the fat, smug bureaucrats in Washington, who have bought, bribed, corrupted, and bullied their way around the world ever since the Second World War, that there still are people in the world with a sense of pride, people who care about more than money and free food and being comfortable, people who will fight, even against overwhelming odds, to keep their independence and their way of life.

It is interesting to note, by the way, that not all of the people in Afghanistan are black-haired, swarthy, greasy, hook-nosed, Middle Eastern types. Some of the tribes are White, with reddish-brown hair, white skin, and European features. Aryan people conquered and colonized that part of the world 35 centuries ago, and there are pockets of us remaining in some of the mountainous, isolated areas.

Of course, there is no doubt that the United States eventually can whip the Taliban and install a puppet government in Kabul, if the Bush government is willing to drop enough cluster bombs on Afghan villages and fire enough cruise missiles into Afghan cities. The U.S. military machine is vastly more powerful than anything the Afghans have, and Washington has the economic resources to wage a long war of attrition and starve Afghanistan into submission. Perhaps we should remember, however, that the Soviet Union succeeded in setting up a communist puppet government in Kabul, and then, with that puppet government already in place, rocketed and bombed Afghan villages for eight long years and still managed to lose the war -- and 15,000 Soviet soldiers in the process.

On the home front there is more reason for shrillness. The anthrax terror has killed only a handful of people so far, but it has had an enormous psychological impact on the public. Even though the likelihood of being struck by lightning is far greater than the likelihood of receiving an anthrax-infected letter in the mail, many Americans have been spooked. Housewives who never would be deliberate targets of an anthrax attack are worrying seriously about how to sterilize their incoming mail with a steam iron. And certainly every American has been impressed by how much disruption can be caused by a single terrorist.

I am assuming that just one person or a very small group of people has been preparing and mailing all of the anthrax letters, and he not only has spooked the whole country, but he also has done hundreds of millions of dollars worth of damage by causing postal centers, government offices, and business and industrial facilities to be shut down for weeks at a time for decontamination operations. And, despite an enormous effort by the FBI and other secret police agencies, he hasn't been caught. He can do it again whenever he wants. Or if not him, anyone else with a little training in microbiology.

Even though most of the public really hasn't thought carefully about the implications of all this and drawn any clear and concrete conclusions, there is a vague but growing awareness that we all are living in a world that is a bit more dangerous than most people had believed it to be. There is more awareness that the government isn't omnipotent and cannot guarantee everyone's safety or solve all his problems. And this awareness has caused some uneasiness: not a lot for most people, but enough to be perceptible, enough to steal a small amount of peace of mind from the Sally Soccermoms and the Joe Sixpacks, who just want to do their mall shopping and their TV viewing without intrusive worries about what the next unpleasant and dangerous surprise will be.

It's not the Sally Soccermoms and the Joe Sixpacks who're sending me hate mail, though. They don't care much about what happens outside their living rooms and the nearest shopping mall: not enough, anyway, to send me a hate letter. The real haters are those who have an emotional investment in the destructive trends and programs that have been wrecking our society and our civilization during the past half-century. They are the ideological egalitarians and the multiculturalists and the diversity-mongers, who enthusiastically have promoted every sick and perverted policy put forward by the Jewish media. They have been in favor of racial hiring quotas and the lowering of academic standards in order to get more non-Whites into our universities and open borders and interracial sex and gun control and hate-crime laws and speech-crime laws.

And they have been pretty cocky most of the time, because they believed they were on a roll. They had the power of the government and the media behind them, and they didn't see how they could lose. They really believed that they could ram their filthy New World Order down everyone's throat, and we couldn't do anything about it. They believed that they were the inevitable wave of the future, and that nothing could stop the birth of the sick, new world of enforced equality and Big Brotherhood they envisioned.

Well, most of them still believe that, but they've had their cages rattled a bit by the events of the last two months. I doubt that it has occurred to any of them that when their schemes finally come unraveled, and the society they have been poisoning for so many years finally gives up the ghost, and they no longer have a treasonous government to protect them, they will be called to account for their crimes and dealt with appropriately. I doubt that any of them are afraid of that yet. They still believe that they can carry on with impunity -- but there is a glimmer of recognition among them of the fact that there may be unforeseen dangers in what they are doing. There may be obstacles for them to overcome that they hadn't counted on. There are unpredictable forces at work in the world that they don't know how to deal with. And here I am, continuing to nip at their heels and make a nuisance of myself when they have these new problems to worry about. That's what provokes them into sending me hate mail, I believe.

Many of the haters are Christians who believe that they are pleasing Jesus by pulling the White race down to the level of the world's non-Whites: the first shall be last, and the last shall be first; blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth; that sort of thing. You'd be surprised at how many of the hate letters I receive quote verses from the Bible intended to prove to me that all of God's children were created equal, and that God intended for us to mix together, and that Whites, in holding themselves apart and rising above the colored races, have contravened the will of God and deserve to be punished, and that I, in opposing their sacred work of pulling the Whites down to where God intended them to be, am being especially sinful and deserve especially severe punishment.

About as numerous and as hateful as the Bible-thumpers are the oh-so-desperate-to-be-fashionable types, who really hate me for raising issues they prefer not to think about: issues that only can complicate their quest for fashionableness, acceptance, approval, and prosperity in the New World Order of equality and togetherness. Many of these announce how unpleasantly surprised and even disgusted they are that in the 21st century there still are people like me, with such old-fashioned ideas on race and nationalism and the proper roles of the sexes, and with my belief in human inequality and in the need for discipline and order and individual responsibility and for a strong sense of racial identity.

These old-fashioned ideas of mine, of course, are just as valid today as they ever were, but they are in conflict with the trends that these fashionable types feel obliged to follow if they are to keep in step with the media and be popular and prosperous. Now, if they really believed that my old-fashioned ideas were not valid, then they could just laugh at me and ignore me. But they have this dreadful fear, deep down inside themselves, that I am right after all, and that the trends they are following can lead us only to disaster and extinction. They don't want to think about that, and when they were pretty confident in the ability of the government to keep things moving in a Jewish direction and keep people like me from rocking the boat, they didn't have to think about it. But the events of the last two months have shaken their confidence that the government has everything under control, and these awful, old-fashioned ideas of mine are still being rubbed in their faces. They wish that I would shut up.

There's one more thing that has thrown these haters off balance and provoked them into screaming at me, and that is the nagging knowledge that the sudden loss of confidence and security that they are feeling now is not the result of anything that I have said or done, but rather is the consequence of the policies that they have been promoting and against which I have been preaching for years. I certainly have never been pro-Arab or pro-Muslim, but I have said over and over again that we need have no fundamental conflict with Arabs or Muslims, because they are in their part of the world and we are in ours. They have their religion and their way of life, and we have ours. Because we are separate and both of us would like to stay that way, we need have no conflict. They have oil, of course, and we would like to have their oil, but they are only too happy to sell it to us. So really, there is no reason for us to hate each other, as long as we stay out of their affairs and they stay out of ours. Separation and non-interference make good neighbors.

The one thing that has brought about conflict between us is the Jewish lust for power and control in the Arab part of the world and our support of the Jews. The fashionable set understand that as well as I do, but they aren't permitted to talk about it, and they certainly don't like hearing about it from me. They've always supported Jewish aggression in the Middle East, just as they've always supported everything else Jewish. They admire the Jews enormously, because the Jews are so rich and so ruthless and seem to be able to get away with just about every sort of brazen chicanery. Nevertheless, what happened two months ago is a sharp reminder to them that not even those who have scrambled aboard the Jewish bandwagon are guaranteed a smooth ride.

Finally, there is the galling fact that they have pushed for open borders, while I have pushed for the exclusion of all non-Whites from America, and if my policy had prevailed instead of theirs, the attack of September 11 could not have taken place.

Anyway, what it all boils down to is that the people who had thought that America was on the right track in becoming less White and less masculine and less free and more under the thumb of the Jews are a little less confident now and therefore a little more hateful. But they are no less determined. They're not about to change their ways at this stage: it'll take a lot more hijacked airliners, collapsed office buildings, and anthrax mailings to destroy that much of their confidence. And so they have reaffirmed their allegiance to the Jewish program for a totally multiculturalized America, an Affirmative Action America, a mongrelized America, an America that looks like an MTV set.

But still, they are a little less confident than they were, and this loss of confidence -- this nagging fear that maybe their plan to profit from the destruction of their race and of the civilization built by their race may have a hitch in it after all -- this loss of confidence manifests itself not only in a little more overt hatefulness but also in an increased determination to crush all opposition. If those old-fashioned heterosexual White males like me -- and a few old-fashioned heterosexual White females as well -- refuse to go along with their plan, then they'll get the secret police to make us go along. If we insist on being divisive and stirring up opposition to the continued multiculturalization of America, then they'll have their secret police tap our telephones and intercept our mail and secretly search our homes and plant bugs while we're away. They'll classify us as "terrorists" and take away our civil rights.

That's what they think they'll do anyway. That was the real purpose of their so-called "USA PATRIOT" law. They're not really afraid of Arab hijackers. They know that the Arabs aren't capable of derailing their plans for "equalizing" America. The Arabs aren't capable of turning any substantial portion of the American public against them. Middle Eastern terrorists cannot take control of American public opinion away from Hollywood and the other Jewish media.

If they lose their grip on America, it won't be the Taliban hunting them down and stringing them up for their crimes against America and against our people. The scuttling of the Bill of Rights is being done under cover of the need to protect Americans from foreign terrorists, but the real reason is to protect them from the wrath of the still patriotic segment of the American people -- if that patriotic segment can be awakened and informed and organized and inspired to act.

That's our job, and because we're working on that job day and night and are determined to do whatever it takes to get the job done, they hate us. I don't believe that they fear us yet. After all, they have the secret police behind them -- they have all the repressive armed might of the Federal government behind them -- and all we are able to do is talk and spread facts and ideas among our people and try to get our people to think for themselves and to accept their responsibility as Americans, as White men and women. That's enough to make America's internal enemies, whether of the Bible-thumping variety or of the ideologically fashionable variety, hate us, but not enough yet to make them fear us. Nevertheless, they believe it is only prudent to begin curtailing our civil liberties, under the guise of protecting America from the threat of foreign terrorism.

Thinking about all of this, I've tried to decide what the long-term effect of the events of September 11 will be, besides a lot of bombed Afghan villages and dead Afghans. Is it good that the cages of America's internal enemies have been rattled, and their confidence has been shaken a bit, even though they have been put on their guard? Or would it have been better for them to have remained supremely confident that nothing could halt their plan for the multiculturalization of America?

Is it good that they have stepped up their suppression of Americans' civil liberties? Will legislative assaults on the Bill of Rights, such as the USA PATRIOT law, awaken real patriots to the fact that the government in Washington is far more an enemy of America's freedom than Osama bin Laden is? Or will such laws intimidate wavering patriots into silence and inaction?

I believe that it's too soon for me to be able to answer these questions with any degree of certainty. At this point I can't even say whether terrorism is helpful or harmful or doesn't make much difference. Does it hurt America in the long run by solidifying the support of the Sally Soccermoms and Joe Sixpacks behind the Federal government and America's other internal enemies? Or does it help America by eroding the faith of the public in the ability of the government to protect them?

We'll have a better understanding of such questions later, because we certainly will be gaining much more experience with both terrorism and governmental suppression of civil liberties. America is in a downward spiral now, and when we will break out of it and what roles terrorism and repression will play in breaking out of it remain to be seen.

The Value of Truth and Righteousness

Last Saturday George Bush addressed the United Nations General Assembly, urging all of the member nations to join the United States in bringing pressure to bear against countries that sponsor terrorism or harbor terrorists. He did it in his standard mock-serious way, barely suppressing a smirk. Everyone applauded, including the representative of a country that from its founding until the present day has sponsored terrorism. That country, of course, is Israel.

The prime minister of Israel, Ariel Sharon, is a war criminal, a mass murderer, with the blood of thousands of women and children on his hands. He is being sought now for trial by the same Hague Tribunal that succeeded in extraditing former Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic for trial on charges of crimes against humanity in Kosovo, the same Hague Tribunal that already has tried and sentenced soldiers who raped and murdered in Bosnia and in Rwanda.

In 1982, during Israel's invasion of Lebanon, Ariel Sharon was Israel's defense minister. After the bloody terror-bombing of civilian neighborhoods in Beirut that killed thousands of Lebanese and Palestinian civilians -- terror bombing carried out by Jews flying military aircraft supplied to Israel by the United States -- Sharon arranged for the evacuation of Palestinian fighters from Lebanon. Palestinian women, children, and old people were left behind in refugee camps, with their safety guaranteed by the United States. On the night of September 16, 1982, Sharon sent murder squads into two Palestinian refugee camps, Sabra and Chatila, in West Beirut to kill the unarmed Palestinian civilians there. With Israeli tanks and troops surrounding the camps to prevent any of the Palestinians from escaping, Sharon's murder squads shot, knifed, and bludgeoned Palestinian civilians all that night and the next day and the following night, while the Israelis around the camps listened gleefully to the shots and screams coming from inside. Then Sharon sent in bulldozers to scoop out mass burial pits and cover up the corpses of more than 2,000 Palestinian women and children.

Many Palestinians remained unburied, however, and Red Cross workers found whole families in their homes with their throats cut and other families who had been lined up and machine-gunned, from small children to elderly grandparents. One infant had been stomped to death by a man wearing spiked boots.

This was Ariel Sharon's work, but only a part of his work. He is a man who believes the teaching of the Talmud that only Jews are human beings, and that all who are not Jews were put on this earth only to serve the Jews, and that anyone who opposes the Jews deserves to be killed, and he has acted in accord with this belief all his life. There are a dozen major atrocities for which he could be tried by the Hague Tribunal, but the one with which he is charged now is the mass murder he implemented, as Israel's defense minister, in West Beirut in September 1982. And the U.S. government, which clamored for Slobodan Milosevic to be turned over to the Hague Tribunal for trial, pretends that it knows nothing about Sharon's genocidal crimes against humanity.

In the 1950s Israel's Mossad, the equivalent of the CIA in the United States, sent hundreds of letter bombs to German scientists working in Egypt and Syria, killing a number of them.

In 1967, during Israel's war against Egypt, the Israeli army carried out a number of mass executions of Egyptian prisoners of war in the Sinai, forcing them to dig ditches, then lining them up and shooting them. Dozens of eyewitnesses to these mass executions have reported what they saw, but the world's politicians and media bosses pretend not to know. Also in 1967 Israel attacked the U.S. Navy ship, the U.S.S. Liberty, attempting to sink it and kill its crew and then blame the sinking on the Egyptians.

Israeli agents have carried out assassinations and other terrorist operations around the world. One of the most colorful of these operations -- and one of the few that received major media coverage -- was the attempt to murder a prominent Muslim cleric in Jordan in 1997. Two Israeli agents sprayed poison in the ear of Khaled Meshal as they walked past him on a sidewalk in Amman. Fortunately, Meshal's bodyguards were able to catch the two Jews as they ran away, and so the assassination attempt was publicized.

Israel has stolen nuclear materials and nuclear weapons technology from the United States to build an illegal nuclear arsenal. Israel also is known to have developed an arsenal of biological and chemical weapons of mass destruction.

None of these Israeli activities is secret. Those I've mentioned are just a few of the ones that were found out and publicized. Not publicized very much, of course. In fact, they all were dropped from the news pretty quickly. Still, everyone attending Mr. Bush's speech at the United Nations last Saturday knew about them. And yet, no one stood up and booed. No one walked out in protest. Bush's speech was covered by all of the major newspapers and television networks in the world, but no reporter for any news medium operating in the West commented on his hypocrisy. No one mentioned Israel's terrorism. Everyone knew, but everyone played along.

These people weren't lemmings. Lemmings really don't know any better. Lemmings are essentially moral creatures; in fact they are compulsively moral. To lemmings it is essential to feel and to think and to act in the way they believe they are expected to feel and think and act. That's morality. Most groups of lemmings believe that it is bad to lie, to deceive, to be hypocritical. If during George Bush's speech at the United Nations a substantial part of the audience had walked out in disgust, and at the end the remaining delegates had stood up and booed him loudly, and if the media commentators then had remarked with scorn to their television audiences that Bush is a hypocrite who talks about stopping state-sponsored terrorism while continuing to finance Israeli terrorism, then the lemmings would have booed him too.

But Bush's lies and hypocrisy were ignored by the media and by the other delegates. Instead of booing, they applauded him. And so the lemmings applauded him too. It was all an act for the benefit of the lemmings. Nearly all politics these days, nearly every speech or public appearance by a politician or a government official, is an act of showmanship. What is said has relatively little relationship to what the politician actually is thinking.

Certainly, last Saturday George Bush wasn't really thinking about waging war on countries that sponsor terrorism or harbor terrorists. He was thinking first and foremost about the importance of pleasing the Jewish media with his speech. He may have been keeping his fingers crossed and hoping that no Arab delegate would jump up during his speech and shout at him, "What about Israel? You say that we should wage war on states that sponsor terrorism. Israel engages in state-sponsored terrorism more than Afghanistan and all the other countries in the Middle East combined. When will you send your B-52s to carpet-bomb Tel Aviv and Jerusalem?" And at the end he must have marveled to himself how smoothly the act went and how easy it is to deceive the public.

Crookedness of this sort has been going on for a long time. There are only two things that make this latest crookedness noteworthy. First, it is being used to justify yet another war that is not in the interests of the American people. It is being used to justify dropping cluster bombs on villagers whom we have no good reason to kill. And second, it is a lot more obviously crooked than usual. Osama bin Laden caught the Bush government and the media by surprise, and they didn't have time to refine and polish their lies. All they could do was pretend that they had no idea why he would attack the United States and then claim that it must be because he hates our freedom. They didn't have time to put up their usual smokescreen of obfuscation. They simply launched their denunciations of terrorism and of terrorists and of governments that tolerate terrorism and hoped that no one would say anything about Israel or Ariel Sharon or Israel's policies of assassination and torture.

Because the crookedness is more obvious now than usual, more perceptive people than usual are noticing it and saying something about it, and that's good. But these perceptive few who are unhappy enough about the crookedness to speak out have little or no voice in the mass media, and so the lemmings remain oblivious to the realities of the situation. That's the wonderful thing about democracy: you don't have to try to fool all of the people; all you have to do is fool most of the people all of the time, and that's pretty easy to do when you control the mass media. You can just ignore the few who refuse to go along with the act, and the great majority of the voters will never notice.

So why do I care that the system is crooked? Why should you care? Why not just pretend not to notice the crookedness and go along with it, like everyone else? Pretend to be a lemming, but stay alert to possibilities for profiting from the fact that, unlike the lemmings, you really are secretly aware of who's who and what's what. That's what the big shots do. That's what the people do who care only about themselves and don't give a damn what happens to their country or their race or the civilization built by their race, as long as they personally are able to turn a profit from events. That's what George Bush does. He pretends to care about all sorts of things. He pretends to be outraged by terrorism, but he shakes Ariel Sharon's hand and gives him a big hug whenever Sharon shows up in Washington. He pretends not to be aware of Sharon's record as a mass murderer, as a war criminal, as a terrorist, as a man who sends out teams of assassins and who orders the Israeli police to torture prisoners.

A lot of people think and behave as George Bush does. A lot of people believe that's the only smart way to be. We're living in a society in which a great many people are completely alienated, completely disconnected from any sense of responsibility to race or to nation or to anyone but themselves: amoral people, people willing to do anything that they believe is personally advantageous, people for whom every public expression is simply an act. And because there are so many people like that, including virtually everyone in the government and in the media, America is very, very sick.

I'll go further: individuals who think and behave that way are sick. George Bush is a very sick man. Anyone who consciously and deliberately betrays his own race or his own nation, anyone who commits treason, is a defective person, a sick person. And George Bush, by consciously following a policy he knows is not in the interests of America but only serves Israel's interests, a policy he knows is responsible for the September 11 attack against America, a policy he continues to follow despite that knowledge, is a traitor. That's George Bush I'm talking about, the President of the United States. He may look stupid, but he knows what he's doing. George Bush believes he's a smart guy, a guy who knows which side his bread is buttered on, a guy who can get away with anything as long as the Jewish media will back him up. And so far he has been getting away with it. In a democracy, hypocrisy works; lying works. As long as you have the mass media on your side you can get away with anything, because the majority of the voters never will figure it out.

What has been happening in Mazar-i-Sharif and in Kabul and in other northern cities in Afghanistan this week is a good example. The big act put on by George Bush and his British counterpart Tony Blair and all of their media supporters since the campaign to destabilize Afghanistan began last month -- the big act was that the Taliban is a bunch of tyrannical fanatics who brutalize women, sponsor terrorism, and do lots of other bad things, and the Northern Alliance, which was supplied with weapons and money by the U.S. government while we bombed the Taliban to smithereens, is a bunch of Sunday school teachers and Boy Scouts. The United States will deliver Afghanistan into the hands of the Northern Alliance, and then everything will be rosy and peaceful and democratic. The people who had been tyrannized by the Taliban will be free and happy under the Northern Alliance. The Americans will be the good guys, who have made this wonderful improvement possible.

Well, of course, it hasn't worked out that way. As soon as the Northern Alliance took over each city it began rounding up people it didn't like, people who belonged to the wrong tribe, for example, and raping and killing them. There have been dozens of mass executions and mass rapes by the Northern Alliance troops this week. There are a lot of people they don't like. And the ones who just get raped or shot are the lucky ones. Eyes are being gouged out, breasts are being cut off, prisoners are being castrated and impaled and skinned alive or burned to death. That's the way things are done in the Middle East. When the British tried to pacify the country in the 19th century, the rule was never to let yourself be taken alive. If you were wounded and left behind, you always saved your last cartridge for yourself. Rudyard Kipling wrote about that:

When you're wounded and left on Afghanistan's plains,
And the women come out to cut up what remains,
Jest roll to your rifle and blow out your brains
An' go to your Gawd like a soldier.

The Russians learned the same lesson, to their sorrow, just a little over a decade ago. And the military people around George Bush certainly were aware of the experiences of the British and the Russians. The Taliban indeed may be a rough and brutal bunch, but no more rough and brutal than the people paid and armed by the U.S. government. When the Taliban was in charge at least there was peace and stability. There were no massacres or gang rapes. The U.S. government, with its bombing campaign and its mercenary troops in the Northern Alliance, has succeeded in destabilizing large portions of Afghanistan, and the rapes and mutilations and mass executions have started.

But the lemmings won't hear enough about that for it to sink in. George Bush will continue lying and smirking and pretending that the Northern Alliance are the good guys, and America is bringing freedom and democracy and happiness to Afghanistan. What the United States actually is trying to do is set up a government a little more corrupt than that of the Taliban: a government that we can control with bribes and threats and that will not be a danger to Israel. That's the whole purpose of our war against Afghanistan.

It's the same sort of crookedness that we saw in connection with the Second World War. The pretext that the British government used for declaring war against Germany in 1939 was the safeguarding of Poland's freedom. When the Roosevelt government in the United States finally was able to use the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor as an excuse for jumping into the war against Germany, the act by the media and the politicians here was that Americans were being the good guys and would bomb the Germans to smithereens in order to protect American freedom and the freedom of Europe. And the people to whom we shipped military supplies so they could help us were the Soviets under good old Uncle Joe Stalin, that kind and fatherly fellow who also was being threatened by the wicked Germans.

Of course, what we did, after carpet-bombing German cities and killing enough Germans to make them surrender, was turn Poland and the Baltic states and half the rest of Europe over to communist rule for half a century. It had never been the intention of either the British government or the U.S. government to free anybody. We knew what sort of people the communists were. We knew that they had butchered the cream of the Polish nation in the Katyn forest and elsewhere -- 25,000 Polish military officers and professors and physicians and engineers and writers -- but our government and media people pretended that it was the Germans who had done it and that we were "liberating" Europe from the Germans and protecting American freedom, which never was threatened by the Germans.

It was all an act. The aim was not to safeguard anybody's freedom; it was to destroy Germany because the Germans had gotten the Jews off their backs and out of their country. We made war against Germany in order to make Europe safe for the Jews and for no other reason. We are making war against Afghanistan now in order to make the Middle East safe for the Jews, and for no other reason. Everything else is an act to keep the public fooled. And the public will be fooled: just as they never figured out what World War Two was all about, they won't figure out what the war against Afghanistan is all about. They may hear rumors about the massacres being carried out now by the Northern Alliance, but the television people won't spell it out for them, won't show them gory pictures of the piles of corpses, and so the public won't get it.

So again, why should you care? Why not just go along with the act, the way the big shots do?

That's a hard question to answer, in this sense: If you're like George Bush or any of the other big shots who think they're being smart by going along with the act and collaborating with the Jews against their own people -- if you think that's the smart way to behave -- then you won't understand my answer, no matter how carefully I explain it. If you're a person who already is totally alienated -- if you're an amoral person who already is completely disconnected from your race and its traditions and values and if you think of yourself solely as an individual scrambling to get an advantage over other individuals by any means that will work -- then you won't understand my answer.

But if you still have some sense of being a part of something larger and more permanent than yourself -- if you still have a sense of racial identity, a sense of kinship with a larger family of fellow Europeans, of fellow White men and women with whom you share traditions and values and a way of looking at the world -- if you value the civilization that your ancestors built over the last 5,000 years, if you think of it as your civilization -- then my answer is superfluous. You already know the answer. You already understand why you must not collaborate with creatures who secretly sneer at your values, who are contemptuous of the traditions and history of your people, who have been working for thousands of years to corrupt your civilization, and who are determined to annihilate your race. You already understand why men who do collaborate with these creatures must not be permitted to make laws and set policies governing your people. You understand that instead of being applauded and looked at with respect, they should be hanged as traitors and as a warning to others who might be tempted also to betray our people. You already understand that truthfulness and righteousness are their own reward.

Destroying Order

George Bush had his wife on television last Saturday drumming up public support for his war. The basic theme of her message was that the Taliban -- and fundamentalist Muslims generally -- don't treat their women the way Politically Correct Americans believe they should be treated. The Muslims make them wear head-to-toe covering in public, won't let them drive cars or hang out in shopping malls, and there's hell to pay if one of them is caught flirting with a man who isn't her husband. Worst of all, from Laura Bush's point of view, the women under Taliban control aren't permitted to work in factories or offices but instead must stay home and take care of the kids. The message was that it's our duty to make the folks in Afghanistan treat their women the way Mrs. Bush thinks that they should be treated. If they won't do things her way voluntarily, then it's our duty to use cruise missiles and B-52s to force them to do it her way.

Another theme of Mrs. Bush's message was that the aim of terrorists is to oppress women. Osama bin Laden's September 11 attack didn't have anything to do with Israel or with the U.S. government's long-term support of Israel's aggression against its Muslim neighbors; his aim was to oppress women. He hates us because American women are permitted to wear shorts and to hang around shopping malls instead of staying home with the kids. He wants to use terrorism to force us to make American women behave like Afghan women. The nutcase feminists over here may have believed that, but it sounded just as silly to me as Mr. Bush's claim that the September 11 attack was unprovoked: that we were attacked just because the fundamentalist Muslims hate our freedom and democracy.

Well, I am sure that fundamentalist Muslims do look on American behavior with disgust. I am sure that they are shocked by the way many of our women dress in public, that they are shocked by the effeminate behavior of many of our men, that they are shocked by the morally and socially destructive propaganda we permit Hollywood and New York to pour into our homes through television. But I am equally sure that their disapproval of our behavior here in America was not the reason for the September 11 attack. And I am sure that they have no intention of trying to oppress American women or to make Americans change their behavior over here. Their concern is only with what we do in their part of the world.

One other thing I'm quite sure about is that George Bush didn't put his wife on the air last Saturday to talk about the oppression of women in Afghanistan because he really cares about that or because he really believes that Osama bin Laden wants to force American women to wear burqas. His aim was strictly to drum up support for his ongoing war against Israel's enemies in the Middle East. Actually, the Jewish brainwashing machine in Hollywood was churning out hate propaganda against Afghanistan even before the Taliban government refused the Bush government's demand that it turn over Osama bin Laden. There was a special program about Afghanistan on CNN instead of the standard news programming; it was clearly aimed at persuading American liberals and feminists that Muslim fundamentalists -- especially those in Afghanistan -- are a bad bunch. When I saw the program, I said to myself, somebody is getting ready to wage war against Afghanistan whether the Taliban government turns over Osama bin Laden or not, and this program is designed to build up war sentiment among Americans.

I've been seeing a lot of news reports about events in Afghanistan that most Americans don't have a chance to see. For example, I have a very disturbing set of photographs from Ananova, a news agency in the United Kingdom. The photos were taken last week, just after George Bush's buddies in the Northern Alliance moved into Kabul. A Taliban soldier who had stayed behind tried to surrender. The Northern Alliance soldiers beat him up, and then they pulled down his pants and castrated him, and while he was writhing in agony on the ground they began using him for target practice. I never will forget the look of wide-eyed terror on the man's face just before he was castrated. The last photograph in the series shows two Northern Alliance soldiers with big grins on their faces pumping bullets from their AK-47s into the poor bastard while other Northern Alliance people, also grinning, stand around watching the spectacle.

I was surprised to see a few photographs of the same incident in this week's issue of Time magazine: surprised because Time magazine and its boss Gerald Levin are solidly on George Bush's team, and they want us to think well of Mr. Bush's Northern Alliance buddies. Of course, Time did sanitize its account of this Taliban soldier's fate by neglecting to mention the castration -- although elsewhere in this week's issue a reporter describes how he was invited to watch while a prisoner's eyes were gouged out with a knife. These people doing the castrating and eye-gouging are the nice folks Mr. Bush has been paying with our tax dollars to fight the Taliban. These are the people Laura Bush would have us believe will end the oppression of women in Afghanistan.

I doubt it. In fact, Mr. Bush's Northern Alliance buddies would about as soon gang rape women in Taliban territory and then hack off their breasts as they would castrate and murder Taliban POWs. They get a big kick out of that sort of thing, and that's what they used to do pretty regularly before the Taliban took over and forced them into their enclave in northern Afghanistan a few years ago.

I'm not saying that the Taliban's supporters are nice people, but they certainly are no worse than George Bush's buddies, and they did impose law and order on their country: law and order that no longer exist, thanks entirely to George Bush. The Taliban had forced a certain code of behavior on Afghan women -- and on Afghan men too, I should add -- out of religious conviction. The Northern Alliance people don't care as much about religion. They don't care whether women wear burqas or not; they just like to gang rape and mutilate them. And they've done a lot of raping and castrating in the past few days, courtesy of the U.S. government. In addition to raping and castrating and gouging out eyes, they like to impale prisoners on sharpened stakes and watch them wriggle.

Most Americans don't get to see any of this because the small portion of it reported by the media here is sanitized and minimized in order to keep the people who are doing the dirty work for the New World Order gang in Afghanistan from looking too bad. The consequence of this one-sided news coverage is that a substantial fraction of Americans believe Mrs. Bush when she announces that we are turning Afghanistan over to the Northern Alliance in order to end the oppression of women there, and they believe Mr. Bush when he assures them that we are helping the good guys in Afghanistan beat the bad guys in order to end terrorism.

As I said last week, what Mr. Bush really is trying to do is replace the Taliban with a more corrupt government that can be bribed and threatened more easily than the Taliban could. He wants a puppet government that will not be a threat to Israel.

George Bush knows how to end terrorism against America from that part of the world. He doesn't have to start a war or bomb anyone or overthrow anyone else's government. All he has to do is quit letting Israel use America, to quit helping the Israelis kill Palestinian women and children with weapons and money supplied by the United States. He knows that as well as I do, but he pretends that he doesn't, and that's one of the reasons that I know he is a crook.

And his wife is a crook too. If she were really concerned about the plight of women in that part of the world, she would speak out about what the Jews in Israel are doing to Palestinian women and children. She would protest the White slave trade that is flourishing in Israel, with tens of thousands of White women lured or kidnapped to Israel from eastern Europe and forced to work as sex slaves there in appalling conditions. She would not stand beside her husband and give a big smile and a hug to Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon, the Butcher of Beirut, the Jewish leader who engineered the murder of thousands of Palestinian women and children in Lebanon in 1982, whenever he comes to Washington.

The Bush family is a family of liars and traitors: corrupt people flourishing in an increasingly corrupt period for America. It is too bad that they cannot be made now to experience the things that they force men and women in Afghanistan and Palestine to experience. Perhaps the time for that will come later. Meanwhile they are riding high on the hog and are convinced that they're pretty smart for selling out our people and doing the will of the Jews, in return for Jewish political support. They believe that they can bring the whole world under Jewish rule and benefit themselves at the expense of all the rest of us. They believe that they can bring about the New World Order, as George Bush's father used to brag when he was President, by waging war after war against countries that refuse to knuckle under -- Iraq, Serbia, Afghanistan -- using our unlimited supply of cluster bombs and cruise missiles to terrify dissident countries into submission and to topple stubborn governments so that they can be replaced with compliant ones.

George Bush and his colleagues are willing to risk more foreign terrorist attacks along the way to their New World Order; in fact, in some ways foreign terrorist attacks are useful to them. They are much more concerned about domestic resistance to their New World Order scheme than they are about foreign terrorism. And when I say "domestic resistance," I'm not thinking primarily about domestic terrorism. The government-and-media crowd is not terribly concerned about domestic terrorism unless it is waged on a scale much larger than it has been in the past and is sustained long enough to have a destabilizing effect. In fact, occasional acts of domestic terrorism are useful to them, just as acts of foreign terrorism are, but in a different way.

Foreign terrorist attacks are useful in that they provide a pretext for wars needed to force unwilling countries into submission to the New World Order, as in the case of the current war against Afghanistan and the planned war against Iraq. Of course, when there is no threat of terrorism, the New World Order planners generally can use some other pretext. That was the case with the Clinton government's war against Serbia, for example. The excuse there was that the Serbs were mistreating the Albanian minority in Serbia's Kosovo province, and so we had to bomb Belgrade in order to force the Serbs to see the error of their ways, but an excuse that flimsy often won't hold up under stress. If the Serbs had had any kind of decent air defense system and had taken out a dozen or so U.S. bombers over Belgrade, or if they had been able to sink one of our ships in the Adriatic which was firing cruise missiles into Serbia, the American public would have lost its stomach for the war in a hurry. Much better for sustaining a war of that sort is a foreign terrorist attack, so that the war can be portrayed as necessary for America's security or as retaliation for an attack against Americans.

Foreign terrorist attacks also provide a pretext for suppressing domestic resistance, which as I said is a matter of greater concern to the government anyway. A foreign attack gives the media an opportunity to whip the lemmings into a flag-waving, we-all-must-support-our-President mood, in which there is no tolerance for dissent, and it gives the government an opportunity to enact repressive legislation that can be used to stifle domestic resistance to a certain degree. We are seeing both these consequences of the September 11 attack now. The downside of the September 11 attack for the government and the media is the rise in anti-foreigner and anti-immigration sentiment among the public. It's a downside for the government and the media because keeping America's borders open is an important element of the New World Order scheme.

I also suspect that the government would prefer that the next foreign terrorist attack against the United States not be quite as damaging to the U.S. economy as the September 11 attack. A few more like that could destabilize the economy and generate a lot of public unrest.

Except when they really need a good excuse to start another war, the government and media schemers can make much better use of domestic terrorism, especially if it can be blamed on anyone who seriously opposes their schemes. The media bosses and other Jewish leaders really were reaching after the Oklahoma City bombing in an effort to blame that on me, just because I wrote a novel 25 years ago in which there is a truck-bomb attack on a U.S. government building. They're really hoping now that it will turn out that the anthrax letters are being mailed by a heterosexual White male who doesn't like Jews and is connected to an organization of similar heterosexual White males, so that the government will have an excuse for shutting down the organization and enacting even more restrictive legislation.

I'll guarantee you this: if it is a White American who eventually is charged with the anthrax letters, you'll hear a lot more about it from the media than you will if it turns out to be some Muslim immigrant from the Middle East. And of course, if it turns out to be a Jew just trying to stir up anti-Muslim sentiment by signing the letters "Allah is great," you won't hear about it at all, unless you're a news junkie like me.

People like George Bush, John Ashcroft, and all the other politicians who are committed to the Jewish New World Order really are determined to abolish our Bill of Rights. They want to bring U.S. law into line with that in Canada, the United Kingdom, France, Germany, and most of the rest of Europe, where anyone who speaks out against Jewish control or Jewish influence can be imprisoned by the government. And I must tell you, this government and media program of curtailing our civil liberties worries me much more than the prospect of more hijacked airliners or truck bombs.

At the moment the program the government and media people are pushing is military court-martials and summary executions for suspected terrorists: secret evidence, no right to confront one's accuser, no jury; just a military officer who decides whether or not to have you shot as a suspect. But don't worry, they tell us, this is only for suspected terrorists who aren't U.S. citizens. If you're a citizen, the new rule doesn't apply to you.

Well, let me tell you, I worry anyway. I worry when the media Jews and the FBI both begin talking about how convenient it would be if they could torture suspects to extract information and Attorney General John Ashcroft praises a new law which provides for summary executions for suspected terrorists who aren't citizens. I worry because I know that one thing leads to another. I know these bastards who run our government and own our mass media. I know that they regard each new encroachment on our freedom as just another step toward their ultimate goal, which is no freedom at all for us. Today a law giving them a license to shoot suspected terrorists who aren't citizens; tomorrow a law extending the shooting license to include citizens. George Bush and John Ashcroft and all the rest of the New World Order enthusiasts around them are evil men.

They are evil men, and they also are dangerous men because they have the support of the mass media. And because they have the support of the mass media, they also have the support of the great mass of Americans who don't have a thought in their heads that didn't come from their television screens. The yahoos with the little flags tied to their car antennas believe that being patriotic means not criticizing the government. It means doing what the government tells you to do. It means believing what the government tells you to believe. If the government tells you that a law permitting the shooting of suspected terrorists will make us all safer, then the flag-wavers are all for it. If another law permits the secret police to break into your house while you are away and search through your personal belongings and private papers to find evidence against you without telling you about it, then that must be a good thing too, otherwise the government wouldn't do it, right?

Laws are essential for order, and a government also is essential to administer and enforce the laws. The type of government and the system of laws suitable for one people might not be suitable at all for another people, another nation. I certainly would not want to live in a society ruled by the Taliban. But the Taliban at least gave the Afghans law and order, and my belief is that it is not a good thing for us to tell other nations how they should conduct their internal affairs or what sort of laws they should have. It is not our business to decide whether or not Afghan women should be required to wear burqas.

I wonder if the flag-waving Americans who are cheering what George Bush has done to Afghanistan by destroying law and order there have any idea what life would be like in America without law and order.

I often encounter really foolish people who believe that if we're tolerant and respect other people's rights, they'll respect ours; that if we share what we have with others, so that no one is really deprived of what he needs, then we can all live together in our wonderfully diverse, multicultural society even without a government and laws. These people don't understand that without fear of the police to keep our multicultural elements in line, America quickly would devolve into savagery. Without order, the flower-child types who preach tolerance would be hunted down for meat and eaten alive on our city streets.

Even if we had an all-White society, we would need laws respected by our people. Without laws there is no order, and without order there is only savagery. Every gang boss, every religious nut with a few followers, every cult leader would be fighting with others for turf, for followers, for resources, for power. For most people life would be hell. Our people spent a long time -- thousands of years -- developing a system of laws and government to provide order for our societies so that we could live useful and productive lives. George Bush and the media bosses who are so eager now to abolish the hard-won laws that provide for our rights, our liberties, and to make new laws giving more and more control of our lives to the government undermine respect for the laws and for the government. They may retain the support of the yahoos, but it wasn't yahoos who established our rights and built our system of laws in the first place. The yahoos always just went along for the ride. The government, by becoming more repressive and more intrusive, delegitimizes itself and provides a prerequisite for its overthrow.

When that happens we'll all be in peril until something new and healthier is formed from the chaos. But I cannot help but wish that George Bush is still around during the chaos, so that he can experience some of the things the Taliban prisoners in Afghanistan are experiencing now at the hands of his Northern Alliance pals.

An Awakening

First, I want to correct a misstatement that I made two weeks ago, in my broadcast of November 17. In that broadcast I said that the prime minister of Israel, Ariel Sharon, who instigated the murder of thousands of Palestinian women and children in Lebanon in 1982, is being sought for trial by the International Court of Justice in the Hague, the same international court that succeeded in extraditing former Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic for trial on charges of crimes against humanity in Kosovo. Actually, the charges against Sharon haven't made it to the Hague yet. Charges have been brought against him in Brussels by survivors of the 1982 massacre, however, and the public prosecutor in Brussels made a decision earlier this year that the evidence against Sharon is sufficient to begin court proceedings. A few days ago, a summons was issued by a Belgian court for Sharon to appear at a hearing on genocide charges. Both the Bush government in Washington and Sharon's own government are applying enormous pressure to the Belgian government to stifle the proceedings against Sharon, but to date the legal process against him is proceeding. That in itself is remarkable in an era when Jewish influence reaches nearly everywhere in the White world.

Now today's topic: For 35 years, I have devoted nearly all my waking hours to an effort to inform and inspire White Americans and other Europeans around the world. I began in 1966 by publishing and distributing leaflets and pamphlets and tabloid newspapers in Washington. My basic message then was the same as it is now. One part of that message is that the Jews are our misfortune. We made the terrible mistake of letting them infiltrate our society, in America and in Europe. They began taking over our mass media of news and entertainment as soon as they stepped off the boat. In the early years of the last century, they headed straight for Hollywood and, working together, elbowed nearly all of their non-Jewish competitors out of the movie business. In New York and Washington, they seized control of the nation's most influential newspapers and magazines.

In every country in Europe, they organized communist parties based on the political theories of their fellow Jew Marx, and they fomented wars and revolutions aimed at destabilizing Gentile societies so that they could gain more power, more control. In Russia in 1917, they finally succeeded in toppling a Gentile government and imposing their will on an entire Gentile nation. And then they selectively murdered tens of millions of Russians and Ukrainians. After the start of the Second World War, they carried their murder campaign to the Baltic states and to Poland, selectively rounding up and killing the best people, the most successful people, the most intelligent and creative and active people. They attempted to decapitate every Gentile nation that they could, to eliminate opposition to their rule.

In 1966, I began publishing information about the Jewish role in communism and about the terrible crimes they committed against our people in Europe. In 1968, I published the first edition of my documentary article on the Jewish control of the news and entertainment media in America, naming the key Jews and explaining how they use their media control. It's called "Who Rules America?" and I've updated it and republished it nearly every year since then.

I've explained over and over and over again, for more than 30 years, how Jewish media control has led to the total corruption of our political process and our government. The politician who gets the most votes wins a position at the public trough. The opinions of the majority of the voters -- and their attitudes toward political candidates -- are manipulated by the mass media. And the Jews control the mass media. I've pointed out the Jewish role in dozens of destructive governmental policies in the United States: immigration policy, for example. In the 1950s and 1960s the Jews pushed for switching the flow of immigrants into the United States from Europe to the Third World. They pushed for fewer White immigrants and more Brown and Black and Yellow immigrants. And after they succeeded in that, they pushed for keeping our borders open to the Third World, resulting in the continued racial darkening of America. And among themselves they talked about why this was important to them. They talked about the need to dilute the European majority in America in order to make America easier to control. They used their old tactic of divide and rule.

And I've talked about the Jewish role in changing the standards in American education, about the Jewish role in pushing for racial mixing in our society and for more miscegenation between Whites and non-Whites. I've talked about the Jewish role in "hate crime" and "speech crime" legislation and about the Jewish role in attempting to abolish the Second Amendment.

But Jewish media control and Jewish communism and the Jewish role in the destructive governmental policies that have afflicted America are not my whole message; they are just a part of it. I also have been talking and writing for decades about our own people's non-resistance to the Jewish evil inflicted on them. I have talked about traitors among our people who collaborated in the Jews' destruction of America and our people.

It wasn't long after I'd started writing and preaching to the public that I began to understand that most of the public is completely impervious to any message that doesn't come to them through TV. The only thoughts they permit into their heads are thoughts that they believe are in the heads of their peers. These are the lemmings, and it simply isn't worth while trying to talk to them until one can do it through a medium comparable in power to the media in the hands of the Jews.

After I realized that, I addressed my message only to that portion of our people able to think independently of the masses. And even here I was disappointed. I wrote and spoke about things of fundamental importance for the survival of our race and our civilization, and the response was minimal. That is, although many people agreed with me theoretically, very few were willing to do anything. In some cases it was fear: they were afraid of the government, even though the government was much less fearsome in those days than it is now. More often, however, it was simply a lack of interest. People understood what I was saying, more or less, but their response was, "So, what?"

They were relatively comfortable and secure, and the things that I was talking about seemed too impersonal, too remote. They didn't believe that these things would impact their personal lives severely enough to warrant their taking action along the lines that I suggested. I told them about the Jewish control of the mass media, and most of them believed me, because I gave them names and other specifics they could check for themselves. I told them that allowing the Jews to exercise such power over our people would lead to our destruction. They shrugged and figured that I was exaggerating. They thought that they would control what their own kids watched on TV, and that would take care of the problem. No need to do anything drastic.

Well, I kept preaching, and I continued to develop new media for my message: radio, the Internet, music, video. The response to my message grew, but very slowly. I tried every way that I could to stress the importance of what I was saying. I used very emphatic language, sometimes shocking language. I didn't want to risk losing credibility by exaggerating, but I did try hard to catch people's attention and make them think about what I was saying.

And I did more than just talk and publish. One subject I had preached long and hard about from the beginning was the danger of the United States continuing to provide military, financial, and diplomatic support for the gangster state of Israel. I warned that supporting Israel was not in accord with America's interests, that it was only making the people from whom we needed to purchase petroleum hate us, and we were getting nothing in return from Israel except contempt. Indeed, I put a great deal of effort into publicizing Israel's treacherous attempt in 1967 to sink the U.S Navy ship, the USS Liberty, and kill the crew, so that it could be blamed on Egypt, against whom Israel was waging war at the time.

Then in 1973, when Israel was involved in another war, against both Egypt and Syria, I sued the U.S. secretary of defense in a Federal court in an effort to block the illegal shipment of U.S. tanks, aircraft, and other weapons to Israel. I invited others to join me in this lawsuit. This was a concrete thing people could do. If the United States could be made to stay out of the war, then Israel would lose, and our Jewish problem in the Middle East would be solved. But in order to be effective, my lawsuit needed much support. It needed some big names behind it, so that the media couldn't ignore it. It needed a whole army of high-profile lawyers prosecuting it, so that the courts couldn't ignore it. And lawyers meant money, of course. The suit itself was on firm legal ground. The secretary of defense could not legally send U.S. tanks and planes to Israel without a specific authorization from the Congress, which he did not have. And the Jews needed the weapons immediately in order to avoid defeat by the Egyptians and the Syrians.

Well, the big names that I wanted to associate with my lawsuit refused to come forward. They were much more concerned with not offending the Jews than with eliminating the festering sore in our side that was Israel. And neither the money nor the high-profile lawyers needed to make the Federal court pay attention to my suit came forward. And so the Jewish secretary of defense, James Schlesinger, airlifted to Israel the weapons for which the Jews were clamoring. He drew down our military stockpiles in Europe to dangerously low levels in order to give Israel the weapons needed to defeat her neighbors. All of this was in the middle of the Cold War, when the U.S. defense of Western Europe against the Soviet Union was a serious matter. The Congress later gave Schlesinger the authorization to do what he had done, after the fact, but when he began doing it he lacked that authorization, and a strongly prosecuted lawsuit could have delayed the shipment of arms to Israel.

I had put all of my own money into the effort to hold up the diversion of U.S. weapons to Israel at least long enough to give an advantage to Egypt and Syria, and no one would help me. Anyway, for my efforts I had a valuable lesson in the way the judicial system works in America: it's not about justice and right and the law; it's all about power and money. And I also had yet another reminder of what I already had learned about the lack of any real sense of responsibility even among thinking Americans. I'm sure that many of those who refused to help me with my lawsuit in 1973 thought of themselves as patriots. They just didn't take seriously my warning about the dangerous consequences for America of continuing to permit the U.S. government to support Israel's aggression against her neighbors.

In 1975, I tried a new medium for my message. I wrote a novel, which I named The Turner Diaries. I looked at the trends I saw in 1975: the increasing meddling of the government in people's lives, the increasing effort by the government to control not only what people did with their own resources, but also what they said and thought; the increasing favoritism shown to non-White minorities by the government; the increasing compulsion toward mixing of the races in the schools, in the workplace, in residential neighborhoods; and the growing alienation of the White population, the growing tendency to shrug off any sense of responsibility, to withdraw into oneself and to seek only one's own pleasure and comfort while everything else went to hell. I looked at these trends, and I tried to project them ahead 20 years. I tried to imagine what life in America would be like in the 1990s. And that's what I wrote about in The Turner Diaries.

And the book was successful beyond my wildest dreams. No major publisher would touch the book, of course, and I had to publish it myself. After it was published bookstores wouldn't carry it, and reviewers wouldn't review it. I had to advertise it and sell it myself. And despite all the obstacles it sold like hotdogs at a ball game. I was amazed. Hundreds of thousands of people bought the book and liked it and told their friends about it. It was translated into German and French and Swedish and Polish and Romanian. Last week a Polish visitor told me that the Polish edition of the book is being sold now at newsstands in railway stations in Poland. But the governments in Germany and France and Canada and Britain went to the trouble to ban the book, and people who try to sell The Turner Diaries in those countries can be imprisoned.

But people still wouldn't do anything. People read my book as escapist fiction because they enjoyed the action I wrote about. But almost no one really took it seriously -- until very recently. The book was too farfetched to be taken seriously. It didn't seem real. They couldn't imagine that the projection of the future that I made back in 1975 ever could come to pass in America. After all, I wrote about an America with a much more repressive government than Americans ever had experienced. I wrote about an armed uprising against the government by White patriots. I wrote about domestic terrorism on a huge scale. I wrote about patriots using truck bombs to blow up government buildings, about patriots obtaining nuclear weapons and then putting one in an airplane and flying it into the Pentagon on a suicide mission. It just didn't seem real. Readers enjoyed it, but they didn't take it seriously.

And it wasn't just the action in The Turner Diaries they didn't take seriously. They thought that my message was too extreme. They thought that I was being excessively harsh in my portrayal of governmental corruption and of treason by the politicians. Things are bad, they agreed, but not as bad as I had portrayed them. They thought that the racism and the anti-Semitism of the characters in the book were too fanatical. They thought that the ethnic cleansing that was described in the book was unnecessarily bloody and cruel -- until very recently. But now I am detecting a changing attitude toward my book on the part of the most perceptive and most independent-minded readers.

The attitude of the lemmings hasn't changed at all, of course. They're not about to be seen reading the book, because their TV has told them that it's a very Politically Incorrect book, a very hateful book. But thinking people are looking at it again and reconsidering their initial judgment that it is too extreme, too unrealistic. They have seen too many of the things that I wrote about in 1975 come to pass. Or at least, they are seeing persuasive indications now that some of the farfetched things I wrote about may come to pass soon.

And it's not just my book, The Turner Diaries, that they're re-evaluating now. They're re-thinking everything that they had taken for granted before. They are taking things seriously now that they didn't pay much attention to before. Until very recently most Americans -- even thinking Americans -- didn't take the government's foreign policy very seriously, because it seemed too far from home. They didn't believe that what the government did overseas could have much effect on their personal comfort or security. Now they understand that it can. In September, it was brought home to them that a bad foreign policy can have disastrous consequences right here in America.

And it's not just that they understand that Americans can be bombed and hijacked and infected with anthrax by people who have been driven to desperation by our foreign policy. They have seen the U.S. government's response and the media response to what happened in September. They have heard the barefaced, brazen lies from everyone in the government and the media to the effect that the September 11 attack was unprovoked, that it had nothing to do with the government's support of Israel against her neighbors, that it was based only on an irrational hatred by fundamentalist Muslims of America's freedom and democracy -- and, as Mrs. Bush claimed recently, on their desire to oppress American women.

I have been claiming for years that the government in Washington is totally corrupt and totally under Jewish control, and nearly everyone took those claims with a grain of salt. It is true that the Jews are powerful and have much political influence, they thought, but certainly Pierce is exaggerating. Certainly there still are some patriotic politicians in the government. Certainly the Jews don't control everything in Washington the way Pierce claims they do. After all, our government often is critical of Israel's illegal occupation of Palestinian land. Our government has criticized the programs of assassination and terrorism the Jews are using against the Palestinians. Often there are public arguments between Israeli politicians and Washington politicians. So surely Pierce is exaggerating.

Now, however, these people who were sure that I have been exaggerating are noticing that, despite the public show of criticism and disagreement, U.S. money and weapons somehow keep going to Israel, year after year. They are noticing that, while there undoubtedly are a few minor agencies of the government in Washington that the Jews don't have their noses in, the Jews do seem to get their way with everything that is really important to them. The doubters are noticing that in a matter as important to America as the September 11 attacks, everyone in the government and the media continues to support Israeli interests instead of American interests. No one will condemn Washington's Israel-first policy that led to the attacks. The doubters are noticing that instead of acting to secure America's interests now, we are beginning a major war in the Middle East in order to secure Israel's interests.

Finally, thinking people who could not accept my blanket condemnation of Jewish influence on European and American society -- people who objected that not all Jews had been communists back during the rise and triumph of communism, and not all communists who participated in genocide against the people of eastern Europe were Jews; people who objected that not all Jews in America are involved in the filth coming from Hollywood now, not all Jews are working to abolish the Second Amendment, not every single Jew is pushing to keep America's borders open -- these thinking people are beginning to understand that it is the collective influence of the Jews on our society that is dragging it down. It is dawning on them that the most important of the destructive influences in the life of our race are Jewish influences, whether every Jew is involved in these influences or not. They understand that we no longer can afford the luxury of quibbling over just what the role of this Jew or that Jew has been. We must act to end the overall Jewish influence, the collective Jewish influence, and if we are to survive we must do it soon.

Perhaps I am too much of an optimist, but I do believe that, after all of these years of preaching, I am seeing the beginning of an awakening among thinking Americans now, the beginning of a new contact with reality. And perhaps this awakening to the reality of our situation will lead some thinking Americans to begin accepting some responsibility for the future of our people.

Great Masters of the Lie

Let's begin with a few simple statements of fact.

First fact: The September 11 attack on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon was a direct response to the U.S. government's long-term support for Israel's aggression against her neighbors in the Middle East. The attack was not irrational or cowardly or unprovoked. And we were not attacked because fundamentalist Muslims hate America's freedom and democracy or because they want to oppress American women. America was attacked simply because the U.S. government has helped Israel attack and plunder her neighbors.

Second fact: Everyone of any consequence in the U.S. government and in America's mass media understands with perfect clarity the first fact.

Third fact: Everyone of any consequence in the U.S. government and in America's mass media has lied consistently and deliberately about why America was attacked and also about why the U.S. government started a new war in the Middle East a few weeks ago.

Fourth fact: The reason for the lying by the media people and by the politicians and government officials is Jewish influence. Jews own or control most of the mass media in the United States, and they also own the politicians, for all practical purposes.

Fifth fact: If the U.S. government remains subservient to the Jews and continues its Israel-first policy in foreign affairs, as it is doing now with its war against Afghanistan and Israel's other enemies in the Middle East, Americans will continue to pay the price, and only Jews will profit.

These five facts bear repeating over and over and over again. They are simple and self-evident, but it is easy to forget them in the blizzard of lies and obfuscation coming from the news media these days. One fundamental principle that professional liars rely on is that a lie, no matter how transparent or preposterous, if repeated often enough and brazenly enough, will be believed by most people. And if repeated loudly enough it will drown out the truth, and even the more perceptive and thoughtful members of the population will forget what is truth and what is a lie. George Bush has told us so many times now that we were attacked on September 11 because fundamentalist Muslims hate America's freedom and democracy that most of the public believes it. It is important that some of us not forget that it is a brazen lie, and that no amount of repetition will make it other than a lie.

Well, it's bad enough having to listen to a not-so-bright politician like George Bush lie to us about matters of the utmost national importance, but he's really an amateur at lying. You can see that little smirk around the corners of his mouth, even when he's lying about very serious things, and that will put you on your guard. Even Bill Clinton was a better liar than George Bush. If the only liars we had to worry about were the politicians and the bureaucrats, we'd be in pretty good shape. The lemmings would stay fooled, but then, they're always fooled. At least, the perceptive minority would understand that we were being lied to.

Unfortunately, however, we also are inundated by lies from those who are real experts at lying, far cleverer at it than the politicians. I am referring, of course, to the Jews. They are such effective liars that we really must pinch ourselves every time one of them opens his mouth, lest we be taken in. It is, in fact, their absolutely astounding facility at lying that has persuaded me, more than any other difference between us, that an unbridgeable racial gulf separates us from the Jews. It is more than their perverse religion and more than their distinctive family life that is responsible for this facility, I am convinced.

I believe that it is based in their genes. From far back in prehistoric times their ancestors spent so many generations in the markets and bazaars of the Middle East changing money and buying and selling camels and goats and goods of every description, haggling over every transaction, that the ability to lie convincingly became a real asset in the struggle for survival. And it is the adverb "convincingly" that is the key here. They evolved the knack for seeming to be sincere while lying outrageously.

I'll give you a concrete example. And, really, the only way to deal with a subject like this is to study concrete examples: many concrete examples; to look at the details. My example today is a recent paper written for the Center for Immigration Studies by Dr. Stephen Steinlight. Dr. Steinlight spent more than five years as the director of national affairs for the American Jewish Committee. He's certainly no fringe Jew, but rather is a real Jew's Jew, right at the core of Jewish power. His paper, which you can find for yourself on the Internet at cis.org, is titled "The Jewish Stake in America's Changing Demography." It is a paper written by a Jewish leader primarily for his fellow Jews, and so is perhaps a bit more revealing of Jewish attitudes than it would be if it were addressed to the general public instead.

The general theme of Steinlight's message is that U.S. immigration policy, as it stands today, is not as favorable to Jewish interests as it might be. In fact, he sees some real dangers for his fellow Jews if immigration policy isn't changed soon. The main danger he sees is the loss of the Jewish ability to control the U.S. government. Now, he indicates, the Jews have a tight grip on things; through their control of the media they are able to control public opinion. But, he frets, with so many diverse races pouring across the U.S. borders so fast, and with the new immigrants retaining their own racial loyalties instead of assimilating into the cosmopolitan mass of the general public, the Jews may lose their grip. When more than half of the U.S. population becomes non-White during the next 30 or 40 years, if the various minorities still have any sort of separate group identities, the Jews may no longer be able to control the outcome of elections.

The way around this danger, according to Steinlight, is not to halt non-White immigration. Instead it is to shift the makeup of the immigrant flow in a way so as to make it easier for the Jews to control them and to slow the flow if necessary so that the new immigrants can be integrated into the mass -- and controlled along with the mass -- rather than retaining their separate identities.

Well, that's Steinlight's message in broad outline, which is interesting in itself, but it's in the details of the way in which he says it that we can see the peculiarly Jewish knack for deception. I can't read Steinlight's whole paper to you, because it's 26 pages long, but I'll try to give you the general flavor with just a few excerpts. For example, he carries on for pages about how wonderful democracy is -- the will of the people, equality, and all that -- and how important it is to preserve democracy. And then on page seven he says:

Is the emerging new multicultural American nation good for the Jews? Will a country in which enormous demographic and cultural change, fueled by unceasing large-scale non-European immigration, remain one in which Jewish life will continue to flourish as nowhere else in the history of the Diaspora? In an America in which people of color form the plurality, as has already happened in California, most with little or no historical experience with or knowledge of Jews, will Jewish sensitivities continue to enjoy extraordinarily high levels of deference and will Jewish interests continue to receive special protection? Does it matter that the majority of non-European immigrants have no historical experience of the Holocaust or knowledge of the persecution of Jews over the ages and see Jews only as the most privileged and powerful of White Americans?

You really need to read that statement over two or three times and let it sink in to get the full impact: to realize that Steinlight has just announced that Jewish interests get special protection because Americans want to make up for the persecutions they have been led to believe that Jews suffered more than 50 years ago during the so-called "Holocaust"; that it is dangerous to let immigrants in who haven't been indoctrinated with "Holocaust" propaganda, because they might see Jews for what they really are, namely, the most privileged and powerful group in America. But how nicely Steinlight says that: how smoothly!

Well, Steinlight goes on to complain that Jews already are losing some of their power. He mentions the Jews in the Congress who have been replaced by Asians and Hispanics, and he asks whether Jews can hope ever again to have ten Jewish senators, as they do now, if present immigration trends continue.

We should note that if the Jews were represented in the Senate in proportion to their percentage of the population there would be only two Jewish senators now instead of ten. And then Steinlight asks:

How long do we actually believe that nearly 80 per cent of the entire foreign aid budget of the United States will go to Israel?

Steinlight says:

Not that it is the case that our disproportionate political power (pound for pound the greatest of any ethnic/cultural group in America) will erode all at once, or even quickly. We will be able to hang on to it for perhaps a decade or two longer. Unless and until the triumph of campaign finance reform is complete, an extremely unlikely scenario, the great material wealth of the Jewish community will continue to give it significant advantages. We will continue to court and be courted by key figures in Congress.

Steinlight's paper is really fascinating reading. He says all of the typical, mealy-mouthed things about democracy and equality and so on, sounding like a true-blue, public-spirited, patriotic American -- and then he lets slip the real reason why Jews love democracy so much: it is because democracy is so corruptible; it is because their wealth gives them such an advantage. And gradually one begins to understand that the Jews' whole concern about immigration and politics is Jewish power: that's all that concerns them. And Steinlight actually communicates that message to his fellow Jews, but he heaps on so much obfuscation that the average Gentile will never get it.

Here's another little gem from Steinlight's paper. After mentioning how rapidly the political power of the Hispanic segment of the U.S. population is growing and how racially self-conscious this segment is, Steinlight says:

For perhaps another generation, an optimistic forecast, the Jewish community is thus in a position where it will be able to divide and conquer and enter into selective coalitions that support our agendas.

Did you catch that bit about "divide and conquer"? Of course, that was the motive driving the Jews' campaign for the new immigration law in 1965 that brought in the flood of non-White immigrants who have so drastically darkened America in recent decades, and it is the motive behind the Jews' insistence now that our borders be kept open and that the government do virtually nothing to halt illegal immigration. The motive from the beginning was to dilute White political strength, to multiculturalize America, so that Whites couldn't gang up on the Jews: so that the 2.5 per cent of the population that is Jewish could continue to control the other 97.5 per cent that is not Jewish.

And Steinlight admits the virtual Jewish unanimity on the immigration question as well as the decisive role the Jews have had in shaping the U.S. government's immigration policy, but his admission is cloaked in all of the standard mush about sympathy for the underdog and how the Jews always have been against racism and so on.

But now, Steinlight is telling his fellow Jews -- now is the time for us to change America's immigration policy again, so that we Jews can continue to hang on to our power. We need to have fewer Muslim immigrants and others we are less likely to be able to control, and we need to slow immigration down so that the new non-White immigrants can lose their own sense of identity, shed the influences from their home countries, and become fully "Americanized" -- which means fully subject to Jewish control through the mass media.

And Steinlight comes right out and says how that control is to be exercised. He says:

It is also true that Jewish economic influence and power are disproportionately concentrated in Hollywood, television, and in the news industry....

And then, a few pages later, after saying some very unkind things about Muslims, he tells us:

I suspect that MTV, for better or for worse, will prove more powerful with young Muslim immigrants than the mullahs....

What is that if not gloating over his fellow Jews' power to capture and control the minds of non-Jews, even to wean young Muslims away from their religion, away from the influence and guidance of their own spiritual leaders, through the Jews' control of the media? He doesn't have to spell it out for his fellow Jews. They already know that MTV is owned by the billionaire Jew Sumner Redstone, born Murray Rothstein, and that the whole aim of MTV propaganda is to multiculturalize young Americans, to cut them loose from their own racial and cultural and religious roots and make rootless cosmopolitans of them, with no sense of racial identity or loyalty. The Jews know all of this, but the Gentiles listening to Steinlight will never get it. To communicate the way Steinlight does takes a special ability: a Jewish ability.

I'll say this again: Jews -- and not just Steinlight, but Jews generally -- are able to get away with making such brazen statements because they fuzz them over with lots of contradictory verbiage that keeps the Gentiles trying to figure it out. The Jews in Steinlight's audience read his message loud and clear, while the non-Jews sit there with idiotic smiles on their faces and applaud, having understood nothing at all. I chose Steinlight's recent paper to illustrate this because Steinlight is a policy-making Jew with unquestionable credentials, and because the paper is available to anyone with access to the Internet at cis.org.

For those listeners without Internet access, his core message to his fellow Jews is this: "We Jews are richer and more powerful than any other group in America. Our power is concentrated in the media. We always have pushed for more non-White immigration into America because we wanted to dilute the power of the White majority. We used the tactic of divide and rule. But now, with America becoming non-White so rapidly our open-borders policy is likely to begin working against our own Jewish interests. We are not able to control large ethnic minorities who maintain their separate identities as easily as we can control those who have given up their identities and become fully assimilated into the mass. In the future we probably can continue to use our media, such as MTV, to undermine the culture of new immigrants and integrate them into the American mass, but in order to be sure of doing this we need to slow the rate of immigration a bit, skew the immigration quotas more toward those who are not hostile to Jews, and speed up programs aimed at assimilation. And we should be especially sure that we indoctrinate new immigrants with lots of "Holocaust" propaganda, so that they will feel guilty if they don't let us have our way and keep our special privileges."

That's Steinlight's message. It's simple enough, but being delivered the way it is makes it fiendishly deceptive. And lest you think I'm exaggerating or distorting his message by paraphrasing it, I should quote exactly what he says on page 18 of his paper, where he explains how Jews are able to get away with claiming to be loyal to America while actually being loyal to Israel. He says:

We get a free pass, I suspect, largely over Christian guilt about the Holocaust....

But he pads that bald statement with a warning to his fellow Jews that they'd better be more careful not to flaunt their "free pass" and had better try harder to seem patriotic.

There's one area of Steinlight's paper that gives additional insight into the Jewish mode of deception, and that's his commentary on Muslims, whom he regards as an especially problematic group of immigrants. I'll quote for you exactly what he says first about Muslim fundamentalists and then about Muslims generally, beginning on page 21 of his paper. Muslim fundamentalism is, he says:

[A] totalitarian political ideology with strong theocratic and fascistic elements.... Islamism is profoundly hostile to pluralism, religious tolerance, democracy, secular civil society, Jews, Zionism, [and] Israel....

He complains about Muslim fundamentalism's:

intolerant religiosity, irrational atavistic values, [and] misogyny.

Gee! What other Semitic religion does that description remind me of? Except for the bit about hostility toward Jews, Zionism, and Israel, what he says about Islam describes Orthodox Judaism perfectly. And there's much more. Steinlight complains about the multiplicity of Islamic social and religious organizations in the United States and how they all stick up for each other. And -- get this -- he actually complains that Muslims, when criticized or questioned, raise the "red herring of Islamophobia." How noble and honest it is of the Jews that they never raise the red herring of anti-Semitism to deflect criticism from themselves!

But that is only the beginning of Steinlight's arrogance and deception. The traditional Islamic faith, he says:

...is itself not unproblematic in its attitudes toward Jews, Christians, and other non-Muslims. The religious education of traditional, non-Islamist Muslims -- literalism in Koranic exegesis, theological straightjackets imposed on scriptural interpretation, the study of text without context, and the virtual absence of intellectual self-critique -- is filled with anti-Jewish teaching as well as a theology of contempt for the followers of other faiths.... Powerful strains of religious triumphalism and religious supercessionism are central tenets of Islam. Such dangerous spiritual arrogance has been abandoned by many Christian denominations, largely as a product of Vatican II and years of interfaith dialogue and soul-searching encounter. Christian believers, from Roman Catholics to members of such liberal Protestant denominations as the Congregationalists and the United Church of Christ, have, for example, adopted the view that God's covenantal relationship with the Jewish people remains unbroken and that the advent of Christianity neither erased nor canceled it.... No parallel spiritual generosity exists in Islam.

Well, sadly, all of that is perfectly true, and it is a wonderful example of how a clever liar can use the truth to tell a monstrous lie. It also is an example of the breathtaking height of arrogance to which Jews customarily rise in their lying.

There's much more I could say about such things as the way in which the Jews used such techniques as "interfaith dialogue" to completely vitiate Christianity and make the Christian churches into obedient lapdogs, but I don't want to offend my Christian friends any more than I already have. Study Steinlight's paper for yourself and see where it leads you.

The Club

We have spent much of our time during the past three months examining the significance of the September 11 attack and the government's response to that attack, both in America and in the Middle East. And there are a hundred more facets of this subject that we could discuss.

For example, during the past week the TV screens have been full of Mr. Bush's program of providing Christmas gifts for Afghan children, while he continues to bomb their country. I don't know what Muslims think about Christmas gifts, strictly from a religious standpoint, but I can imagine what they must be saying to each other, from a patriotic standpoint. Suppose that we were in an all-out war with China, and the Chinese government, after destroying our cities with a surprise nuclear attack, announced a program of gifts for American children while they continued to mop up American resistance to a Chinese invasion of our country. The Chinese premier would announce that the war was not against the American people, but only against the capitalist-terrorist government in Washington, and that the Chinese were truly concerned about the welfare and happiness of American children. I suspect that most of us would be inclined to tell the Chinese to take their toys and stuff them. Of course, it should be clear to anyone with half a brain that the toys-for-Afghan-children program is strictly a public relations stunt aimed at American public opinion and that George Bush cares no more for the children of Afghanistan than he does for the Taliban prisoners of his Northern Alliance buddies, who are still being tortured and murdered.

We also could talk more about the conflict between the Jews and the Palestinians and the attitude of the politicians over here to that conflict. The Jews are continuing to send murder teams into Palestinian towns to murder Palestinian leaders, still sending bulldozers to destroy the homes of the families of suspected Palestinian resistance fighters, still sending helicopter gunships -- supplied by the United States -- to shoot up Palestinian police stations for the purpose of killing the Palestinian prisoners being held there that Arafat has had arrested on suspicion of opposing the Jews, and no politician over here ever has a complaint about this Jewish terrorism, and that's the only word for it: terrorism.

Yet whenever the Palestinians strike back at their oppressors, whether with a suicide bombing or some other attack against the Israelis, Mr.Bush and virtually every other politician over here immediately and loudly denounce it as "terrorism." This week the governor of the state of New York, the present and future mayors of New York City, and a passel of other American politicians are all over in Israel, wearing yarmulkes to show their solidarity with the Jews in our "common fight against terrorism." And Mr. Bush, on orders from Mr. Sharon, refuses to meet with Mr. Arafat because Arafat, he says, isn't doing enough to stop Palestinian terrorism.

The crookedness and hypocrisy of this whole relationship between Israel and the United States really turns the stomach of any honest observer, but I guess it still plays well enough on American television to keep the lemmings fooled. Anyway, just remember all of this crookedness the next time a lot of Americans lose their lives in another reprisal attack from the long-suffering Muslim world, and the Bush crowd tells us that the attack was "unprovoked."

Well, as I said, we've talked a lot about the Middle East situation recently, and we don't want to neglect the other very important things that are happening around us. We could discuss the extraordinarily depressing situation in South Africa and Rhodesia, where things have continued downhill since the last time we talked about the increasingly precarious position of White people there. Black dictator Robert Mugabe in Rhodesia seems hell bent not only on driving the last White Rhodesians out of their country but also on destroying Rhodesia altogether.

Black rule in South Africa is carrying that once-proud White nation deeper and deeper into savagery and depravity. South Africa has the highest incidence of rape of any country in the world, and one in every eight Black South Africans is infected with HIV or has full-blown AIDS. The belief is widespread among Blacks that sex with a virgin -- or more generally with an uninfected woman -- will cure AIDS: supposedly the woman's uninfected body draws the infection out of the body of the man who is having sex with her. Because the HIV infection rate is far lower among White women than among Blacks, White women increasingly are the targets of Black rapists, as are infants of either race. A recent series of gang rapes of South African infants, as young as five months old, has caused shock even in that crime-ridden country, although there has been very little news in America about the rapes. The media here, having played the key role in bringing Black rule and subsequent ruin to South Africa, largely have ignored the consequences of their destructive work.

If there is a pattern to be seen in all this, it is the deliberate destruction of independent nations, the deliberate wrecking of patriotic governments everywhere and their replacement with more corruptible governments, governments more easily controlled by alien forces. That is what has happened not only to South Africa and to Yugoslavia within the past decade, but it is what the U.S. government tried to do to Iraq a decade ago and seems determined to try again to do in the very near future, as soon as it finishes off Afghanistan.

The crippling of Iraq and Afghanistan is understandable solely in terms of the conflict between Jews and Muslims in the Middle East and the Jewish control of public opinion in the United States. When we consider also the U.S. government's bombing of Belgrade and the economic and diplomatic pressure that undermined the White government of South Africa, and when we also look at domestic governmental policies in the United States and in virtually every country in Europe, a much larger -- and much more sinister -- pattern emerges. The big picture that we can see is a concerted effort to decrease national autonomy everywhere; to break down national traditions and national and racial consciousness; to force everyone into a uniform, cosmopolitan mold; to subject people everywhere to a central authority controlling every aspect of their lives.

This big picture has been given the name "New World Order" by its partisans. The first major actor in the campaign to impose the New World Order on an unwilling world who used the name in public was George Bush's father, during the latter's term as President ten years ago; at least, he was the first person I heard bragging about it. But the campaign has been going on much longer than that. The planning was well underway early in the last century, but it took a communist revolution and two horribly murderous and destructive world wars to destroy the old world order -- the White world order -- and make way for the new.

And really, it is only when we look at the major events of the past century in the light of a deliberate, widely concerted effort to destroy the political and social order of the White world that we begin to see a pattern, and things start to make sense. Why, for example, would two great, capitalist nations -- the United States and Great Britain -- ally themselves with the communist Soviet Empire to destroy a third great, capitalist nation, Germany?

Certainly, there were various motives at work. There was longstanding ethnic animosity, as between Germans and Poles and between French and Germans. There was the greed of British capitalists for a bigger part of the market that their competitor, Germany, was sharing with them. Capitalists had, in other circumstances, shown themselves quite capable of mass murder and nation wrecking in their greed for more wealth. But really, none of this is a sufficient explanation for the Second World War and its aftermath. Many British capitalists may have been willing enough to see German economic power destroyed, but I doubt that they planned on seeing the destruction of British economic power and the postwar dismantling of the British Empire, or the rise of the Soviet Union to a dominant position in Europe.

To me the most compelling evidence of a plan behind the disasters of the 20th century is the astounding uniformity of government policy everywhere in the Western world: really, nearly everywhere in the White world, that emerged after the Second World War. Today, for example, every White country has opened its borders to a flood of non-White immigrants from the Third World, and they are pouring in: France, Germany, Spain, Sweden, Denmark, England, Scotland, even Ireland. If a popular vote were held in any of these countries as to whether or not the flow of non-White immigrants should be continued, the continuation would be overwhelmingly rejected. But, just as in the United States, the people are never given an opportunity to reject non-White immigration. They are never asked their opinion on the matter. An overwhelmingly unpopular program is crammed down the throats of the people because the top politicians -- presidents and prime ministers -- support it, and the rest of the politicians go along obediently.

So why are the top politicians from every country in the White world marching in ideological lockstep? Why is there such uniformity of policy? It certainly wasn't that way 100 years ago. It used to be that there was a great deal of individuality among political leaders and national policies. The prime minister in Britain had one style; the chancellor in Germany had another; and the President of the United States had a third. Where are the individuals today who reflect the national peculiarities of their own people?

Well, of course, individuals do come along occasionally: Austria's Jörg Haider, for example. He was in favor of cutting off the immigration of non-Whites into Austria, because that's what the Austrian people wanted. When Haider's party won enough votes for Haider to implement some of his policies, the top politicians in all the other countries went berserk, recalling their ambassadors, threatening trade embargoes, and worse.

The problem with Haider was that he wasn't a member of the Club. The top politicians throughout the Western world were recruited into the Club by the planners before they were elected to public office. Candidates for the Club are selected, in most cases while still university students, and are initiated into a multinational society of young men on the make: ambitious and unscrupulous young men who have the requisite social skills for becoming successful politicians and who are willing to sell out their people in return for the Club's support for their personal advancement.

This is an old idea. To a large degree it is the idea behind every political party: join our party and follow our party line, and we'll provide the money and the organization to get you into public office. There's more to the Club, though. For one thing, it's multinational. For another, it operates like a secret society instead of like a political party. It's not subject to the laws that are supposed to govern political parties in most countries.

In the past there have been other secret societies with political agendas, of course: even multinational secret societies. The people behind the international communist movement constituted such a multinational secret society. The huge advantage that the Club has -- the Club to which George Bush and his father and Bill Clinton and Tony Blair and nearly every other political leader in the White world belong -- its huge advantage is that its board of directors includes the people who control the mass media throughout the Western world.

It used to be that every country had its own mass media. Nowadays you can see the same Hollywood products on TV screens in Germany or England or the United States. Sometimes the local language is dubbed in, and sometimes it isn't, but the multicultural filth of MTV flows into the minds of young Swedes and Britons and Germans just as it does into the minds of young Americans. Because of this the Club can ensure the political success of its members nearly everywhere.

Well, there's more to it than that, but the key is that increasingly globalized mass media give increasingly globalized political control to the men who control the media. It is a natural thing that men who have the potential for exercising this political power would turn to the obvious tactic of recruiting front men to be actual electoral candidates. The media bosses themselves are not all Jews, but most of them are, and it wouldn't look good if they tried to fill the top political offices themselves. Besides they already are pretty busy running their media empires, and most of them don't have the personal traits needed to gain the affection of voters. So they recruit political candidates and then use the Club's power to make political leaders of them.

The Club's recruitment of potential political leaders is not quite like the recruitment of potential executives by IBM or General Motors. The Club doesn't exactly hire them and put them on the payroll. Instead it gives them Rhodes Scholarships and other perks. It opens doors for them. It invites them into social circles where they can rub shoulders with the superrich and powerful and ruthless. It helps them forge new connections. It dazzles them with the lure of money and status. It offers to buy their souls from them for a very good price indeed. And when they sell, they are thenceforth bound to follow the party line.

I said that the Club operates like a secret society, but it's really not all that secret. There's nothing that a member of the Club, if he later became disenchanted, could tell to the police that would lead to arrests or could announce to the public that would lead to outrage. The members of the Club understand the rules well enough without having to swear any oaths or sign their names in blood. They understand what they are receiving from the Club and what they must give in return.

They understand that if they stop giving they will stop receiving. And they understand the power of the Club to take away from them what they already have received from the Club.

The Club isn't even quite like a fraternity. Some of its members hate or despise other members. They often scheme and fight against one another for a bigger share of the Club's favors. But they do obey the Club's rules. They do follow the Club's policies.

It's a loose sort of thing, in that not everyone in public office belongs to the Club. But if someone not in the Club becomes too popular or begins acquiring too much influence, the Club keeps a close watch on him and may order the Club's members to attack him, the way they have attacked Austria's Jörg Haider and France's Jean-Marie LePen. The Club even tolerates a certain amount of erratic behavior from its members. But at its core the Club is hard and disciplined, and its leaders know exactly what they want.

They want to bring the whole White world more and more tightly under their control. They want to eliminate every challenge and every potential challenge to their rule. They want to stamp out every influence and every idea that might become a danger to them, and that includes every nationalism and every religion that they haven't already infiltrated and corrupted. To this end they have been working to break down all national borders, pollute all ethnically clean populations with a flood of non-White immigrants, wipe out all sense of racial identity or loyalty, erase the memory of all traditions and all history, and undermine discipline and morality everywhere. They promote the hip-hop anti-culture of non-White savages; they promote homosexuality and feminism; they denounce every voice of opposition to themselves as "hate" and every act of opposition as "terrorism."

They corrupt and they destroy, so that they can suck out the lifeblood of the world. They employ George Bush and his crew now the way they employed Bill Clinton and his crew earlier and the older George Bush before that. They are largely Jewish, but not entirely. They are waging war now to break the power of militant Islam, which they see as a danger to Israel, but they are as strongly entrenched in Hollywood and New York and Washington as they are in Tel Aviv and Jerusalem.

If our race is to live and if our civilization is to survive, we must destroy them and those who work for them before they have gone much further with their own evil work of destruction. Destroying the Club and its adherents will be an extraordinarily difficult and dangerous and inevitably bloody task, but no matter how bloody, that is infinitely preferable to permitting the Club to continue with its evil activity unopposed.

I can understand why some people strike out at the Club with acts of terrorism, but I do not believe that terrorism by itself can defeat the Club. Control of the mass media of news and entertainment is what gave the Club its power and enables it to keep its power. Before the power of the Club can be broken and its members and its policies can be discredited and neutralized, the Club's control of the media must be broken. These weekly American Dissident Voices broadcasts are one small step in that direction. The books published and distributed by National Vanguard Books are another small step. The resistance music distributed by Resistance Records is another step.

But all of these things that I and the other members of the National Alliance are doing are not enough by themselves to break the Club. If I reach 100,000 White men and women each week with this broadcast, the Club can reach 100 million each day with its poison. The only way that we can destroy the Club and its evil is for you to do more than listen to me speaking. You must speak out yourself. You must multiply your own voice by persuading others to speak out also. You must persuade people you know who aren't listening to these broadcasts to begin listening.

And please, don't tell me that you can't speak out because you will be expelled from your university or fired from your job or investigated by the FBI or divorced by your wife or disowned by your parents if you do. It's time now for an end to excuses, for an end to cowardice and timidity. I don't want anyone to be expelled from his university or fired from his job. In some cases that will happen, although in most cases it won't. Most people have exaggerated fears, groundless fears. But groundless or not, the time is growing very late, and if you don't speak out, if you don't do everything you can and do it now, you betray not only your nation and your civilization and your race, you also betray yourself.

Speak out! Act now! And if you want to work together with others who are speaking out and acting, become a member of the National Alliance. You'll find an application form at natvan.com.

Labels

"Terrorism" and "terrorist" have been the most-used words on television and in the other controlled news media recently. We've heard over and over about al-Quaeda terrorism and Iraqi terrorism and Palestinian terrorism -- especially about Palestinian terrorism during the past week, with the Bush government repeatedly demanding that Yasser Arafat arrest every Palestinian designated as a "terrorist" on a list given to him by Israel. But we haven't heard anything about Israeli terrorism or about U.S. terrorism: not even a word. The controlled news media in America would have us believe that the governments of Israel and the United States don't engage in terrorism.

So how do we decide what is terrorism and what isn't? Is terrorism what individuals or small groups do when they're angry at a government, but what governments do is legitimate warfare or self-defense or something else other than terrorism?

No, no, that can't be, because we were told that the government of Afghanistan that we just destroyed was a terrorist government, and so is the government of Iraq, which the media want us to destroy next. So maybe it's the type of weapon that's used that determines whether an action is terrorism or not. If one uses a car bomb or a human bomb, as the Palestinians often do, it's terrorism. If one uses a helicopter gun ship, as the Israelis often use to assassinate Palestinian leaders, or an airplane, like we use to bomb Afghanistan, it's not terrorism.

No, no, that can't be right, because Osama bin Laden used airplanes in his attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon, and we were assured that was terrorism. So why is Mr. Bush's aerial bombing of Kabul or Kandahar not terrorism, while Osama bin Laden's aerial bombing of New York and Washington was? Why wasn't the Clinton government's aerial bombing of Belgrade two years ago called "terrorism" by the media?

Perhaps what distinguishes legitimate warfare from terrorism is motivation. In warfare one attempts to destroy the enemy's military forces and to capture territory from the enemy; in terrorism one attempts to demoralize or terrify the enemy. But then what should we call the carpet-bombing of German cities by the United States during the Second World War? The motive there was to kill as many German civilians as possible and demoralize the German public. That also was the motive behind Britain's program to drop millions of anthrax bombs on Germany during the war. Fortunately, the Second World War ended before Britain could use the anthrax bombs it had prepared, but Churchill had fully intended to use them -- and to use them when it already was apparent that Germany was losing the war. Why is Winston Churchill regarded by all of the controlled media as a hero, as a great and good man, while whoever is mailing anthrax-infected letters to politicians and media bosses in the United States today is regarded as a "terrorist" and is described as "evil" and "cowardly"?

Well, by now the reason why an act of terror is sometimes called "terrorism" and sometimes isn't should be obvious. If someone we don't like does it to us, it's terrorism; if we do it to someone else, it isn't. More to the point, if someone the media bosses don't like strikes at Jews -- Israelis, for example -- or at someone friendly to the Jews -- the U.S. government, for example -- then it's terrorism. If Jews -- Israelis, for example -- strike at Palestinians, or if the U.S. government strikes at anyone -- Afghans or Iraqis, for example -- on behalf of the Jews, then it isn't terrorism.

A somewhat trickier case was the attempt by the Israelis in 1967 to sink the U.S. Navy ship, the Liberty, so that it could be blamed on the Egyptians, generating U.S. hostility against Egypt. Although the attempt failed, the Israelis did kill 35 Americans in their terror attack on the Liberty. The controlled media, of course, not only didn't call it "terrorism" but did their best to hush it up by giving it minimal news coverage. So the rule is: if it's an attack by Jews or on behalf of Jews it's not terrorism. If it's an attack against Jews or against Jewish interests, it is terrorism. That's why Ariel Sharon isn't a terrorist, and Osama bin Laden is. Understand?

In this regard, things are better for the U.S. government today than they were 30 years ago, during the Vietnam War. The media bosses didn't consider the Viet Cong or the North Vietnamese to be enemies, and so they were pretty quick to jump on the government when it prosecuted the war too vigorously. More than anything else it was the media slant on the war in Vietnam which led the U.S. government to tie the hands of the U.S. military and prevent a U.S. victory. The politicians were scared to death of being called "baby killers" or "warmongers" by the Jewish media if they urged more aggressive action against the communists in Vietnam.

Today no U.S. politician would even dream of telling the U.S. military to take it easy on Israel's enemies in the Middle East. He immediately would be denounced by the media as "soft on terrorism."

So today "terrorism" and "terrorist" are for all practical purposes media labels used as propaganda, much in the same way the media use the labels "racism" and "racist." If I denounce Whites who have sexual relations with non-Whites -- if I say that miscegenation is a terrible thing because it will destroy our race if we permit it to continue -- I am denounced by the Jewish media as a "racist." The same Jewish media, however, would never think of referring to a Jewish leader who expresses concern about the high rate of intermarriage between Jews and Gentiles as a "racist." In fact, Jewish media such as the New York Times regularly carry advertisements for Jewish groups urging Jews not to intermarry with Gentiles, urging them to marry only other Jews.

I'll give you another example of the crooked and deceptive way in which the controlled media in America use labels. I mentioned in my broadcast a few weeks ago -- actually, it was my broadcast of October 27 -- that the government's Centers for Disease Control had published a report on bioterrorism written by a Jewess, Jessica Stern, in which she referred to me as a "terrorist." My primary concern in that broadcast was the increasingly cozy relationship between Jewish pressure groups and U.S. government agencies: especially law enforcement agencies. The total subservience of the politicians to the controlled mass media has allowed Jewish groups to present themselves to government agencies as "experts" on just about everything: most recently as experts on "terrorism." Many of these groups -- the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith and the Southern Poverty Law Center come immediately to mind -- have been given a quasi-official status by the media and by the government. They tell the government who is a "terrorist" and who isn't, and the government accepts their word.

For the record, I have never been charged with any terrorist act, nor have I ever advocated terrorism, and yet Jessica Stern, who falsely labeled me a "terrorist" in an official government publication has now been elevated to the status of Jewish guru by Time magazine. She is hailed as an expert on terrorism in Time's December 17 issue, and really, her only qualification for this status is her Jewishness. You can be sure that any government agency to whom she offers her expert advice will accept it as unquestioningly as do the mass media. Meanwhile, the real terrorists get a free ride, both abroad and at home.

Jessica Stern is not the only lying Jewish propagandist who has labeled me a "terrorist," simply because I am opposed to Jewish media control, and is accepted without question by the U.S. government as an expert. The two Jewish pressure groups I just mentioned -- the Anti-Defamation League and the Southern Poverty Law Center -- regularly label me as "dangerous" and imply that I am up to my neck in criminal activity and violence, when the truth is that I am completely non-violent and never have been involved in any criminal activity at all.

But guess who is heavily involved in criminal activity and in actual terrorism but is never labeled "terrorist." How about the Jewish Anti-Defamation League? How about the Jewish Defense League? I'll bet you've never seen a media reference to either of these criminal Jewish organizations as "dangerous" or "criminal" or "terrorist." The Anti-Defamation League is routinely referred to by the controlled media as a "public service organization" or as a "human rights organization" and is routinely quoted as an expert source on matters such as "hate crime" and "terrorism." The Anti-Defamation League has been snuggling up to government agencies -- especially law-enforcement agencies -- for decades, despite its association with notorious felons and its own record of criminal activity, and despite its role as an unregistered agent of a foreign power: namely, Israel. With the Jewish media on its side the Anti-Defamation League has managed to wriggle out of the criminal charges it has faced and always gets good press.

Another Jewish group, the Jewish Defense League, may have run out of luck in that regard recently. The Jewish Defense League, like the Jewish Anti-Defamation League, has always had criminal associations and has faced numerous criminal charges, but always has managed to beat the rap, with the help of its cheering section in the media and the government's reluctance to prosecute a Jewish group. As long ago as 1985 the Jewish Defense League had a string of 37 terrorist acts to its record and was identified by the FBI as the "second most active terrorist group in the United States," beating out both the Teamster's Union and the Mafia. Of course, you weren't likely to see the FBI's report on the Jewish Defense League in the controlled media.

The FBI's specific concern with the Jewish Defense League in 1985 was based on the bombing of the California offices of the American Arab Anti-Discrimination Committee in that year. The regional director of the Arab group, Alex Odeh, was killed in the bombing. The Jewish Defense League members who were the principal suspects in that terrorist bombing fled to Israel to avoid prosecution, and the Jewish Defense League continued its terrorist activities without government interference and without any labeling by the Jewish media. The chances are that you've never heard anything about the Jewish Defense League's terrorist activity -- unless you listened very carefully to the news last week -- and you've never heard the Jewish media or any of the other Jewish pressure groups who have called me a "terrorist" say an unkind word about the Jewish Defense League.

Well, as I said, last week the Jewish Defense League's luck finally ran out. The chairman of the group, Irv Rubin, and his number-two Jew, Earl Krugel, both were arrested red-handed in Los Angeles by the FBI as they assembled the components for terrorist bombs intended to be set off in a Los Angeles mosque and in the southern California office of U.S. Congressman Darrell Issa. Jewish groups are very cozy with most congressmen, but the Jewish Defense League took exception to Congressman Issa's Lebanese ancestry and his lack of enthusiasm for the continuing U.S. support of Israel's terrorist activity.

Now, if I had been caught preparing bombs to blow up a synagogue and a Jewish congressman's office, you would never hear the end of it. It would be on every news program for weeks. The media would be crowing about it. The Jewish Anti-Defamation League, the Jewish Defense League, and the Southern Poverty Law Center would have people on the talk-show circuit for months bragging about how they had labeled me a "terrorist" and had been proved right. But you certainly will not see that sort of publicity about the very real terrorist activity of the Jewish Defense League or the arrest of its two top leaders on Wednesday of last week as they prepared to blow up a congressman's office and a mosque. None of these Jewish groups will be labeled in a negative way as long as Jews continue to control America's mass media, just as Israel, which carries out more terrorism than all the other countries in the Middle East together, never will be labeled a terrorist state by the controlled media.

Israeli assassination teams that murder Palestinians never will be labeled "terrorists" by the media, but every time a Palestinian strikes back at his Israeli oppressors he is described by the media here as a "terrorist." When George Bush and the other politicians here preach about the need to fight terrorism in the Middle East, they are talking about Palestinian terrorism, about al-Quaeda terrorism, about Iraqi terrorism, about Muslim terrorism, but never about Israeli terrorism or Jewish terrorism.

All of this has important consequences for all of us. When the tiny Jewish minority in America has the power, through its stranglehold on the mass media of news and entertainment, to label in a negative way any individuals or groups or even countries the Jews don't like, and the great majority of the American people, the lemmings, who absorb all of their ideas and attitudes and opinions from television, accept these labels unquestioningly, it is bad for all of us.

It is not just that by labeling me a "terrorist" the Jewish media lead many foolish and unthinking people who believe whatever they see on television to actually think that I am a dangerous terrorist and accordingly shun me -- and believe me, that sort of false labeling can be quite a personal burden and make life much more difficult than it otherwise would be.

It is not just that by labeling Jewish criminal organizations like the Jewish Anti-Defamation League and the Jewish Defense League as "public service" organizations, the media shield the criminal activity of these groups and make law enforcement agencies reluctant to prosecute them. If the Jewish Anti-Defamation League had been adequately prosecuted for its massive thefts of confidential police files a few years ago, its leaders could have been put in prison and the organization itself could have been put out of business before it had a chance to persuade Bill Clinton last year to grant a pardon to billionaire Jewish gangster Marc Rich.

If the Jewish Defense League had been adequately prosecuted after its first terrorist bombing more than 20 years ago instead of being permitted to continue its campaign of terrorist activity with more bombings and arson, the lives of more than one innocent victim could have been saved.

But the consequences of false labeling by the Jewish media go far beyond these things. It is the false use by the controlled media of the label "terrorist" in the Middle East that underlies the continuing U.S. support for Israeli terrorism and is responsible for the September 11 attacks on the United States and for the present war against Afghanistan.

It is the deceptive use by the Jewish media of labels such as "racist" and "neo-Nazi" and "hater" and "bigot" that is largely responsible for the disastrous racial policies of the government that have been wrecking our society for the past four decades. First the Jewish media bosses saturated the public with these labels, giving them intensely negative connotations. The Jews used these labels in both the news and the entertainment media until they had the general public -- that is, the lemmings -- conditioned like Pavlov's dogs. They had the public reacting in horror and revulsion to the label "racist," for example, regardless of the circumstances.

If an authority figure on his TV screen labels someone a "racist," the average American viewer doesn't stop to ask questions; the conditioned response that the media already have implanted in him kicks in, and he reacts negatively. He doesn't stop to think, any more than Pavlov's dogs stopped to think when they heard the dinner bell. He doesn't ask himself, "What did this person who has been labeled a "racist" really do? Is he really a bad or an unreasonable person? Why do the TV people want me to hate him? What is racism, anyway? Is it really a bad or unreasonable thing?" The average viewer doesn't ask himself these questions, and he doesn't even think. He simply responds in the way he has been conditioned by years of TV brainwashing to respond.

And the average person knows that if he says anything negative about "diversity" or "multiculturalism" or uncontrolled immigration, he will be labeled a "racist," with all of the bad connotations that deliberately have been attached to that label by the media, and so he doesn't say anything against these government policies that are destroying America. And the destruction goes on.

I'll say this again because it's so important: the media bosses, by having the power to create labels and to implant conditioned responses to these labels in the minds of most members of the public, are able to control the attitudes of the public to ideas, to individuals, to countries, to government policies, and to everything else. And the media bosses use this power for their advantage and for our destruction.

It is the Jewish media bosses who more than anyone else are responsible for the government's destructive racial policies, for the government's Israel-first policy in the Middle East, for the fact that the Jewish Anti-Defamation League is able to engage in criminal activity without being prosecuted, for the fact that for more than 20 years the government permitted the Jewish Defense League to commit dozens of terrorist acts, including bombings, arson, and murder, and to get away with it -- until last week. And I get labeled a "terrorist."

For better or for worse, we have a mass democracy in the United States. The politicians who make our government's policies are elected to office by voters whose attitudes and opinions are formed primarily by the mass media: by television and Hollywood movies and newspapers and news magazines, which are almost entirely in the hands of Jews. With the power of the mass media at their disposal it's not really difficult for them to control the way the public thinks about important issues, and therefore to control government policy. They've made a science out of controlling public opinion. They have become masters at it. And one of the most important tools they use is labels that they themselves have created and tailored to suit their needs.

That's why our immigration situation is out of control. That's why America's cities and schools are becoming darker and darker. That's why you see so many young White women with Black mates. That's why we ignored Israel's terrorist attack on the U.S.S. Liberty in 1967. That's why George Bush dances to whatever tune is played by Ariel Sharon, the Butcher of Beirut. That's why more than 3,000 Americans were killed on September 11. That's why we're waging an unnecessary war in the Middle East now. That's why groups like the Jewish Anti-Defamation League and the Jewish Defense League are permitted to ignore our laws most of the time.

It's about time that we did something to take the power of false labeling away from the Jewish media bosses. It's about time for us to speak out and begin having an effect on American public opinion ourselves.

The Greatest Betrayal

Let's begin today by tying up a few loose ends from previous broadcasts. Last week, in commenting on the December 12 arrests of the head of the Jewish Defense League and his second-in-command in Los Angeles as they prepared to bomb a mosque and the office of a California congressmen of Lebanese ancestry, I predicted that unless you kept a very close eye on the news you probably wouldn't hear a peep from the Jewish media bosses about these arrests, that the Jews would attempt to protect their own, just as they have covered up for numerous terrorist acts by the Jewish Defense League in the past and also have covered up for a long history of criminal activity and gangland associations by the Jewish Anti-Defamation League.

Actually, there was more news coverage of this latest Jewish Defense League terrorism than I expected. The best coverage outside the Los Angeles area was in the Washington Times, which is not owned or controlled by Jews, but there also were two pretty good stories in the December 16 issue of the very Jewish New York Times. I hadn't yet seen those New York Times stories when I prepared last week's broadcast.

In my October 13 broadcast I quoted part of a cabinet meeting debate between Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon and Israeli Foreign Minister Simon Perez that supposedly was broadcast on a Hebrew-language radio station in Jerusalem, Kol Yisrael, in which Sharon angrily told Perez to stop worrying about how Americans might respond to the actions of the Israeli government, because America is firmly under Jewish control.

A couple of listeners questioned me about that, saying that they were unable to find any source for the quote I used. Well, in my broadcast I mentioned that I hadn't been able to find Sharon's statement in print myself. What I meant was that I hadn't been able to find it in any English-language Jewish publication, which is what I normally require to establish the credibility of such a statement. I did see the statement in an English-language Palestinian publication, but I really shouldn't have relied solely on that. I should have gotten it straight from the horse's mouth.

I find the statement Sharon supposedly made easy enough to believe, because that's the sort of thing other Jews more cautious and less boastful than Sharon have said, but I should not have relied solely on a source hostile to Sharon and to the Jews generally. At this point I really don't know whether Sharon made the statement I quoted or not. I'll try to be more careful about my sources in the future.

Now let's talk about Attorney General John Ashcroft and his job as America's chief law-enforcement officer. Every time I see Ashcroft on television, he sends cold shivers down my spine. Look at that cold, Puritanical expression on his face. He's the type of man who believes he has a God-given right to read your mail, to listen to your private telephone conversations, and to torture a confession from you if he suspects that you have bad thoughts about the government. He is looking forward to the New World Order, where he expects that there will be an even greater degree of regimentation of citizens, and he really can crack down hard on anyone who gets out of line. Ashcroft's main regret is that he did not live in the Soviet Union 75 years ago, where he could have converted to Judaism, become commissar for the Cheka, and organized mass shootings of dissidents in the cellars of the secret police.

I don't know what sort of sexual abuse Ashcroft was subjected to as a child that made him what he is, but I believe that it is his chekist personality that makes him such a worshipful admirer of Israel and the Israelis. He really respects a country that permits its police to torture prisoners, that practices collective punishment of the families of children who throw rocks at soldiers and of villages that are suspected of harboring resistance fighters, and that has a genocidal mass murderer as its prime minister.

Ashcroft is an ardent supporter of George Bush's policy of collective punishment, a policy apparently inspired by Israel. If the Israelis suspect that a Palestinian resistance fighter has been hiding in a village, they send in tanks and bulldozers to level the village. If George Bush believes that an alleged terrorist is hiding in a country, he sends in cruise missiles and B-52s to bomb the country back into the Stone Age. That policy doesn't apply to Israel, of course. If it did, our Middle Eastern problem would have been solved a long time ago.

Unfortunately, that problem still is very much with us. One aspect of the problem recently came to light after the September 11 attack, when the FBI began rounding up and interrogating illegal aliens who came here from Middle Eastern countries, including Israel. What the FBI uncovered is the largest espionage ring ever to operate in America.

Actually, the investigation of Israeli spying began before September 11, and many Jewish spies already had been identified. According to a Fox News report two weeks ago, as many as 140 Jewish spies already had been arrested before September 11, but there had been very little publicity about these arrests. The Bush government and most of the media were hoping no one would notice. The post-September 11 roundup of Middle Easterners uncovered another 60 or so Israelis engaged in espionage inside the United States and brought the previously secret investigation of Israeli espionage into the open -- or at least, more nearly into the open than before. The lemmings still are so busy watching their ball games that they haven't noticed.

Several very disturbing revelations have come out of this roundup. One is a very strong hint that the Jews here, through their spying on other Middle Easterners in the United States, had gained prior knowledge of the September 11 attack but did not share their information with the U.S. government. I reported my own suspicions in this regard immediately after the attack, but since then Fox News has reported even stronger suspicions among FBI investigators. A Fox News report of December 12, by reporter Carl Cameron, says:

There is no indication the Israelis were involved in the September 11 attacks, but investigators suspect that they may have gathered intelligence about the attacks in advance and not shared it.

Well, of course, we expect that sort of behavior on the part of the Jews. Once they had gathered their own information about the impending attack, which they anticipated with glee because it could only generate hostility between the United States and Israel's enemies in the Middle East, they saw no reason to warn Americans and thereby forestall the attack. So they waited quietly for the attack and then as soon as it happened began urging that the United States wage war against Israel's enemies.

This is the sort of thing that both the Israelis and the Israel-worshipping Bush government would like to keep quiet, and the FBI is being very tight-lipped about it now, but I will not be surprised to see the beans spilled about the Jewish foreknowledge of the attack as the investigation proceeds. The reason I say that is that the roundup of Jewish spies has revealed many other things about Israeli activities that are damaging to Americans, and it will be very difficult for the government and the media to keep everything covered up.

Here's an example: As the government has become increasingly intrusive, snooping into every aspect of our lives, the need for telephonic wiretaps and other forms of electronic surveillance has risen dramatically. You might be surprised to learn that the government doesn't do most of the electronic snooping itself; the work has become quite high-tech these days and is farmed out to private companies that specialize in electronic eavesdropping and in the storage and analysis of intercepted data. There are a number of companies, in the United States and elsewhere, that have the equipment and the expertise to do this very sophisticated work. Guess which companies our government uses to spy on us: the two companies that do nearly all of this work for the Federal government are both located in Israel.

Did you get that? The politicians who run our government decided that the country that gave us Jonathan Pollard and the murderous assault on the U.S.S. Liberty, the country run by the most notorious war criminal now on the loose, the country that is the world capital of the White slave trade and that holds a monopoly on the distribution of several illegal drugs in the United States, is the country we should trust to help us catch our criminals and spies and keep an eye on the private business of our citizens. Really! Most state and local police agencies also depend on the same two Israeli companies.

I'll quote again directly from a Fox News report by Carl Cameron, this one dated December 13:

Here's how the system works. Most directory assistance calls and virtually all call records and billing in the U.S. are done for the phone companies by Amdocs, Ltd., an Israeli-based private telecommunications company. Amdocs has contracts with the 25 biggest phone companies in America, and more worldwide. The White House and other secure government phones are protected, but it is virtually impossible to make a call on normal phones without generating an Amdocs record of it. In recent years the FBI and other government agencies have investigated Amdocs more than once. The firm has repeatedly and adamantly denied any security breaches or wrongdoing. But sources tell Fox News that in 1999 the super-secret National Security Agency, headquartered in northern Maryland, issued what's called a Top Secret/Sensitive Compartmentalized Information report, TS/SCI, warning that records of calls in the United States were getting into foreign hands -- in Israel, in particular.

Indeed, there has been more than one warning about the misuse of confidential communications. Law enforcement officials have reported that they are certain that their own communications have been intercepted by criminals they were investigating. They believe that the interception of their communications has led to the murder of several of their confidential informants and otherwise has hampered their investigations of illegal drug distribution by crime syndicates. And I should mention that the fastest-growing illegal drug syndicate in the United States during the past decade is the syndicate that distributes the drug known as "Ecstasy." This syndicate is entirely Jewish, and most of the Jews in the illegal distribution of "Ecstasy" in the United States are Israeli nationals. No wonder that business has been good for them!

Well, Jewish organized crime got a big boost in 1994, during the Clinton administration, with the passage of a new law, the so-called "Communications Assistance for Law Enforcement Act," or CALEA for short. What the public was told about CALEA is that it would increase public safety by providing new tools for the cops to go after the bad guys. It would centralize and expedite the business of wiretapping, making it easier for law enforcement to eavesdrop on communications between criminals -- well, to tell the truth, easier to eavesdrop on everybody. The key to CALEA was its centralizing of wiretap operations, so that now any law-enforcement official in the country who needs a wiretap knows where to go. He goes to a private company that specializes in providing wiretapping services and equipment. Now I will quote again from a Fox News report. This one was broadcast last week:

The company is Comverse Infosys, a subsidiary of an Israeli-run private telecommunications firm, with offices throughout the U.S. It provides wiretapping equipment for law enforcement. Here's how wiretapping works in the U.S.

Every time you make a call it passes through the nation's elaborate network of switchers and routers run by the phone companies. Custom computers and software, made by companies like Comverse, are tied into that network to intercept, record, and store the wiretapped calls and at the same time transmit them to investigators.

The manufacturers have continuing access to the computers so they can service them and keep them free of glitches. This process was authorized by the 1994 Communications Assistance for Law Enforcement Act, or CALEA. Senior government officials have now told Fox News that while CALEA made wiretapping easier, it has led to a system that is seriously vulnerable to compromise and may have undermined the whole wiretapping system....

[T]he complaint about this system is that the wiretap computer programs made by Comverse have, in effect, a back door through which wiretaps themselves can be intercepted by unauthorized parties.

Adding to the suspicions is the fact that in Israel Comverse works closely with the Israeli government and under special programs gets reimbursed for up to 50 per cent of its research and development costs by the Israeli Ministry of Industry and Trade. But investigators within the DEA, INS, and FBI have all told Fox News that to pursue or even suggest Israeli spying through Comverse is considered career suicide.

Now I'll repeat just the last sentence of that quote from the December 17 Fox News report:

Investigators within the Drug Enforcement Administration, the Immigration and Naturalization Service, and the Federal Bureau of Investigation have all told Fox News that to pursue or even suggest Israeli spying through Comverse is considered career suicide.

Did you get that? And the Fox News report goes on to say that every FBI inquiry into Comverse has been halted before the actual equipment could be tested for leaks.

And that's not all that's been halted. This series of Fox News reports by reporter Carl Cameron from which I have quoted was available on the Internet from the Fox News Web site through the early part of last week. The report I just quoted, which was the third in what was intended to be a four-part series, was posted on December 17. But as you can imagine our "chosen" minority did not like the series. A December 20 story from the Jewish Telegraphic Agency says:

Jewish organizations have been receiving frantic calls from Jews concerned that the reports may fuel anti-Semitism.

Did you get that? The Fox News reports were making Jews "frantic." The Jewish Telegraphic Agency story also says:

American Jewish leaders and Israeli officials said they are holding conversations with Fox News representatives but refused to elaborate.

Well, that JTA story was from December 20, and apparently the "conversations" between Jewish leaders and Fox News were effective, because within 24 hours the Fox News series on Israeli spying was cancelled, and the three installments that already had been broadcast were yanked from the Internet and dropped into the memory hole as if they never had existed. You'll look for them in vain at the Fox News site now. The only places you'll find them are on sites that copied them from the Fox News sites before Fox News was pressured into pulling them.

To me the most interesting information in this Fox News series really is old news to a lot of people in the government and the media. The FBI and other government agencies knew what these Jewish companies, Amdocs and Comverse Infosys, were doing a long time ago. They knew that Israeli organized crime was getting information about U.S. government, business, and private telephone conversations and also about U.S. law enforcement wiretaps and was using this information for criminal purposes to the detriment of Americans. They also knew that they were supposed to pretend that they didn't know, or else: career suicide.

The only Politically Correct position for the bureaucrats and politicians and media people to take is that Jews are just like us, except for a different religion, and that Israelis are just like Americans, with the same values and interests we have. Israel is our brave, friendly, little democratic ally. To suggest that the Jews not only are fundamentally and irremediably different from us but that they have been, since Old Testament times, in a state of undeclared war with the rest of the world, a war waged primarily through deception and betrayal and behind-the-scenes influence, and that Israel is no ally but is a vampire clinging to America's back and sucking our blood while betraying us at every turn -- to suggest this basic truth simply is unthinkable to this career-oriented crowd. So the politicians and bureaucrats looked on the Israeli access to our telephone information and the misuse of this information as merely a detail, an aberration, not to be mentioned lest it damage U.S.-Israeli relations -- and their careers, whereas to me it is one more confirmation of a basic and cosmically important truth.

Actually, the Jews reported by the Jewish Telegraphic Agency as screaming frantically about the series of Fox News reports weren't worried primarily about the revelations as to what Amdocs and Comverse Infosys have been up to. That's something too complicated for the lemmings to understand anyway. What worried the Jews about the Fox News reports was the suggestion that the Israelis knew in advance about the September 11 attack and didn't tell us. That's a betrayal that even the lemmings can understand. That's a betrayal that even the politicians and bureaucrats who take the position I just outlined -- namely, that Jews are just like us and Israel is our ally -- can use as an excuse to change their position. That's what the Jews really are afraid of.

I'll quote one more paragraph from the December 17 Fox News report about the Israeli penetration of our wiretap system:

And what troubles investigators most, particularly in New York, in the counter-terrorism investigation of the World Trade Center attack, is that on a number of cases, suspects that they had sought to wiretap and survey immediately changed their telecommunications processes. They started acting much differently as soon as those supposedly secret wiretaps went into place.

It's information of this sort, hinting that the Israelis not only knew about the September 11 attack in advance but now are doing everything they can to hinder the American investigation into the attack, that the Jews don't want the American people to have. They don't want the American people to know that they have been betrayed by Israel. That is why the Fox News series was cancelled last week and the parts that already had been published were pulled from public access and tossed down the memory hole.

Well, regardless of what eventually comes out about what the Israelis knew before September 11, it is clear that Israel has been engaged in an ongoing betrayal of America. What is an even greater betrayal of America than that, however, is what Attorney General John Ashcroft and George Bush and the rest of the politicians and bureaucrats in Washington have been engaged in throughout their careers.

Journalists and Canadians

A few years ago, when I first began describing the lemming phenomenon, I had the naïve idea that lemmings were mostly a pretty dull bunch: grossly overweight couch potatoes who munched snacks while they watched television and believed everything they were told. I thought that intelligence was a reasonably good guarantee that a person wasn't a lemming. Since then I've learned that isn't true. I believe there probably is some correlation between intelligence and the ability to think independently, on the average, but there certainly are many, many intelligent men and women who are just as much lemmings as the dullest couch potato or baseball fan.

Talking to journalists helped me understand that. Many of the journalists with whom I've spoken in the past few years have been at least a little more intelligent, quicker witted, better educated, and generally more knowledgeable than the average member of the population. My estimate is that, on the average, the journalists for the more important mass media are a bit brighter than bus drivers and retail clerks, but I've met many more independent-minded bus drivers and retail clerks than journalists who could think for themselves. As a class, journalists are the most lemming-like professionals I've encountered. Virtually all of them march in ideological lockstep. There may be an independent-minded journalist somewhere, but I haven't yet met him.

When I first began to realize the uniform nature of journalistic thinking I wondered whether it was crookedness instead of lemming behavior I was seeing. I wondered whether journalists are simply a corrupt, mercenary, amoral bunch, who tell whatever lies they are paid to tell and follow whatever party line the owner of their newspaper or television network lays down for them. I suspected that there might be some editorial directive I hadn't seen that instructs newspaper writers and editors that in any story they publish about me the word "hate" must be used at least once in the headline and at least twice in every paragraph of text. There are certain buzzwords that are used so consistently and predictably, "hate" or its derivatives being the most common, that it seems unlikely that every journalist would have hit on them independently and begun using them of his own volition.

Well, to make a long story short, I'm sure that there are plenty of corrupt journalists, but the more experience I have with journalists generally the more I'm inclined to believe that in most cases they really are lemmings. They really believe the nonsense they say on television or write for their newspapers. It's not just that they're paid to do that; they really are incapable of believing anything except the party line. Maybe so many journalists, even bright ones, are lemmings because journalism departments at universities deliberately weed out the independent thinkers.

Well, maybe, but I'm not much of a believer in giant conspiracies, involving many people and crossing ethnic boundaries. If journalism students are selected for their lemming-like characteristics, I suspect that the selection is unconscious rather than calculated. Which is to say, journalism professors are lemmings themselves and they favor the more lemming-like students. More likely, it is the fundamental nature of the profession that guarantees that nearly all of them will think alike. Journalism, after all, is a fundamentally extroverted profession. Journalists spend all their lives talking with other people and writing about other people. They are less private and more highly socialized than the people in most other lines of work.

I've tried to talk about this and related subjects with journalists, but usually I haven't had much luck. So my own writing about the mass media has focused less on what makes Gentile reporters tick so uniformly than on what motivates their employers, the Jewish media bosses. With more than 3,000 years of Jewish history to provide examples, the motivation of the media bosses is easier to understand and to explain.

Last month, however, something came to light that I found very interesting in this regard. As you may be aware, the mass media in Canada are as much under Jewish control as in the United States. The undisputed top media mogul in Canada is Israel Asper, who is commonly known by his nickname "Izzy." With his sons Leonard and David and other family members, Izzy Asper owns CanWest Global Communications Corporation.

A Gentile, Conrad Black, also used to be a major player in the Canadian media, but a little over a year ago Black's Southam News, Inc., was bought out by Izzy. CanWest now owns more than 60 per cent of Canada's newspapers and other media outlets. That's more than 60 per cent of all of Canada's mass media in the hands of one Jew. Included are 14 metropolitan dailies and 128 local newspapers across the country, including the Vancouver Sun, the Vancouver Province, the Calgary Herald, and the Montreal Gazette. CanWest also owns the National Post, which is distributed throughout Canada. In addition Izzy owns media in the United States, Australia, New Zealand, and Northern Ireland.

Last month Izzy issued a written directive to his newspapers, instructing them that from now on they must print nothing critical of Israel or of Israeli actions or policies. This is a rare thing. Usually directives of this sort are oral only, and great care is taken to keep them from coming to the attention of the public. But Izzy, with even more brass than is customary for his tribe, made his directive public. He announced that, beginning three weeks ago, December 12, the editorial content of all of his newspapers would be homogenized, and they all would be pro-Israel.

Now here's the interesting part: if all of Izzy's Gentile underlings were simply corrupt -- were simply paid mercenaries who wrote what they were told to write -- then there would be no controversy; all of the local editors and reporters and columnists simply would follow orders. But there is a controversy. A group of reporters and writers at the Montreal Gazette have rebelled, at least for the moment. One of them, Bill Marsden, an investigative reporter, revealed on a Canadian Broadcasting Corporation radio program called "As It Happens" that his editor at the Gazette had instructed him never to report anything that might reflect badly on Israel. Paraphrasing Izzy's directive, Marsden said:

We do not run in our newspaper op-ed pieces that express criticism of Israel and what it is doing in the Middle East.

Marsden and 54 other reporters at the Montreal Gazette went on strike in protest at what they describe as undue corporate interference with freedom of the press.

Their strike has infuriated Izzy. Izzy's son David characterized the striking reporters as "childish" and "self-righteous." He said:

Why don't they just quit and have the courage of their convictions? Maybe they should go out and, for the first time in their lives, take a risk, put their money where their mouth is, and start their own newspaper.

How's that for chutzpah, as the Jews like to call it? One can read in David Asper's reaction to the reporters the thought, "How dare these mere Gentiles, these mere goyim, question what we, God's Chosen People, decide should be the party line for Canada's newspapers! How dare they!" I mean it's not just that Izzy owns the Montreal Gazette, and so he is entitled to set the editorial policy, and other newspapers can set different policies. Izzy thinks that he is entitled to set the editorial policy for all of Canada's newspapers and determine what all Canadians think.

The man chosen by the Aspers to write the editorials for all of their newspapers is Murdoch Davis. When asked by "As It Happens" whether or not one of CanWest's newspapers would be permitted to buck the party line on Israel, Davis replied:

No. It is clearly the intent that the newspapers will speak with one voice on certain issues of overarching national or international importance.

When asked specifically whether or not one of the Asper newspapers would be permitted to raise the question of Israel's long-standing violation of international law and its defiance of UN resolutions calling for withdrawal from illegally occupied Palestinian territory, Davis again responded in the negative.

So that's the present situation with freedom of the press in Canada: not really very different from the situation in the United States. So what about the mentality of journalists? The fact that the reporters at the Montreal Gazette are protesting Izzy's directive that they can report nothing negative about Israel indicates that they are not entirely mercenary. To me, however, it does not indicate that they are independent thinkers. I believe that they are as much lemmings as the dullest couch potato or sports fan. What caused their protest was the arrogant and contemptuous way in which the Aspers went about reconciling two conflicting elements in the Jewish party line.

On the one hand journalists have been taught that the United Nations is a splendid and admirable organization, whose resolutions should be obeyed. They also have been taught that all races and ethnic groups are equal -- in fact, essentially the same -- but that racial minorities and underdogs generally deserve our special sympathy, and that in any conflict with a ruling group the underdogs are in the right. That's standard liberal dogma. You have to believe that in order to be a journalist. On the other hand, journalists have been taught that Jews are wonderful people who can do no wrong, and that to think otherwise is anti-Semitism, which is as bad as or worse than racism.

It's hard enough reconciling the elevated status of Jews with the concept of racial and ethnic equality, but most journalists by working at it are able to do it -- except where the conflict between Jews and Palestinians is concerned. That requires a special effort and really careful handling by their Jewish bosses.

How do you explain to a journalist who already believes all of the liberal dogma that if Iraq ignores a UN resolution it should be bombed into the Stone Age and then starved into submission with a rigid trade embargo, but if Israel ignores 14 UN resolutions we should respond by sending the Israelis more military and economic aid?

How do you explain to a journalist who has been taught that when South Africa used to be a White country and practiced apartheid, and the South African police sometimes beat information out of captured Black terrorists, it was a terrible thing and had to be condemned in the strongest terms, but when Israel practices apartheid, assassinates Palestinian leaders, and tortures Palestinian prisoners, nothing should be said about it?

How do you explain to a journalist that it is an intolerable threat to the security of the world if some Muslim country develops weapons of mass destruction, and the United States is justified in a preemptive strike to destroy the weapons production facilities, but when a psychotic little country like Israel builds an arsenal of chemical, nuclear, and biological weapons, using materials and technology stolen from us, it's OK, and we should ignore it?

How do you explain to a journalist steeped in the tenets of feminism that he shouldn't say anything about Israel's booming slave trade in girls and women kidnapped from eastern Europe and forced to work as sex slaves?

How do you explain to a journalist who believes wholeheartedly in egalitarianism that it's perhaps regrettable but certainly excusable when Jews rocket Palestinian villages and use Palestinian children for target practice, but it's "terrorism" and completely unjustifiable when the Palestinians hit back?

Believe me, explaining these things is tricky, but it can be done, if it's done with patience and care. It can be done, because when it comes to matters of faith, a lemming really isn't rational. He's quite capable of believing two mutually contradictory things at the same time. The problem that brought on the mini-rebellion at the Montreal Gazette is that Izzy wasn't patient and careful. He was arrogant and contemptuous of his Gentile reporters. But they'll get over it, I'm sure. They always do. They're lemmings.

But, as I said, what is happening now in Canada is interesting. It gives us insight into the workings of journalists' minds, and it also brings out into the open not only the monopoly Jewish control of the Canadian mass media but also the way in which that control is used to slant the news and Canadian public opinion so as to serve Jewish interests to the detriment of Canadian interests.

Do you think that any of these revelations will be of benefit to Canadians? Will the average Canadian say, "Oh, my goodness! I didn't realize that one man, and a Jew at that, controls more than 60 per cent of all the mass media in Canada and is using that control to deceive Canadians as to what is happening in the Middle East. That's terrible! We'd better have our lawmakers do something to break up this media monopoly, so that we will have a better chance to learn the truth about what's happening in the world when we read a newspaper or watch a television news program."

What do you think? I think that about 98 per cent of Canadians won't even look up from their ball games. I think that there's not a politician in Canada who will dare go up against Izzy Asper. This whole tempest at the Montreal Gazette will blow over in a few days, and all of Izzy's newspapers and other media will toe the party line as if nothing had happened.

And now I'm talking only to the two or three or four per cent of Canadians -- and also to the two or three or four per cent of Americans -- who aren't so absorbed in their ball games that they don't notice things like this and don't really care either. I'm talking to the small portion of the White population in both countries -- and in fact, in countries around the world -- who do notice and do care. I want you to understand that this is the way nations lose their freedom. More than that, this is the way races become extinct.

The majority of the population in Canada and the United States and in every country in Europe consists of lemmings, who always have been manipulated by whoever is in power. For approximately the last 100 years the power to manipulate the thinking of the lemmings -- of the masses, if you prefer -- has been shifting from the authority figures in the government and in the churches to the people who control the mass media. These days the people who control the media also control the government for all practical purposes, and the churches have become irrelevant, which is why the Canadian government won't try to break up Izzy's media monopoly and why the politicians in the United States will never go beyond pretending to be concerned about too much sex and violence on television when they have a mock fight with the media.

Controlling a country's mass media doesn't mean just being able to exert a decisive influence on a country's foreign policy, as Izzy Asper is doing in Canada, and as his fellow Jews long have done in the United States. It doesn't mean just getting a country involved in unnecessary wars and subjecting its citizens to retaliatory terrorist attacks. It means influencing immigration policy. It means influencing educational policy. It means influencing social policy. It means being able to control the way most of a country's people think about everything: about race and morality and lifestyles and other countries and freedom and the meaning of life. Most of the degenerative changes that have taken place in America and in Canada since the Second World War have been consequences of Jewish media influence. As that influence continues to grow, the chances of our people being able to throw off the yoke and regain control of our own destiny become smaller and smaller.

In Canada at the moment, Izzy Asper's surfeit of chutzpah has brought to the attention of the public -- that is to the attention of that small portion of the public that cares about such things -- his monopoly control of Canada's mass media and his intent to use those media for Jewish propaganda purposes. Light has been cast on this grave situation because most journalists are lemmings, and a few of them are chattering excitedly now about things such as "freedom of the press." Really, the whole debate is silly. Canada had no freedom of the press even before Izzy got his greedy hands on most of Canada's newspapers. For years it has been illegal in Canada to publish anything considered "racist" or "anti-Semitic" or even Politically Incorrect. When a Canadian buys copies of any of my books and they are mailed to him, the Canadian secret police confiscate them at the border. Publicly challenging the details of the Jewish "Holocaust" story can result in a prison term for a Canadian. Canada's journalists thought all of that -- stopping "hate," as they called it -- was just fine. Pretty soon they will realize that requiring all mass media to say only nice things about what the Jews are doing to the Palestinians is also part of the noble effort to stop "hate," and that also will be just fine with them.

We can't change the nature of lemmings. Someone always will manipulate them. What is of the utmost importance is who it is that manipulates them, because whoever that is will determine the course taken by the whole society, by the nation, by the race. In the past, when it was a king or a pope or a dictator who set the party line, many mistakes were made, sometimes due to selfishness or irresponsibility, sometimes due to ignorance or carelessness or stupidity or prejudice. But at least the people setting the party line for the masses were our people, members of our own race. Now, increasingly, the arbiters of the party line are Jews or people wholly under Jewish influence. And the Jews, as always, are looking out only for their own interests, not for ours. To them we are merely tools to be used in advancing their interests.

And that's at best. At worst they are pursuing policies intended not only to advance their interests, but also to destroy us. Don't try to debate this matter with the Jews; they will, of course, deny it. Just look at the policies they have been pushing for the past 50 years and where those policies have been taking us. Just consider the facts, not their specious arguments designed to keep you demoralized and non-resisting.

My fellow Americans and my fellow Canadians: we are in a bad situation. Let us stop ignoring it. Let us begin deciding what we're going to do about it. I'm doing what I can do in speaking out about it and getting others to speak out. You must decide what you are able and willing to do and then begin doing it.

What Is Moral?

A few days ago I spoke with a friend who is a historian and a writer and is interested in many of the things we discuss on these weekly broadcasts. He congratulated me on the growing influence of American Dissident Voices. He said:
Many more people than you realize listen to your broadcasts. They mail the texts to many other people. I meet many people at universities and in other countries as well as here in southern California who listen to your broadcasts and talk about them with each other.

My response was: "Then where are these people when I need them? Why don't I hear from more of them? Don't they realize that I can't continue doing these broadcasts all by myself forever? The country is going down the drain, and all that these people you mention are doing is talking about my broadcasts and sitting on their hands. Why don't they help? Are they afraid that they'll be kicked out of the country club if they associate with me?"

My historian friend said that it isn't fear that keeps these people from contacting me; it is their moral concerns. In the past, he said, my broadcasts were very harsh, very brutal. I talked about ethnic cleansing and approved of genocide and other things that these people find shocking, he said. They won't support any cause unless they feel that it is a just cause. They think that I am willing to hurt too many people. They feel that I have no Christian constraints. They would rather commit suicide than become associated with an unjust cause, my friend told me.

I responded to him: "Don't these people believe that making a decent world for future generations of our people is a just cause? Don't they believe that preventing the extinction of our race and our civilization is a just cause?"

My friend didn't really have a good answer for that, but I gathered from his response that he believes my approach to our problems is too "rough," too uncivilized, too un-Christian for the people he talks with, and it makes them uncomfortable. Then he congratulated me on becoming more acceptable in the last year than I was before. He says that I do talk now about the issues in a way that is easier for these people to relate to, and he thinks that has a lot to do with the fact that more people are listening to the programs now and discussing them with their friends.

Since this conversation with my friend a little more than a week ago I've been thinking hard about what he said. I believe that I understand what he said, but I don't really agree with him. I don't really believe that it is very meaningful to say that Christian constraints make the academics and other perceptive people he knows hold back from the necessarily unpleasant solutions to our race's problems. In the first place, most of these people aren't really Christians. They were raised in a Christian environment, and Christian moral doctrine may still have a subconscious effect on them, but most of them are fairly intelligent and sophisticated people. I believe that a reasonably high percentage of the pilots and other military officers that the Bush government, and a long line of governments before that, have sent to blast Afghan villages to smithereens or to bomb a European city like Belgrade or to carpet-bomb German cities are Christians: a higher percentage, anyway, than among the academics and other people that my friend talks with. I also think that most of them have no qualms of conscience about what they do for a living. And these pilots, most of them, are not Neanderthal rednecks or bloody-minded sadists. They are university graduates who are loving husbands and caring fathers. In the past, Christians -- American Christians -- repeatedly have shown themselves quite capable of doing the most atrocious and bloody things without hesitation.

The key, I believe, is social rather than religious or moral. The concern, I believe, is not about whether a cause is "just" or not, whatever that means, but whether it is socially acceptable or not: that is, socially acceptable in the peer group to which the person belongs who claims to be concerned about the justness of my cause. To tell the truth, I don't believe that I have changed or moderated or "softened" my message during the past year. I always have tried to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, and I don't hold back from stating unpleasant facts or conclusions any more today than I did a year ago.

I do try to avoid being unnecessarily offensive. I don't ordinarily use the word "nigger" in talking about racial matters, for example, because it makes so many people flinch, and I can be completely clear in what I want to say without using that word. But that is no more true today than it was five years ago. I've always tried to avoid being unnecessarily offensive.

I think that what has changed is not my message but the social environment. I believe that the social environment of most of the writers and professors and others who talk about my broadcasts but won't talk with me has shifted enough during the past couple of years so that hard facts about race and the Jews are a little more acceptable than before. I think that reality is not quite as déclassé as it was a year or two ago.

You know, I believe that I know these people about as well as anyone. I never was very fashion-conscious myself, even before I began saying unfashionable things. I never worried much about whether I was wearing the latest style in cuff links or neckties, and occasionally my socks wouldn't match. I probably would have been classified as a "nerd" by most fashion-conscious people today. But I was a university professor, and I generally behaved in a socially approved manner. I could even figure out which fork to use for the salad in most cases, and I didn't slurp my soup or wipe my greasy fingers on my shirt or the tablecloth.

If there was a difference between me and most of my peers, I think it was this: they took the conventions and taboos by which we lived a little more seriously than I did. I think that I appreciate these things more now than I did then. Now I understand that conventions and good manners and politeness and gentlemanly behavior are important in a structured, well functioning society. But they are not the most important things. Honesty and facing reality without evasion are more important than politeness.

In the early 1960s, we all saw the society in which we lived coming unraveled. We all could look ahead and see that very bad things were likely to be encountered just down the road if present trends continued. But it was not entirely acceptable to talk frankly about these things. That is, it made many of my peers uncomfortable to talk frankly about where racial integration was taking America. It made them even more uncomfortable to talk about the Jewish role in the dangerous policies being pursued by the government. I think that social conditioning was more important than Christianity or any other ethical considerations in imposing these constraints.

We didn't feel personally threatened by Blacks, and the people who were personally threatened were the White manual workers at the bottom of the White social ladder, who reacted to the threat in ways that seemed very vulgar and uncouth to us. To us, Blacks were still the underdogs, and it seemed uncharitable to most of my peers for Whites to attack Blacks for wanting to better their positions. The media-generated image of sweaty, unshaven Ku Klux Klansmen and other rednecks screaming insults at peacefully marching Black demonstrators was an unpleasant one that made us squirm. We certainly didn't want to put ourselves in the same boat with the Ku Kluxers and other working-class Whites who were behaving in such an ungentlemanly manner.

I not only understood the feeling of my peers back in the 1960s; I shared it. Standing on a street corner and screaming insults at Blacks or shouting "White power!" while shaking one's fist or giving a Roman salute was not only rude and impolite, it was low class. I believe that was what made us most uncomfortable. Despite all of the pretensions to democracy and egalitarianism, America was and still is a very class-conscious society. And that is not necessarily a bad thing. I think that in a well-ordered society it is reasonable to expect the more privileged and influential members of the society to have a stricter and more refined code of behavior and to hold themselves apart from those with less-strict codes. And in the early 1960s America still had a reasonably well-ordered society.

As I already mentioned, I was a little less reverent toward things such as the polite behavior expected of academics and professionals than most of my peers were, and so while many of them joined conservative think tanks and respectably conservative debating societies, I decided to say what I thought needed to be said, polite or not. The consequence of that decision was that the Jewish media immediately began doing a hatchet job on me, portraying me as the sort of person that any member of polite society would be ashamed to associate with. And so I spent the next 35 years as an outcast of sorts. It didn't bother me a great deal, because the luxury of being able to tell the whole truth was a bit intoxicating. Of course, I always tried to persuade other professionals to tell the whole truth too, and a few of them did, but not many were willing to take that step.

That's beginning to change a little now, but not, I think, because I have become more polite or more moral. I think that it's because the threat that we all could see way back in the 1960s is no longer distant and theoretical. It is looming darkly over all of us now, not just over the manual workers at the bottom of the White social ladder. But I must say that, even as more professionals are screwing up their courage and choosing truth instead of the country club, I am becoming more impatient with those who still hold back from a full commitment to the struggle for the survival of our race and our civilization.

I don't mean to seem condescending or offensive, but I do think that it is time to quit making excuses that claim moral reservations. It is time to face the fact that what is holding you back is not morality but fear: the fear of being labeled a "hater" or a "neo-Nazi" by the media, the fear of being thought uncouth or low class for finally admitting that those low-class Whites who were screaming obscenities at Black demonstrators in the 1960s and who were using the word "nigger" were right. We didn't have to stand on street corners and do things in the low-class way the Klan did, but we were obliged to do something -- we were obliged to do whatever our positions and our abilities enabled us to do most effectively -- and most of us dodged that obligation.

Let's talk about morality and just causes for a moment. I believe that the most common "moral reservation" I hear from the shirkers is that the solutions to our problems that I talk about entail the punishment of the innocent with the guilty. Intelligent people tell me that they agree that we should have a separation of the races. But, they protest, not all Blacks will go voluntarily to some African country, and many of those who won't want to go are hard-working, law-abiding Blacks. And the same is true for the mestizos who won't want to go back to Mexico or El Salvador. And what about the mixed-race children, whose mothers were persuaded by Hollywood or MTV to let Blacks impregnate them? How can we possibly have a White society again without hurting millions of people?

And my answer is that we can't, and you must decide whether it is more moral to stand aside and permit Western civilization and the race that built that civilization over the millennia to become extinct in the very near future, or to hurt many people, White as well as non-White, to ensure that both the race and the civilization survive.

When our ancestors arrived in America from Europe in the 16th, 17th, 18th, and 19th centuries, they encountered intense opposition from the Indians, which was natural enough, since the Indians were here first and didn't want us taking their land. But after the first few massacres of White settlers by Indians, our ancestors rolled up their sleeves and virtually exterminated the Indians, and I don't think they had to do a lot of moral agonizing about it first. And it wasn't a gentlemanly war either. We deliberately left smallpox-infected blankets for the Indians to find, knowing that the Indians had no natural resistance to the disease. When we raided Indian villages we killed everybody, young and old, male and female, just like they did when they raided a White settlement. To our ancestors, the choice was: get rid of the Indians, or give up and go back to Europe. I doubt that moral qualms led many to go back to Europe so as not to have to kill Indians. To virtually all of them it was more moral to conquer the land for their descendants and to increase the territory and the power of their race than to let the Indians keep the land. Theirs was the morality of survival, the morality of life.

A couple of things have changed since those days. First, we had a much stronger sense of identity, a much stronger sense of racial community, then than now. When it was a matter of Whites versus Indians, everyone knew whose side he was on. Second, we lived much closer to Nature then. We had not been softened by so much security and so many comforts, and reality was something we had to deal with every day in order to survive.

Actually, I've oversimplified this example of Whites versus Indians. By the 19th century some East Coast White liberals had decided they were on the Indian side. They were Whites who had been safely established in the cities for a couple of generations and softened thereby, and they didn't have to face Indians on the frontier. They wrote books, gave lectures to groups of gentlemen, and preached Sunday sermons to the credulous that idealized the Indians as "noble savages," ignored the horrible atrocities committed by the Indians against White settlers, and emphasized White depredations against the Indians. Fortunately, by the time their activities began to have much effect on public opinion or government policy, the Indians were pretty well finished; otherwise the population of the United States today might look much like that of Mexico.

Today the process is somewhat similar, but in reverse. Back in the 1960s nearly all of us already were too soft, too comfortable, too secure, and the propagandists for a new morality, the morality of surrender and death, already had poisoned our souls. We had to treat the Blacks fairly, we believed. We must not accuse the good Jews along with the bad Jews, along with the Zionists. We must not advocate anything that would punish the innocent with the guilty. We had to have a just cause before we could do anything. But now, with the hour of decision at hand, with the grim reality of racial extinction before us, some of us are beginning to understand that the morality of survival is a higher morality than the morality of fairness. I hope that the books I have written, and the lectures and sermons I have been giving, as unpolished and ungentlemanly as they are, have had some small part in bringing this understanding to some of our people.

It is time now for the polite chatter at fashionable dinners and cocktail parties to give way to hardheaded talk and planning aimed at saving our people and saving our civilization, no matter what it takes, no matter how unfair we must be in claiming this planet for our descendants. Perhaps the polite and gentlemanly Americans holding back now may find some much-needed courage in news of developments in polite circles overseas. In Britain, for example, the Jews and their hangers-on in the government and the media have been complaining bitterly for the past month about a remark the French ambassador, Daniel Bernard, made at a very polite dinner party in London. Ambassador Bernard described Israel as "that shitty little country" and asked, "Why should we be in danger of World War Three because of these people?"

The Jews are bemoaning the fact that not only did Bernard have the courage to make that comment, but that others at the dinner party agreed with him. I'll quote from a story in the December 23 issue of the London newspaper, The Independent:

Representatives of Britain's Jews fear that "polite society" is embracing anti-Semitism and making it appear acceptable. It is being nurtured, they say, around the dinner tables of London's "chattering classes" where Jew- and Israel-bashing has, according to some, become de rigueur. Jo Wagerman, the president of the Board of Deputies of British Jews, said: "Anti-Semitism is raising its head again. It has become acceptable for the first time in 50 years. People who have a respectable veneer can express these views in public and now get support rather than condemnation. I think much of what is expressed is anti-Zionist in content but within that is a very strong anti-Semitic element."

And it's not just polite society in Britain and in France that is beginning to talk at least a bit more frankly about the world's Jewish problem. Academics, journalists, government officials, and intellectuals throughout the Muslim world, from Iran to Indonesia, are showing increasing willingness to speak out not just about Israel and not just about so-called "Zionists," but about all Jews, about Jews as a race whose monomaniacal scheming poses an enormous danger to the whole world. There always has been an undercurrent of anti-Jewish thought and feeling in most Muslim countries, but in most cases it was only an undercurrent. In official circles it was denounced. The Jews in America would complain to the U.S. government whenever an anti-Israel cartoon appeared in an Egyptian newspaper or the foreign minister of Syria made an anti-

Jewish comment in public. The U.S. government would obediently threaten the offending country with unpleasant consequences if the offensive behavior continued, and the appropriate officials in that country would promise to crack down on it.

That situation has been changing during the past couple of years, however, and especially since September 11. Now the governments throughout most of the Muslim world no longer are trying to suppress criticism of the Jews but are participating in the effort to inform their people of the Jewish menace. The influential Saudi Arabian daily newspaper, Al-Watan, published a long, two-part article last month, on December 8 and 9, that I might have written myself. It talked about the Jews' ambition to control the world, from Old Testament times to the present. It went into their scheming before the First World War to use the war to advance their interests, and it went into Jewish media control in depth, pointing out that the Jews everywhere work to undermine the racial and national solidarity of their host countries. Al-Watan, like all of the newspapers in Saudi Arabia, is financed by the government. And at least one major Islamic newspaper in the United States, Muslims, published in New York, has been reprinting the texts of several of these American Dissident Voices broadcasts. The chattering classes in America may be a bit behind those in France and Britain and Saudi Arabia, but I do have hopes that they will begin catching up -- soon.

The Culture of Lies

A time-honored saying is, "All is fair in love and war." Certainly, it seems a reasonable saying and one in accord with Nature. It expresses the fact that when at war even otherwise honorable men resort to trickery, deceit, and outright lying. In a strictly personal conflict a man may feel obliged by his sense of honor to be truthful; at least, it used to be that way before we got so much democracy and multiculturalism, and we still had some understanding of the concept of personal honor. But when a nation or a race is at war, and survival depends upon victory -- or at least, upon avoiding defeat -- a man must think of more than his personal honor; he must put the survival of his people above all else, and he must do whatever is necessary to win.

It's stretching things a bit, however, when we lie in order to make our job of beating up someone much smaller and weaker a little easier for us. When our government lies not because it's a matter of national survival but just for the sake of convenience, that should be troubling for all of us. That's the case of our propaganda war in Afghanistan, for example. We drop leaflets with doctored photographs and lies all over the place, in order to turn the people against their former Taliban leaders and Osama bin Laden. We should be saying simply, "We're coming for you, Osama bin Laden, and we'll get you." Instead, we try to make our job easier by lying outrageously.

Well, lying is the way of democrats and multiculturalists -- and that includes Republicans -- but I question whether or not it really makes our job easier. We air-dropped leaflets on Afghanistan with a phony photograph of Osama bin Laden wearing a Western suit and with his beard shaved and his hair cut short and announced that he had given up the fight so that he could escape to a life of luxury and ease in the West. That really didn't fool anyone, and it was a completely unnecessary lie. Then a little later Mr. Bush produced a video tape that he claimed had been found in an al-Quaida hideout and showed Osama bin Laden confessing, in effect, to the September 11 attack. Should we be surprised when Muslims all over the Middle East don't believe Bush and denounce the video tape as phony?

Actually, I believe it very likely that Osama bin Laden was behind the September 11 attack, and I think most Muslims believe that too. But I and a lot of other people are very skeptical about Mr. Bush's very convenient video tape. Perhaps it's genuine, but I'm not inclined to believe that just because George Bush or Donald Rumsfeld or any other lying politician says it is.

The fact is that politicians are so accustomed to lying about everything that they don't even stop to consider the consequences of their lies. If a lie seems more convenient than the truth at any moment, they lie -- and not just to little people they're beating up at the moment. American politicians will lie just as readily to their fellow Americans as they will to Afghans or Pakistanis. And one can hardly blame them, because the American people have come to expect it of them and don't seem to hold it against them. Teddy Kennedy murdered his girlfriend Mary Jo Kopechne and lied outrageously about it, and yet he's still in the U.S. Senate today. Bill Clinton lied outrageously about nearly everything, and the voters reelected him.

And as I said, it's not just Democratic politicians. George Bush may not be as skillful a liar as Bill Clinton, but he's just as much a liar. That's the democratic way. We live in a culture of lies, a culture shaped for us by the controlled mass media, in which lying not only is acceptable, it is required whenever it helps the cause of Political Correctness. Consider the current twittering in New York about the 19-foot bronze statue being erected in honor of the city's firemen. The statue is based on a news photograph of three New York firemen raising an American flag, Iwo Jima style, on a mound of rubble at the site of the former World Trade Center. The three firemen who raised the flag are all White men, as are 94 per cent of New York City's firemen, and the Whiteness of the firemen raising the flag can be seen quite clearly in the news photograph.

Well, that's a Politically Inconvenient fact, and so the 19-foot statue based on the photograph will show one Negro fireman, one mestizo fireman, and one White fireman raising the flag. Naturally, the White firemen who actually raised the flag on the rubble were not happy when they saw the multicultural model for the statue, and neither were many of their fellow White firemen.

Tough luck. I suspect that the media bosses, the politicians, and the Jewish businessmen who favor the multicultural statue will have their way, and groups of schoolchildren who are shown the statue will be told that it's an actual depiction of the flag-raising. I'm surprised they didn't include a female fireman and an Asian fireman helping to raise the flag and show a couple of gay firemen fondling each other in the background.

Perhaps it's unfair of me to put too much blame on politicians and Jewish businessmen for this sort of lying and distortion of reality for the sake of Political Correctness. Gentile businessmen seem about as willing to lie as Jewish businessmen. Jesse Jackson, the Black rabble rouser, con man, and extortionist whose empire seems to be collapsing now, made a very good living for many years by persuading businessmen -- most of them Gentiles -- to lie about race for him. With the Jewish media backing him, Jackson would threaten White businessmen with Black boycotts unless they multiculturalized their operations to his satisfaction -- and kicked in a nice, big payoff to Jesse himself. Jesse would demand that the White businessmen hire Black executives, picture Blacks in their advertising, and subcontract to Black-owned businesses.

Instead of standing up to Jackson and calling him an extortionist, virtually all of the White businessmen decided it would be cheaper to pay him off, make the changes in personnel and advertising and subcontracting he demanded, and pretend that they liked it. They paid for advertising showing White women cuddling up to Black men in order to please Jesse and pretended that they were doing this of their own free will. They wanted everyone to know that they were on the multicultural bandwagon. To me, this is at least as bad as the sort of lying the politicians do.

And the Gentile academics and publicists are just as crooked these days. There was a bit of nervous twittering among academic historians last month when a supposedly scholarly study of firearms ownership in 18th-century America by an Emory University history professor, Michael Bellesiles, turned out to be fraudulent. Bellesiles claimed to have studied thousands of 18th-century probate records and found that very few American families -- fewer than 10 per cent -- actually owned firearms in the 18th century; therefore, the legislators who wrote the Second Amendment obviously didn't intend to guarantee the right of individuals to keep and bear arms, just militias. Well, that pleased the nutcase feminist gun-control crowd, but as it turned out, Bellesiles had faked it. Professional historians professed embarrassment and outrage over Bellesiles' chicanery, but what Bellesiles did in trying to scuttle the Second Amendment is quite innocuous compared to the fraud committed by thousands of other professional historians, who don't have to worry about being called to account for their deceit.

I'm talking about the historians of the Second World War and related subjects, such as the so-called "Holocaust." Every academic historian worth his salt understands that nearly all the histories of the Second World War are fraudulent through commission, omission, or both, yet almost none of these historians will challenge the fraud in the way Bellesiles' work has been challenged. Why is that?

The reason is that Jews as a whole have a vested interest in the fraudulent version of the war and of the "Holocaust." Anyone who questions even the smallest detail of the fraud is attacked viciously as a "Holocaust denier" or a "Nazi sympathizer." In the case of gun control, nearly all Jews are for it, but they don't have the vested interest in it that they have in the "Holocaust" and a number of other myths about the Second World War. So it is still permissible to be objective in writing about the history of firearms ownership in America -- but it is not permissible to write or teach anything contrary to revealed dogma about the Second World War. Even the historians who aren't partisans of the Jews and who don't want to lie don't have the courage to be truthful.

Imagine that a history professor is teaching his students 20th-century history, and to avoid violating any taboos he teaches the approved, "kosher" version. He teaches that in the years prior to the Second World War the Germans wanted the Jews out of Germany, but he doesn't explain why. He doesn't talk about what the Jewish commissars were doing to Russians and Ukrainians in the Soviet death camps. He doesn't mention the murder of millions of kulaks by the communists, and he doesn't mention the extraordinarily high percentage of Jews in the Soviet bureaucracy and in the Soviet secret police and among the administrators of the Soviet death camps. He doesn't tell his students that while these things were kept quiet by the media in the United States, the media in Germany talked openly about them, and the German people were aware of how the Jews had turned on the helpless Gentiles under communist rule and butchered them by the millions. He leaves his students with the impression that the German desire to get the Jews out of Germany was entirely irrational or was based on jealousy of Jewish wealth and success.

When he talks about the year preceding Pearl Harbor, he is not likely to mention that the Roosevelt government was so hot to get the United States involved in the war against Germany at the behest of the Jews that the United States was waging undeclared war against Germany in the Atlantic, hoping for an "incident" that could be used as a pretext for full-scale hostilities, but that the German Navy was under strict orders not to respond to U.S. provocations, or that when the Pearl Harbor attack came it was more of a surprise to the Germans than it was to the war party in the Roosevelt government, which previously had broken the Japanese naval code. He leaves his students with the impression that the United States wanted only peace, and the Germans wanted only to wage war against us in their mad campaign to conquer the world.

When he talks about the behavior of the various combatants during the war, he is likely to follow the Jewish party line and paint the Germans as barbarians who committed more atrocities than anyone else, and to paint the Jews as the principal victims of the war. He may not feel obliged to repeat all of the more fanciful Jewish lies, such as Jews being skinned by the Germans to make lamp shades and then boiled down to make soap, but he certainly will not describe these lies for what they are, and he will not challenge the central myth of "six million" innocent, blameless Jews killed in "gas ovens" by the wicked Nazis. He will skim lightly over the genocide committed by the Soviets against the Germans, the Poles, the Balts, and other nationalities during and after the war, and he will not even hint at the leading role played by the Jews in this genocide. He is likely to leave his students believing the oft-repeated lie that the so-called "Holocaust" was the greatest crime ever committed.

Is such a history professor less culpable than the most mendacious politician? I think not. And what about the professor of biology or anthropology who, knowing of the profound differences in mentality, in psychology, in inborn behavioral patterns that separate the races, lets his students use a textbook that asserts the sameness of the races and fails to point out this lie? Should he be forgiven for betraying the trust placed in him simply because he wants to keep his job?

As I said, we live in a culture of lies. It's not just the politicians and the businessmen and the teachers and the news reporters who lie to us: it's everyone to whom the Jews have a string tied, and that means most people involved in shaping the popular culture: advertisers and entertainers and editors and publishers and writers and the rest. Here's an example: the February issue of Playboy magazine has been on the newsstands for a couple of weeks now. There's an article in the magazine titled "Virtual Reich," with a subhead that reads:

Fascism is back, featuring a strange cast of Islamic fundamentalists, skinheads, and homegrown terrorists. Here's the sinister part: they're all talking to one another.

It's a trashy article in a trashy magazine, but it mentions me at length, and that was my reason for choosing it as an example. And with a circulation of more than 3 million copies each month and probably half again that many readers, Playboy does have a significant role in the popular culture. The article is almost entirely make-believe. It has a few quotations from things I've written, a few quotations from other people, most of whom I've never met or even corresponded with, and then it throws us all into one pot and stirs us up as if we're part of a giant, worldwide, terrorist conspiracy: me along with Muslim fundamentalists, German and English nationalists, anti-abortionists, Tim McVeigh and Ted Kaczynski, nutcase Christian millennialists, environmental activists, and elderly SS veterans -- just about everyone the Jews don't like. It's not only the basic theme of the article that is wrong -- claiming one giant conspiracy where there is none -- but the details are chock full of errors too. It's clear that no one bothered to check the article for accuracy.

But of course, no one really cared about truthfulness or accuracy in this article: certainly not the publisher or any of Playboy's editors or the author, Mike Reynolds, who used to write for the Southern Poverty Law Center, the ultra-sleazy Jewish propaganda outfit run by direct-mail fund raising huckster Morris Dees. The purpose of the article was to frighten America's Joe Sixpacks and Sally Soccermoms, to send a cold shiver down their spines with the specter of all the bad guys who want to throw a crimp into their mall shopping and ballgame watching, ganging up on them. If you can scare them more easily by lying, then lie.

That's the American spirit these days. The politicians lie, the teachers and professors lie, the media people lie, the businessmen lie, the magazine writers lie, and for the most part the American people don't care. Just keep those shopping malls well stocked and keep plenty of ball games on TV, and they don't care. It's the acquiescence of the American people in all of this lying, rather than the liars themselves, that convinces me that the end times are near. At least, I hope so.

You know, a few minutes ago I mentioned that before the Second World War the Germans wanted to get the Jews out of their country, and I told you part of the reason for that. The Germans saw what the Jews were doing to the Russians and the Ukrainians, and they didn't want to give the Jews a chance to do the same thing to them. From the end of the First World War in 1918 until 1933, there was combat in the streets of Germany's cities between the communists, whose leadership was heavily Jewish, and the Nazis. There was a real danger that the communists would win and take over Germany the way they had taken over Russia. And the German people also knew the role the Jews had had in bringing the United States into the First World War, causing Germany's defeat, and leaving the country open to the possibility of a communist takeover.

But these weren't the only reasons the Germans wanted to be rid of the Jews. The Jews were very influential in Germany after the First World War. They were strongly entrenched in the legal profession, in banking, in advertising and merchandising, in show business, in organized vice, in publishing and other media. They were trying hard to change the spirit of Germany. They were pushing modernism in art, music, and literature. They were pushing for "diversity" and "tolerance." They were ridiculing German tradition and culture and morality and the German sense of personal honor, trying hard to make young Germans believe that it was "cool" to be rootless and cosmopolitan. They were promoting the same culture of lies that they have been promoting here.

That was the so-called "Weimar" period, because right after the First World War some important government business, including the ratification of a new German constitution, took place in the city of Weimar. The Jews loved the Weimar period, but it was, in fact, the most degenerate period in Germany's history. The Jews, of course, didn't think of it as degenerate. They thought of it as "modern" and "progressive" and "cool." Really, it was a very Jewish period, where lying was considered a virtue. The Jews were riding high. Many books have been written by Jews in America about Weimar Germany, all praising it to the skies and looking back on it with nostalgia. Even without the so-called "Holocaust," they never have forgiven the Nazis for bringing an end to the Weimar period.

There was a Hollywood film made 30 years ago, in 1972, about Weimar Germany. The film was called Cabaret, and it starred Liza Minelli. It depicted Berlin nightlife, with all its degeneracy, including the flourishing of homosexuality, and also depicted the fight between the communists and the Jews and the other proponents of modernism on the one hand and the Nazis on the other hand. The Hollywood filmmakers, of course, were solidly on the side of the degenerates and portrayed the Nazis as the bad guys, but this film is another example of the Jews outsmarting themselves. The Jews who made the film saw everything from their viewpoint, through their own eyes, and the degenerate Gentiles under their spell also saw things from the Jewish viewpoint, but the Jews apparently didn't stop to think -- or didn't care -- that a normal, healthy White person would view things differently. Check it out for yourself. Cabaret is still available in video stores.

The point I am making is this: In the 1920s, after the First World War, the Jews were trying to do to Germany what they began doing to America after the Second World War, in the 1960s. Many Germans, the healthiest elements in Germany, resisted the Jews' efforts, just as many Americans have resisted the Jews' efforts in America. In Germany the Jews were a bit premature. Although they had much of the media under their control, they didn't control all of the media. They tried to move too fast. The healthiest Germans resisted and beat them.

In America, in the 1960s, the Jews had almost total media control before they began their big push, and they proceeded more carefully. In America they are winning. The culture of lies has prevailed in America. It's still possible for Americans to win, but it's going to be a lot tougher this time. We'd better get started. The first step is to regain at least partial control of our media, so that we can begin contradicting the lies. This American Dissident Voices broadcast is a part of that first step.

Multicultural Justice

Last Sunday I listened to a Harvard Law School professor advocate a return to the use of torture to extract information and confessions from suspects. The professor was Alan Dershowitz. That's the Jewish lawyer who helped get O.J. Simpson acquitted in 1995 after he cut the throats of his wife and her boyfriend. Ironically, Dershowitz also has a reputation as a civil libertarian.

Dershowitz was interviewed by Mike Wallace on the CBS program 60 Minutes, which made the entire scene appropriately Jewish: a Jewish interviewer, Wallace; a Jewish interviewee, Dershowitz; and a television network owned by the Jew Sumner Redstone. I say "appropriately Jewish" because, despite the waffling and qualifications and opposing opinions about the use of torture by the government to obtain confessions, the net effect of the program -- and really, it was the intended effect -- was to leave viewers with the thought that, although some people are against it, it is not an entirely bad thing for the government to torture suspects, at least in some cases. It is not unthinkable.

Dershowitz's argument is that when torture may save lives it is justified: for example, when the government is holding someone who may have knowledge of a bomb that is set to go off at an undisclosed location. Tear his fingernails out to find out whether or not he really does know something about a bomb. If he admits that he does, then use a red-hot poker to find out where the bomb is and when it is set to go off. Hundreds of lives may be saved. If the poor bastard really didn't know anything about a bomb -- if the secret police had the wrong man -- well, hey, all he's lost are his fingernails. Seems like a reasonable trade-off, doesn't it: one man's fingernails against the possibility of saving hundreds of lives? Alan Dershowitz thinks that's a fair trade. The FBI, which has been hinting that it may need to use torture to do its job of protecting the public from terrorists in the future, thinks it is too. The Israeli government, which tortures Palestinian prisoners whether it suspects they know something about a bomb or not, agrees.

Of course, the people who founded this country and wrote our Constitution thought the government should be prohibited from torturing prisoners under any circumstances. They forbade it absolutely. They were willing to sacrifice lives, including their own, to uphold that and the other provisions of the Constitution. They believed that certain principles are even more important than saving lives.

But, hey, what did they know? They were completely out of touch with the problems we face today. They were all White racists and male chauvinists, and most of them didn't even own flush toilets. How could they know how important it is for us to feel secure from terrorism while we're watching our ball games or shopping in our malls?

OK, let's drop the sarcasm. Alan Dershowitz isn't advocating torture as a means of saving American lives. He believes that torture may be useful here to safeguard Jewish interests, just as it is useful in Israel for that purpose. That's all the man cares about. Fundamentally, he's not a lawyer or a civil libertarian; he's not an American; he's not even a fellow human being. Alan Dershowitz is a Jew, and that says it all. He understands that the United States, by letting itself be used as Israel's bully boy, leaves itself open to further terrorist attacks from Muslims and other victims of Israel. He wants the U.S. government to have all the weapons at its disposal that may be helpful in defeating Israel's enemies. He is convinced that the torture of suspects can be a useful weapon -- as long as those suspects are enemies of Israel, enemies of the Jews, of course.

I'll guarantee you that Dershowitz would be singing quite a different tune if the people we needed to torture in order to find out where the bomb is hidden were Jews. I'll guarantee you that he is not in favor of torturing members of the Jewish Defense League to find out about the next mosque bombing they have planned. I'll guarantee you that he would not have been in favor of torturing the Israeli spy, Jonathan Pollard, to find out all of the U.S. military secrets Pollard stole for Israel and that Israel in turn sold to China. That is likely to cost us many lives some day, but you can be certain that Alan Dershowitz doesn't believe that we should have tortured Pollard in order to gain information that may minimize the number of casualties we'll suffer in a conflict with China.

Well, that's another subject. Today I want to talk about what people like Dershowitz have done to the American system of justice. Scrapping our prohibition against torturing people to make them confess is the least of it. The whole judicial system in this country has become terminally corrupt. Most of the same outward forms are maintained that we had 200 years ago, but in its actual workings and in its spirit the system has been thoroughly corrupted. But instead of talking in generalities about this problem, I'll give you some specific examples.

Six months ago my organization, the National Alliance, organized a public protest demonstration outside the German Embassy in Washington. We were protesting the lack of free speech in Germany. Germans, of course, lost their freedom of speech and their right to keep and bear arms and other freedoms, along with much German territory and many German lives, when they lost the Second World War. Germans are prosecuted these days for writing or saying Politically Incorrect things -- even for being caught listening to Politically Incorrect music or reading Politically Incorrect books. We thought it would be nice to tell the German government that it shouldn't put people in prison for what they say -- that it's time to restore to the German people some of the civil liberties they had until 1945 -- and we also thought that the American public should be made aware of the lack of freedom in Germany. Most Americans don't know that Germans can be imprisoned for what they say, that many Germans are sitting in prison now for having made a Politically Incorrect comment in public.

So my organization held a demonstration outside the German Embassy last July 29 to make a public issue of this lack of freedom in Germany. We did everything strictly according to the law. We obtained a permit for our demonstration from the government of the District of Columbia. We notified the police well in advance, so that they would be prepared to control traffic at the demonstration and maintain order. We showed up at the appointed time and began marching in an orderly fashion along the sidewalk outside the German Embassy with our signs.

Then a gang of 40 or so Jews and communists, many of them wearing masks and carrying weapons, arrived on the scene. Two of these, one a Jew and the other a Caribbean mulatto, attacked the National Alliance member, Billy Roper, who was coordinating the demonstration. In full view of the police and news cameramen, they struck Billy in the head with a tire iron and a heavy lug wrench, cutting a nasty gash above his right eye and breaking a bone in his eye socket.

The police arrested the two attackers at the scene. The two were later identified in the newspaper of the Progressive Labor Party, a violent communist organization, as members of that group. The Progressive Labor Party newspaper praised the actions of its two members and urged more such attacks in order to prevent the National Alliance from holding further public demonstrations.

Despite our protests and all of the evidence presented to the prosecutor, the two communist thugs were charged only with simple assault, a misdemeanor, and they were released from custody on the same day they were arrested. Their trial came up in the Superior Court for the District of Columbia on the eighth of this month. The Assistant U.S. Attorney assigned to prosecute the case was a Negress from Nigeria. The two defense attorneys were Blacks. The judge was a Black. There was no jury, because the two communists asked to be tried by the Black judge only.

During the trial a videotape obtained from a news cameraman was played for the judge. It clearly showed one of the communists swinging a lug wrench at Billy Roper's head, with the other communist kicking him from behind. We also had eyewitnesses who had been at the demonstration, we had Billy Roper's medical records, we had photographs showing blood streaming down Billy's face from his wound, and we had the Progressive Labor Party newspaper bragging about the assault and urging its members to commit more such assaults. The Black judge ignored the evidence and on January 9 acquitted both communists.

Now, I can assure you that if the demonstrators at the German Embassy had been Jews demanding even further restrictions on German freedom, and if two National Alliance members had attacked one of the Jews with a tire iron, and the other circumstances were the same, our two members would have been charged with assault with a deadly weapon, assault resulting in serious bodily harm, assault with intent to kill -- all felonies -- and also with conspiracy to commit all of these felonies. If I had then bragged about the assault on one of my broadcasts, identified the assailants as members of the National Alliance, and urged more such assaults in order to keep the Jews from demonstrating, additional criminal charges of attempting to deny the Jews their civil rights would have been filed, and our two members would be looking now at sentences of 50 years each.

I'll tell you about another real example of the working of our judicial system. The unchecked influx of non-White illegal immigrants into the United States is a problem all across the country, but it is especially irritating to White residents in some areas that have received an unusually heavy influx of illegals, such as the suburbs of New York City. Especially heavily impacted is the Long Island town of Farmingville, where illegal immigrants are to be seen on street corners every morning looking for day labor, and the government does nothing about them. On September 17, 2000, two White men who live in Farmingville decided that they'd had enough. They picked up two illegal mestizos in their truck under the pretense of offering them work, drove them to a vacant building, and gave them a beating.

The two illegal aliens returned to Mexico after that, but the two White men, Chris Slavin and Ryan Wagner, were arrested and charged with assaulting them. Both White men were convicted, and on the ninth day of this month -- the same day the two communist thugs who attacked Billy Roper with a tire iron and a lug wrench were acquitted by a Black judge in the District of Columbia -- a Jewish judge in New York, Stephen Braslow, sentenced 20-year-old Ryan Wagner to 25 years in prison. Earlier, 29-year-old Chris Slavin also was sentenced to 25 years in prison for beating up the two illegal aliens.

It's interesting to compare these two assault cases, which wound up on the same day this month, isn't it? Now, I realize that we never did have a perfect system of justice in America, and that going on trial always was a little like playing Russian roulette. But I think that in the past -- before the Second World War, for example -- judges and juries and prosecutors more often than not actually wanted to see justice done. They wanted to see the guilty punished and the innocent acquitted. It used to be a White man's system, and it worked moderately well.

If 65 or 70 years ago two communist thugs, one a Jew and one a mulatto, had attacked a law-abiding White citizen on a sidewalk in the nation's capital and tried to keep him from peacefully expressing his opinion by beating his head in with a tire iron, they would have been lucky to be sentenced to only 25 years in prison. If 65 or 70 years ago two young White men, exasperated by the failure of the government to keep illegal non-White aliens out of the country, had taken it upon themselves to beat up a couple of them, they might have been fined for disorderly conduct, but they certainly wouldn't have had their lives destroyed by being sentenced to 25 years in prison.

And the difference isn't just that what used to be a White man's justice system is now substantially polluted by a heavy infusion of non-Whites, with Black and Jewish judges and prosecutors everywhere, especially in the eastern metropolitan areas. Everyone in the system, including the Whites, has been corrupted. The Blacks and Jews and other non-Whites are feeling their oats, of course, and are enjoying their opportunity to use the White man's own system against him. They don't even bother to apologize when they commit judicial atrocities of the sort they committed on January 9 that I have cited here. Their attitude is, "Hey, Whitey, we're in charge now, and we're going to stick it to you, and there's nothing you can do about it." And the White lawyers remaining in the system, instead of fighting the corruption, are going along with it. They're not only terrified of being accused of being "racists" if they don't go along; they're jumping on the bandwagon with enthusiasm, as eager to demonstrate their anti-White bias as the Blacks and Jews, and they are sticking it to any poor White person who falls into their clutches in any case that has racial overtones.

Here's another example: Last month two young members of the National Alliance were arrested in Philadelphia and charged with several felonies, including "ethnic intimidation" and something called "institutional vandalism," which is the vandalizing of an "institution," such as a church or a synagogue, and causing more than $5,000 damage. The judge set their bonds at $50,000 each.

What had they actually done? They had put a National Alliance sticker on a "no parking" sign. The sticker said, "Don't catch AIDS!" and warned White women not to have sex with Blacks, citing the fact that heterosexual Black males are 14 times as likely as heterosexual White males to be infected with HIV. Because the sticker mentioned Blacks it was called "ethnic intimidation." Because the "no parking" sign was on a chain-link construction fence around a memorial to Vietnam veterans -- that is, an "institution" -- it was called "institutional vandalism." How the judge figured that more than $5,000 damage was done to the "no parking" sign by a gummed sticker is a mystery.

Actually, in a city such as Philadelphia, which certainly has one of the most corrupt establishments in the country, there's not even an effort made to justify such charges. The local politicians and bureaucrats figure they don't have to justify themselves. They are the law, and you'd better watch out! If you try to exercise what you thought were your Constitutional rights in their town, they'll lock you up in a hurry. And I'm talking now about White politicians and bureaucrats. A Philadelphia-area newspaper, the Burlington County Times, reporting on the arrests, quoted a police captain, Thomas Quinn -- solidly Irish, judging from the name. Said Captain Quinn:

This is not something we're going to take lightly. If you come into the city, and we catch you doing this, you're going to be charged with felonies.

Did you catch that? Captain Quinn says the Philadelphia Police Department isn't going to take it lightly if someone comes into Philadelphia and expresses a Politically Incorrect opinion. If someone puts up a Politically Incorrect sticker he will be charged with felonies. What Captain Quinn meant, but didn't say, is that if you're White, you'll be charged with felonies. Certainly, if you're a Black and you put up a sticker that says "Black Power!" Captain Quinn isn't going to mess with you. No judge is going to charge you with a felony for that. The White judicial and law-enforcement establishment in Philadelphia knows that if a Black got charged with multiple felonies for putting up a sticker, the Blacks would riot, and every Jewish lawyer in the city would be screaming for the offending White police official or judge to be fired.

Philadelphia, like New York and Washington, is undoubtedly a bit worse than most of the rest of the country, but we can see the same tendency everywhere. And you know, it shouldn't be like that. Our Constitutional rights should be respected by the police and the courts without our having to threaten to riot. That's the way it used to be, when we had a White man's system. That's when principles were more important than comfort and security or Political Correctness. What has happened?

I'll tell you what's happened. First, we let Jews infiltrate and begin taking over our mass media: the New York Times, the Washington Post, the weekly news magazines, Hollywood, Madison Avenue, the TV networks, and eventually all the rest. Through the media they began pumping Jewish spiritual poison into our society: egalitarianism and White guilt. This paved the way for the multicultural insanity that has corrupted our justice system and is now destroying Western civilization. In the 1960s this primed our young people for the so-called "counterculture revolution": the revolution in which Jewish gurus taught our young people that principles don't matter; that if it feels good, do it; that only the individual and what he wants is important; that race and nation and tradition and culture are irrelevant; that it's every man for himself.

And so now we have a justice system in America in which not even the White judges and prosecutors care about justice but only about what is good for their careers in a Politically Correct system. And with such a system, it only makes sense to take the next step and begin using torture to get confessions. Jews like Alan Dershowitz will continue to push that idea, a step at a time, and the yahoos who have little American flags tied to their car antennas will cheer the Jews on, believing that it's only Muslim terrorists who will have their fingernails torn out, and that using torture on Muslims will allow the yahoos to watch their ball games in greater safety.

But I'll guarantee you that ultimately it's not just Muslims that Dershowitz and his tribe have in mind when they advocate torture: it's you and I; it's everyone who stands in the way of the total supremacy of their tribe.

One final thought today: Do you remember the enormous hullabaloo back in 1998 when three White men in Jasper, Texas, picked up a Black hitchhiker, beat him up, and then killed him by dragging him behind their truck? The trials of the White men became a media circus, and murder convictions and death sentences were guaranteed, as the local judicial system and also the local White lemmings fell all over themselves to do what the media expected of them.

Late Friday night of last week there was another killing of a hitchhiker in Jasper, Texas. A man was given a ride in a pickup truck by four other men, and when the hitchhiker refused to give them $50 they decided to kill him. They began beating him, and when he tried to escape they chased him along a country road in their truck and ran him down. Then they deliberately ran their truck over him and killed him, leaving his crushed body on the road. The big difference between the killing last week and the one in 1998 is that the victim last week was a White man, 44-year-old Ken Tillery, and the four men who deliberately ran their truck over his body are Blacks. Have you seen or heard anything about this murder in the media? There was a very brief Associated Press report on it this Monday, January 21, but very few newspapers have printed that report. Do you think there will be a big hullabaloo and a show trial with demands for the death penalty the way there was after the 1998 killing? Don't count on it. We now have a multicultural justice system, and we deserve it.

Media-Driven Law

Last week we talked about the corruption of America's judicial system, and I mentioned a few specific examples of this corruption. It's a very big and very important subject, though, and we ought to explore it further.

I'll talk about more examples of corruption in a minute, but first let's look at the general context, at the overall framework of law in American life. The men who founded America and wrote our Constitution understood the need for a government and for laws. They understood that the country couldn't survive, couldn't maintain its identity and its independence, without a government to provide certain essential, collective functions, such as national defense. They also understood the need for laws and a judicial system, without which there will be only mob rule or some other form of tyranny, and civilization cannot flourish.

But the Founding Fathers also were basically suspicious of government. As determined as they were to provide a framework of law that would allow citizens to live without the threat of domination by mobs or tyrants or foreign invaders, they were at least as determined to protect citizens from the unchecked power of government. They believed in the minimum amount of government and the minimum number of laws necessary to protect the independence of the country and the freedom of its citizens and provide for the most essential needs of civilized life. They believed that the government should not restrict the freedom of citizens or intrude upon their private affairs any more than absolutely necessary. They believed that to the greatest degree possible, individual citizens should be responsible for their own behavior and their own welfare. It was not the government's business to tell people how to conduct their own affairs or to keep them from hurting themselves or to take care of them if they wouldn't or couldn't take care of themselves.

Well, of course, such an ideal system couldn't last. Even if the average genetic quality of the population had been maintained, the mere fact of increased population density and increased urbanization required more laws and more government simply to maintain order. And of course, the average quality of the population wasn't maintained. The strongest immigrants were the first to arrive, at a time when there still was a frontier to be conquered and a lot of hard and dangerous work to be done. After the frontier was won and life had become much easier, the weaker, less independent immigrants were willing to try life in America, and things have gone downhill ever since. The Civil War and the subsequent release of millions of freed slaves into the population was a blow to the system from which it couldn't recover without drastic measures, and those measures never came. On top of this there was the increasing feminization of public life throughout the 20th century: the increasing demand for more services, more guarantees, and more protection, along with less concern for freedom.

All of these things were bound to change the system, even if there were no malice involved. And there was malice. There is malice. There are those whose goal throughout the last century has been the subversion of our system of laws and government, those whose goal has been to use our system to take away what remains of our freedom, then to enslave us and plunder our civilization, and eventually to destroy us. Their instruments of subversion are the mass media of news and entertainment. And they always have had allies aplenty among the masses of envious and resentful ne'er-do-wells, among the irresponsible and amoral climbers, and among the ever-so-greedy rich hoping to become even richer by collaborating with the enemies of our people.

On top of these the enemies of America have created whole new classes of allies by encouraging and promoting certain pathologies in our own people--homosexuality and feminism, for example--and then giving these pathological groups a vested interest in the destruction of the old order, in which their sickness was neither encouraged nor tolerated. This is the age-old tactic of divide and rule, but it has been applied during the past century with an especially fiendish degree of ingenuity.

What we see today, in fact, is a huge array of groups, large and small, with various vested interests in the continued corruption of our system of laws and law enforcement. We have employers so greedy for profit that they encourage the continued influx of illegal aliens and discourage the enforcement of immigration laws just so they'll have a supply of cheap labor. We have a huge welfare class receiving handouts or benefits from the public treasury ranging from food stamps to rent subsidies to special tax deductions, who will fight--or at least will vote--to keep the laws in place that provide their benefits--and I'm talking only about the White welfare class. These welfare laws never should have been enacted. They are the work of greedy politicians aiming to buy votes with other people's money. We have a lot of people in comfortable or prosperous or prestigious positions today who wouldn't have gotten where they are if they'd had to depend on their own merits in competition with others, so instead they managed to get legislation enacted requiring employers to give them preference in hiring and promotion. And again, I'm talking only about White people. If we add the damage done to our system of laws by non-Whites scrambling to gain advantages for themselves, we have a real mess.

In the midst of all of this complexity and all of this complicity in the ongoing corruption of American laws and government, however, there is a central thread pulling it all together, a primary corrupting force that has motivated and facilitated most of the damage that has been done, and that primary corrupting force is made up of the mass media of news and entertainment--or more accurately, the Jewish minority that effectively controls the mass media. I'll mention some recent events that illustrate the way in which this central role is played by the media.

I mentioned one of these events in last week's program, and that was the murder last month of a White hitchhiker in Jasper, Texas, by four Blacks who chased him along a country road in their pickup truck, ran him down, and then deliberately ran their truck over his body and left him lying dead in the road. As I said last week, there was a January 21 Associated Press report on this murder, but almost no newspapers or other news media have picked it up. The average American couch potato still hasn't heard a word about it.

Compare that with the dragging death of a Black in Jasper by three White men in 1998. The Jewish media gave that 1998 killing non-stop publicity for months on end. I myself was interviewed at least a dozen times about it simply because the media wanted to emphasize the racial angle and so they needed to associate a White racist, namely me, with it--and besides, one of the three Whites reportedly had read a book I wrote. The media message in 1998 was: "Isn't White racism awful? White racism was responsible for this gruesome murder. White racism is murder!"

We heard that message over and over and over again. Even now, nearly four years later, whenever they do a special on racism or on "hate crime" or something similar for television, they talk about the 1998 Jasper dragging, portraying the Black victim as a choir boy and a credit to his community, whereas he actually was a convicted felon and a habitual drug abuser. And while you and I can see through this propaganda trickery, and such a message only makes us angry at the Jews behind the trickery, 95 per cent or so of Americans believe whatever they are told to believe by television. They don't see the puppeteers; they just see the puppets, and they believe. They chatter among themselves at their churches and in their beauty parlors: "Isn't it just awful what happened in Jasper? It's because those three Whites are racists! Isn't White racism awful?"

And when the lemmings absorb such a message, it does have a big effect on the way in which America's system of government and laws works. The politicians scramble to take a Politically Correct position--and among the politicians are the judges and the prosecutors and the chiefs of police. And the lemmings themselves, feeling the sense of White racial guilt the Jews' propaganda was meant to make them feel, are determined to atone for their guilt by punishing someone severely.

And it is all a media production: if there's no media propaganda, there's no Politically Correct posturing by the politicians, and there's no feeling by the lemmings that they have to punish someone. That's the way it is with the murder last month in Jasper. Because the media aren't interested in it, neither is anyone else. And the similarity in the two murders is amazing. In both cases, a group of lowlifes in a pickup truck in the little East Texas town of Jasper offered a ride late at night to a lowlife of a different race that the lowlifes in the truck were at least casually acquainted with. In neither case was there any prior plan, any conspiracy to kill anyone. In both cases, at some time during the ride an argument ensued, with the lowlifes in the truck administering a beating to the lowlife to whom they had given a ride. And then the lowlifes in the pickup truck killed the other lowlife in an especially atrocious way: in one case by dragging him behind the truck until he was dead, and in the other case by chasing him in their truck as he ran along the road, running him down, and then killing him by deliberately driving their truck over him and crushing his body. In both cases the killers drove off and left the body of their victim lying in the road.

Why did the media bosses decide to make an enormous hullabaloo--a real media circus --out of the first Jasper killing and to ignore the second one? Obviously because of the one significant difference in the two cases: in the first case the killers were White, and the victim was Black; and in the second case the killers were Black, and the victim was White. This doesn't mean, of course, that the Blacks who killed the White hitchhiker Ken Tillery in Jasper last month won't be prosecuted, or that the Whites who killed the Black, James Byrd, in Jasper four years ago wouldn't have been prosecuted if the media had ignored that killing. But the difference in media coverage nevertheless does make a big difference, not just in the way in which the law is applied to the immediate case, but also to the changing climate of the laws and government for future cases.

Justice is traditionally portrayed as a blindfolded woman holding a sword in one hand and scales in the other, but today the blindfold really isn't doing its job. Today Justice is peeping under the blindfold so that she can see to do the Politically Correct thing. And she has a Jew whispering into her ear just to be sure that she makes decisions that not only are Politically Correct but that also don't inconvenience the arbiters of Political Correctness themselves.

In past broadcasts I've talked about the breakdown of law and order in Russia in the wake of communist rule. The communists--which is to say, the Jews--sucked the country dry and then headed for greener pastures. At least most of them did. Some Jews stayed behind to squeeze still more blood out of the Russian people. In several broadcasts we've looked at the trade in White sex slaves centered in Israel. Jewish organized crime gangs kidnap Russian and Ukrainian girls--or in some cases lure them to Israel with the promise of employment as secretaries or housekeepers or nannies--and then force them to work as sex slaves in Jewish brothels.

Other Jewish crime gangs in Russia exploit Russian children for the pedophile market around the world. I reported in my broadcast of October 7, 2000, the breakup of a child pornography ring operating from Moscow and selling videos of Russian children, some of them only two or three years old, being raped, sexually tortured, and even murdered. There actually are perverts who obtain sexual gratification from viewing such horrors, and child pornography is big business. The child-porn videos coming from Moscow sell for hundreds or even thousands of dollars to pedophiles in the West. The pornographers in Moscow obtain children from Russian orphanages by bribing corrupt administrators at the orphanages, or they simply kidnap them from public parks or playgrounds. My report of October 7, 2000, was based on the breakup of one child-porn operation in Moscow after an investigation by Italian police and postal officials of the shipment of videos from Russia to pedophiles in Italy. In that report I quoted from a Reuters news dispatch datelined Naples, Italy, September 27. I'll read you again what I quoted in my report:

Police said on Wednesday they had arrested eight Italians suspected of belonging to a child-pornography ring that traded videos over the Internet, including films of Russian children who were abused to death. Police specializing in Internet crime told reporters that their 19-month investigation had given them enough information to begin investigations into 1,700 people suspected of buying the material over the Web.... They said three people in Moscow ran an operation to kidnap children from orphanages, circuses, and public parks and film them while they were forced to commit sexual acts. Police said they had intercepted some 3,000 tapes and CDs and digital video discs of child pornography, including some involving children only several months old.

These arrests were big news in Italy, where TV newsmen horrified millions of Italians by broadcasting excerpts from of a couple of the child-porn videos on a prime-time national television news program. I reported that the newsmen responsible for the broadcast were immediately fired by the news director of the government-run network, Gad Lerner, a Jew, who obviously was very unhappy that the news had gotten out.

Perverts in the United States also buy child-porn videos from Russia, and I commented in my report of October 7, 2000, that in the United States there was practically a media blackout on the Italian investigation and the subsequent arrests in Italy and in Russia. But there was an Associated Press release on September 29, two days after the arrests. I'll quote a few lines from that release:

...[P]olice said they had broken up an online international child-pornography ring, arrested eight Italians and three Russians, and seized thousands of videos and photographs. The Russian-run ring, which distributed an explicit catalog on the Internet, catered to clients in the United States, Germany, and Italy. Its inventory included films of children being tortured and killed.

...Investigators say the pornography ring produces and distributes images showing children as young as two years old being sexually abused. Some of the victims reportedly were stolen from orphanages, others from families. Its catalog offers films of killings for about $20,000 and images of people having sex with children for about half that.

That Associated Press release from September 29, 2000, was virtually ignored by news media in the United States.

Then on January 4 of last year a man described by Federal authorities as the U.S. West Coast distributor for a child-pornography ring operating in Moscow was arrested in Walnut Creek, California. That was Seth Bekenstein, a Jew. And at the time I thought, "At last! Now the media cannot avoid reporting this filthy business to the American people. There will be a hearing and a trial for Bekenstein, and the whole story will come out."

But of course, the story didn't come out. The mass media did avoid reporting anything about Bekenstein's arrest or his trial. Even the big newspapers in California were silent. The American public remained completely ignorant of the whole business.

Do you understand what Bekenstein was doing? He was selling films to thousands of American perverts that showed Russian children and infants being raped, sexually tortured, and murdered. He was a part of the operation that kidnapped, raped, sexually tortured, and murdered these Russian children. Without people like Bekenstein to sell the films, the business couldn't have operated. He was placing wholesale orders to Moscow for more films, new films, and wiring the money that kept the operation going. He was as guilty as the people who actually did the kidnapping, raping, torture, and murder.

Well, last month, on January 4, exactly a year after his arrest, Seth Bekenstein, who has been out of jail on bond the whole time, was sentenced to 18 months imprisonment after pleading guilty. That's just 18 months for being a major part of an operation involving the most horrific criminal activity imaginable--18 months for raping, torturing, and murdering hundreds of White children for the gratification of unspeakably perverted freaks. And there still hasn't been a peep about Bekenstein or the child-pornography operation in which he was engaged in any major media outlets in the United States. So far as the TV-watching public is concerned it never happened.

Imagine how differently the Bekenstein case would have been handled by the courts if the Jews had decided that it served their interests to make a cause célèbre of it. Imagine what would have happened to Bekenstein if the Jewish media had given him the 1998 Jasper, Texas, treatment. Gruesome excerpts from the films he was peddling would be shown on prime-time TV in America night after night. TV crews would have interviewed some of Bekenstein's customers and had them tell everyone how much they enjoyed seeing little girls or little boys sexually tortured. There would have been tearful interviews with the Russian parents of some of the kidnapped children. The Jews would have kept this up week after week and month after month, until the lemmings all across America finally had gotten it and were screaming for Bekenstein's blood.

And, behold!, the Federal prosecutor would have seen the light and realized that Bekenstein had not only violated a law against sending child porn through the mail, he also was guilty of kidnapping, rape, and murder. And the judge would have seen the light too. And Bekenstein would be sitting on death row now, hoping that the other inmates didn't get their hands on him before he got his lethal injection.

But the Jewish media bosses had no interest in punishing their fellow tribesman for his exploitation of Russian children. After all, the children were only Gentiles, only goyim. And their fellow tribesmen in Israel were making a very good living in the sex-slave trade, exploiting the older sisters of these Russian children. Why stir things up? And they didn't even have to tell the prosecutor and the judge in the Bekenstein case to take it easy on Seth. The court system already has become so corrupted in America that the prosecutor and the judge understood without being told that they shouldn't be too hard on Bekenstein. And now this depraved monster will be back in business again in a few months.

I'll sum it up for you: our whole system of laws and government in America has become media-driven. Until we drag the filthy creatures controlling the mass media of news and entertainment out of their offices and drive stakes through their hearts, the system will only become more and more corrupt.

The Martyrdom of Wafa Idris

I am sure that nearly all patriotic Americans are so embarrassed now about the Bush government's activity in the Middle East that you don't really want to hear more about it. I understand and sympathize with that feeling, but I think that the Middle East situation nevertheless merits more serious commentary.

It is quite clear now that what I announced from the beginning about the Bush government's war aim in the Middle East was right on target. The aim was not primarily to catch or kill Osama bin Laden; it was to replace the Islamic fundamentalist government of Afghanistan with a puppet government that would accept handouts from the United States and do whatever it was told to do: thus ending Afghanistan's independence, bringing it under Washington's control, and eliminating Afghanistan as an obstacle to Israeli policy in the Middle East. This war aim, though never openly admitted by the Bush government, was justified to the American people with much baloney about the mistreatment of Afghan women by Muslim fundamentalists and the importance of "restoring democracy" to Afghanistan. So what we did with all of our cruise missiles, laser-guided bombs, and so-called "daisy cutters" was overthrow the real government of Afghanistan and replace it with a coalition of gangsters willing to accept bribes from Washington and headed by a yes-man who will say to the TV cameras whatever he is told to say.

Does this make America more secure or serve genuine American interests in any other way? Well, it does insure a much larger supply of heroin on America's streets and school playgrounds. Afghanistan used to be the world's largest source of opium, heroin, and related drugs. The Taliban government put an end to that, for religious reasons, by outlawing the growing of opium poppies. The first act of the gangster government installed by George Bush and headed by Hamid Karzai has been to scrap the ban on opium production. It is a big source of money for the gangsters--and "gangsters" is indeed the proper term for the motley assortment of warlords who have been armed and financed by the United States and who now have replaced the Taliban government, at least in Kabul.

While American aircraft continue to bomb areas of stubborn patriotic resistance in Afghanistan, the Bush government is making plans for attacking the next country on Israel's hit list, as soon as the munitions factories can replenish its depleted supply of cruise missiles. George Bush, in fact, is carrying out step by step the program demanded by Jewish leaders in Israel and the United States immediately after September 11. I remember especially well former Israeli prime minister Binyamin Netanyahu stating that the United States must not stop with finding and punishing those responsible for the September 11 attack, but it must eliminate every government that might conceivably permit hostile elements to operate from its territory, and he had in mind specifically Afghanistan, Iraq, and Iran. We must eliminate every possibility for future terrorism, he demanded, and we must do it now.

Jewish organizations and their neo-conservative camp followers in this country made similar demands, the controlled media indicated agreement, and everyone in the Bush administration saluted and shouted, "Yes, sir!" in unison.

There's a famous photograph that has been given a wide circulation recently in many publications. It was taken on December 11 in the East Room of the White House during a memorial ceremony for the victims of the September 11 attack. It shows George Bush posing with his right hand over his heart as if pledging allegiance to the flag, but the only flag visible is an Israeli flag, filling the entire right side of the photograph. When I first saw this rather startling photograph I thought that the White House photographer must have inadvertently framed this picture the way he did. But certainly, it was no mistake. It was a carefully posed photograph, and it was approved by the White House for release to the news media. Its message is clear: "I, George Bush, pledge allegiance to Israel. I am an obedient servant of the Jews. I and my government stand ready to carry out your orders." If you haven't yet seen this photograph, you can easily find it on the Internet. I suspect that your interpretation will be the same as mine.

And really, this explains many things in addition to the current war we are waging in the Middle East to replace all of the governments in that part of the world with ones more to the liking of the Jews, regardless of the cost to America. It explains why when George Bush or anyone in his administration rages on television about how the United States will wage war against terrorism to the very end, that any government that sponsors terrorism or harbors terrorists will suffer the same fate as Afghanistan, Israel is never mentioned. The politicians and media people completely ignore the fact that Israel engages in more state-sponsored terrorism--more state-sponsored car bombings, political assassinations, and other acts of terror--than any other country in the Middle East. They also ignore the fact that Israel's prime minister, Ariel Sharon, is a terrorist and a war criminal, and despite his record, whenever he comes to Washington he is treated as an honored guest.

Sharon is on the verge of having an international arrest warrant issued for him by a court in Belgium on account of his arranging the mass murder of thousands of Palestinian civilians in the Sabra and Chatila refugee camps in Lebanon in 1982. Two weeks ago a Lebanese Christian militia leader, Elie Hobeika, alleged to have been one of Sharon's accomplices in the 1982 massacre, met with Belgian investigators and agreed to testify against Sharon in a war-crimes trial. Just two days after that, on January 24, Hobeika was assassinated by a radio-controlled car bomb outside his home in Beirut which also killed three of his bodyguards. The assassination bore all of the earmarks of a Mossad "hit." A fine fellow, Sharon. Fine people, those Israelis. And there's not been a peep out of the Bush administration about this particular act of terror. And the mass media here are pretending that it didn't even happen.

Bush's East Room photograph beside the Israeli flag also explains why the U.S. government maintains the pretense that it is attempting to arbitrate a peace settlement between Palestinians and Jews, while at the same time supporting the Jewish war of genocide against the Palestinians and severely condemning any effort by the Palestinians to defend themselves. Israeli Prime Minister Sharon sends out his assassination teams on a daily basis, while George Bush continues to shake his hand, hug him, and give him enormous amounts of U.S. financial and military aid, but whenever the Palestinians make any move at all to defend themselves, the Bush government echoes Sharon's demand that Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat arrest the Palestinians responsible. Arafat is in the doghouse now, shunned by every politician in Washington, because he has not been arresting enough of his own people to satisfy Sharon. When the Palestinians recently attempted to purchase a shipment of arms from Iran to defend themselves, the Bush government acted as if Arafat had been caught red-handed in a criminal act. Every Palestinian who strikes at the Jewish occupiers of his homeland, at the Jewish oppressors of his people, is denounced as a "terrorist" not only by the Israelis but also by George Bush and every other politician in Washington.

Two weeks ago, on January 27, another of these Palestinian "terrorists" carried out a suicide bombing in Jerusalem, killing one Israeli and wounding 100 others. The bomber was Wafa Idris, a 27-year-old Palestinian woman who lived in Ramallah and worked as a volunteer nurse, riding in ambulances and providing emergency care in field hospitals for Palestinians wounded by Israeli soldiers. Wafa was no wild-eyed Muslim fundamentalist or fanatical Palestinian nationalist. She was not involved in politics and was not even considered to be a Muslim by her friends and family. She didn't even wear the traditional head covering for Palestinian women. She was described by everyone who knew her as a friendly, open, caring, and fun-loving young woman. She used her spare time to give free lessons in language and mathematics to children in the Ramallah refugee camp. She simply had had enough of seeing her people humiliated and brutalized and murdered by Jews. She had had enough Palestinian children die in her arms after they were shot by Israeli soldiers. She had taken care of enough Palestinian children who had lost an eye or a leg at the hands of the Israelis.

She herself had been shot at repeatedly by Israeli soldiers while she was on ambulance duty and was wearing her Red Crescent uniform, and on three occasions she had been wounded by rubber bullets. Israelis consider shooting at Palestinian medical personnel to be a sport. On January 27 Wafa had had enough and decided to hit back. The spokesmen for America's controlled media consider her a "terrorist." So do George Bush and Donald Rumsfeld and John Ashcroft and Dick Cheney, and all of them vow to continue their war against terrorism and against terrorists such as Wafa Idris. And the mindless, TV-watching yahoos with little American flags on their cars cheer the Bush team on. To them also, Wafa was a terrorist.

Well, maybe so. But let me tell you, when America fights against idealistic young women like Wafa Idris and for murderous thugs like Ariel Sharon, it should be clear to everyone but the most clueless, flag-waving yahoos that we are fighting on the wrong side. And let me tell you something else: people everywhere in the world are beginning to understand this: not just Palestinians; not just Muslims; not just people who don't like Jews, but ordinary people everywhere who have any sort of clue about what's actually happening in the world, people everywhere who pay attention to the news and care about more than the latest ball-game scores.

More and more of them, like Wafa Idris, have simply had enough of Jewish lies and Jewish arrogance and Jewish bullying. They're fed up. They've had enough of the Jews' using their "Holocaust" tales from the Second World War to excuse their behavior and silence criticism. They've had enough of Jews worming their way into everything, trying to take over everything, trying to tell everyone else what to do and what to say and what to think. They're sick of Jewish television, of Jewish corruption, of Jewish self-righteousness, of Jewish meddling.

In the past most people were inclined to give the Jews the benefit of the doubt. They were afraid of being thought anti-Semitic. But now, from India to England, from Argentina to Australia, from Brazil to Bangladesh, people have had enough of the Jews. Their patience with the Jews has run out. They want the Jewish monkey off their backs and off other people's backs too. A real shift in attitude toward Jews is taking place around the world. The funny thing is that the Jews, who usually have very sensitive antennae for what people are thinking about them, for the most part don't seem to realize now that a profound change is taking place. Maybe they're just too drunk with their own power, too impressed with the fact that they have a ring in George Bush's nose and the U.S. armed forces at their disposal. And the politicians and the others that the Jews have corrupted don't seem to realize what's happening either.

But I can sense it, and many others around the world can sense it. Certainly the Palestinians can sense it. The martyrdom of Wafa Idris has had a powerful effect on them. Women simply have not done before what she did. They left the bombing and the shooting to the men, but now thousands of Palestinian women vow that they will follow in Wafa's footsteps. She has become a Palestinian superhero, a model for Palestinian women to emulate. Huge posters of her have appeared all over Palestine. There will be more martyrs like Wafa Idris, many more, and disgust with the Jews will continue to grow around the world.

The problem for the Jews is not just that the number of Palestinians they have to worry about attacking them suddenly has doubled. It is not just that the Palestinians have gained new inspiration and new determination. The Jews' problem goes beyond the Middle East. In occupied Palestine the Jews will respond to the Palestinians with more repression, more brutality, more arrests and torture and assassinations. Ariel Sharon may have his Mossad murder squads knock off other witnesses who might testify against him in a war crimes trial. But around the world the hostility against the Jews will continue growing.

The mere fact that the government of Belgium is moving to put the prime minister of Israel on trial for genocide, that Belgium is moving against the very symbol of Jewish power and influence in the world, is a remarkable phenomenon in itself. That couldn't have happened a few years ago. It couldn't happen in the United States today, of course. But it is happening in Belgium, and similar developments will occur elsewhere.

The Jews will try to counter this by cranking out more "Holocaust" films from Hollywood, by forcing all school children to read The Diary of Anne Frank and go on field trips to the nearest Holocaust Memorial. And that will work to keep the yahoos and most of the other lemmings in line. And certainly the politicians will continue to take orders from the Jews as long as the Jews continue to own or control most of the mass media of news and entertainment. George Bush will continue his blather about the "axis of evil" and will denounce as "evil" any country or government or group or individual that refuses to take orders and will threaten to annihilate anyone he designates as "evil" with all of the high-tech military might at his disposal.

But in the long run none of that will be enough. No matter how many witnesses to his crimes Ariel Sharon orders murdered, awareness of those crimes will continue to spread; more people today are willing to talk about Sharon's genocide than were willing to do so five years ago. No matter how many cruise missiles George Bush fires at Iraqis or Iranians or others who won't knuckle under, hatred against the United States and Israel will only grow, and patriots everywhere who value the freedom and independence of their people will come to see America as the greatest threat to that freedom and independence. No matter how often the controlled news media denounce martyrs like Wafa Idris as "terrorists," more and more people everywhere will understand who the real terrorists are. No matter how often George Bush denounces uncooperative patriots in other countries as "evil," more and more people around the world will know that it is he and his associates and the Jews for whom they work that are really evil. No matter how many new laws are passed forbidding people from criticizing Jews or exposing their lies, under the guise of outlawing "hate," more and more young people everywhere will see the Jews for the deceivers and corrupters and destroyers that they are.

Part of the reason that the Jews and their camp-followers will fail is Wafa Idris.

And part of the reason is that it's harder for them to keep secrets now than it was 50 years ago. Fifty years ago I might have had all sorts of important information, but it would have been much more difficult for me to share that information with you. There was no Internet, and generally the media of mass communication were accessible only to the very wealthy. Now I am able to distribute information and ideas to you and to the public through a dozen different media: through leaflets and stickers and pamphlets and posters and hundreds of books and other printed materials, and through recorded telephone messages, and through music and video compact discs and tapes, and through AM and shortwave broadcasting, and through the Internet.

Part of the reason they will fail is arrogance. The Jews have never been more arrogant and obnoxious than they are today. They believe that it is no longer necessary for them to be cautious. The politicians who take orders from them seem to believe the same thing. They believe that they can do anything they want and then lie their way out of it if they're caught. They believe that as long as they have the baseball fans and the Sally Soccermoms and the mass media on their side--as long as they can count of the votes of the lemmings and the support of the Jews--it doesn't matter what anyone else thinks about them. Remember Bill Clinton, who thought that he could lie and charm his way out of anything? Remember George Bush's September 11 lie that America was attacked only because "Osama bin Laden hates our freedom," and that the attack certainly had nothing to do with the U.S. support of Israel's aggression in the Middle East? The Jews and the politicians don't expect intelligent people to believe their lies. All they care is that the lemmings believe them. But believe me, in the long run it does matter what intelligent and responsible and honest and patriotic people believe.

And part of the reason is that the danger to you and to me and to the whole world of letting the Jews and their gangster underlings continue to run wild, bombing nations into submission, replacing governments that refuse to take orders, passing laws to stifle any criticism of their behavior, destroying populations and cultures with their insane immigration policies, greedily grabbing for more and more control, poisoning the minds and souls of young people everywhere with their television propaganda, and lying about everything--the danger of all this is more apparent now than it ever was, more imminent, more threatening. In the past we all tended to ignore it, to put off doing anything about it as long as we could, but there is a growing understanding that we can't continue to put it off and evade the consequences. We must act against the Jews and the gangsters. September 11 helped to convince us of that.

We are in for some unpleasant times. The fighting will be dirty on both sides. There will be no Geneva Convention rules. The gangsters will claim that their opponents, being "evil," are not entitled to humane treatment. There will be more torture and more shooting of unarmed prisoners. The sort of cold-blooded murders carried out by the U.S. military at Uruzgan, near Kandahar, two weeks ago will become much more common and will be justified by the Bush gang and their successors on the basis that the people who were shot were "evil." Indeed, we wouldn't even have heard about the January 24 Uruzgan massacre if Bush's troops hadn't made a mistake and accidentally slaughtered their own collaborators. And no matter how atrocious things become the yahoos will continue to wave their flags and do what they're told.

Yes, things will be very nasty for a while, and much that is good will be lost. But ultimately the Jews and their collaborators will be destroyed, and there will come a time to begin rebuilding. We will build a saner, cleaner, more beautiful world. Let's begin preparing for that now. Let me hear from you.

Enron, Fastow, and the Looting of America

This Enron thing becomes more interesting every day. Business and finance are not my strong areas, and so I don't talk much about them. The Enron collapse, however, has some very interesting political and Jewish angles. We can see some fascinating parallels with other recent financial catastrophes in the United States.

The general pattern is this: Jews will move into an area of economic activity and with a lot of fast patter and sleight of hand persuade the Gentiles in charge that they are financial geniuses who can benefit the economy generally with their activity and along the way can make a lot of money for any Gentiles fortunate enough to be allowed to collaborate with them. The greediest among the Gentiles climb on board, and for a while there is a flurry of activity, with a great deal of money changing hands and moving to and fro. Then the bubble bursts, the Gentiles all find that their wallets are missing, and the Jews claim that it wasn't their fault, while they count their profits.

Remember Michael Milken, Ivan Boesky, Marty Siegel, Dennis Levine, and the insider-trading scandal that nearly wrecked Wall Street a dozen years ago--and incidentally bankrupted tens of thousands of ordinary Americans who lost their investments as a result of the artificial manipulation of stock prices? Every major actor in that scandal was a Jew.

Remember the enormous savings-and-loan catastrophe during the 1980s that ended up costing American taxpayers 500 billion dollars? A big part of the reason for the collapse of the savings-and-loan industry in the 1980s was the huge investments in so-called "junk bonds" by so many savings-and-loan institutions. Junk bonds are bonds issued by corporations in need of cash that are unrated by Standard and Poor's or Moody's because they are considered too risky, but which have much higher yields than rated bonds. And the man behind the junk bonds --the financial genius persuading the savings-and-loans to buy them--was none other than Michael Milken. At the height of his junk-bond promotions, Milken had a personal income of more than $500 million a year: a fast-talking Jewboy, still in his 30s, taking home more than half a billion dollars a year in personal income by selling junk bonds to savings-and-loan institutions.

Well, that bubble eventually burst, and it took hundreds of banks and savings-and-loan institutions with it. Hundreds of thousands of ordinary Americans had their life savings invested in these institutions. By the time the bubble had burst, however, Milken already was a billionaire several times over. There was much chatter in the media and in the Congress about the failures of all of these financial institutions, much dark talk about foul play, but nothing ever came of it, primarily because many politicians--including members of both Bill Clinton's family and George Bush's family--had accepted money from Milken or from one of the failed savings-and-loans. With so many corrupt but powerful people standing to be burned if a thorough investigation and exposé took place, none ever did, and the scandal was allowed to die quietly with the full collaboration of the mass media.

A few politicians were thrown to the wolves to protect the rest--the most notable sacrifice being Speaker of the House Jim Wright, who was forced to resign from Congress in 1989 as a result of his involvement. And remnants of the scandal continued to haunt a few of those involved for years--Bill and Hillary Clinton, for example, who were targets of the so-called "Whitewater" investigation--but most of the perpetrators were never called to account for their crimes and were allowed to sneak away with their loot. The real victims of the looting of America's savings-and-loan institutions ended up being you and I and the rest of America's taxpayers, who were forced to cough up the $500 billion lost when the institutions collapsed.

I hope that you will forgive me for expressing my suspicion that if so many of the principals involved hadn't been Jews the mass media would have had a lot more to say about the savings-and-loan disaster of the 1980s.

It wasn't until Michael Milken hooked up with fellow Jews Ivan Boesky, Marty Siegel, and Dennis Levine and tried his hand at insider trading that the law finally caught up with him. In 1990 he was sentenced to ten years in prison and forced to pay back $600 million of what he had stolen, a small portion of his ill-gotten loot. He ended up serving less than two years, and that time was spent in a minimum-security, "country-club" prison.

Do you remember Martin Frankel, who stole more than $200 million dollars from insurance companies in five states and then fled the country in 1999 as police were closing in? Probably you don't remember Frankel, because, despite the magnitude of his theft, there was very little publicity about him in the media.

Do you remember Sholam Weiss, the ultra-Orthodox New York rabbi who plundered $450 million from the National Heritage Life Insurance Company in Florida, in the largest case of insurance theft in U.S. history? He stole the life savings of more than 25,000 mostly elderly Americans who had all of their retirement money invested in the insurance company. He was convicted in an Orlando, Florida, federal court in 1999 on 78 counts of racketeering, wire fraud, interstate transportation of stolen property, and money laundering. Weiss, who amazingly had been permitted by the court to be free on bond during his trial, immediately jumped bail and fled the country with a substantial part of his loot. He was sentenced in absentia to 845 years in prison. He was arrested in Austria last October, but on January 10 this year the Austrian government, sensitive to charges of anti-Semitism, decided not to extradite him. There has been even less publicity about Weiss than about Frankel, despite the unique magnitude of his theft.

Do you remember the New Square Four, the four Orthodox Jews in the all-Jewish town of New Square, New York, who set up a phony Jewish school, a yeshiva, that existed only on paper, and then collected more than $40 million dollars in government grants for their non-existent school? They are Chaim Berger, Kalmen Stern, David Goldstein, and Jacob Elbaum. When they got caught and sent to prison in 1999, they ran straight to the Clintons for help, and it is quite clear that a deal was struck. When Hillary ran for the U.S. Senate in New York the following year, the residents of all-Jewish New Square voted almost unanimously for her, giving her 1,359 votes to 10 votes for her opponent Rick Lazio. And a few weeks later, hours before leaving the White House, Bill Clinton commuted the sentences of the four Jewish swindlers, in effect canceling their prison terms. When they were sentenced in 1999 they were ordered by the court to repay the stolen $40 million, but to date not a cent has been recovered from them.

Certainly you remember Marc Rich and his partner Pincus Green. They're the two Jewish criminals who got the most attention last year when they received last-minute pardons from Bill Clinton. They are international commodities speculators who broke a great many laws in their wheeling and dealing and stashed away a few billion dollars for themselves while doing it. When they were indicted for racketeering, wire fraud, and a number of other felonies, they fled the country with their money. Rich has given an estimated $200 million to Israel and an unknown amount to Bill Clinton to buy his pardon. That caused a bit of a stink last year, but it seems to have blown over now.

Rich wasn't even indicted for his most serious criminal activity, which was his collaboration with Jewish gangsters in Russia in the looting of Russia's wealth following the collapse of communism there. In a massive swindle known as "privatization," Jewish bureaucrats in the Soviet government sold Russia's factories and mineral wealth to Jewish "businessmen" in the private sector. The theory was that the businessmen would utilize these resources more productively than the Soviet government had, thus benefiting the Russian economy. But the sales of Soviet property actually were "sweetheart" deals that amounted to giveaways, and the Jewish businessmen who received the property were interested primarily in getting their loot safely out of Russia. Rich did that for them and made hundreds of millions of dollars for himself in the process.

And now we have the collapse of Enron, the huge gas-pipeline and energy conglomerate in Houston. When it went down it took the life savings of thousands of employees with it. Sound familiar? Members of George Bush's family had their hands in Enron's operations up to their elbows. Sound familiar? And, digging through the rubble of Enron's collapse and turning over a very large flat stone at the bottom of the heap, what do we find but another Jewish "financial genius" blinking at the light and trying to scurry away like a startled cockroach, a bulging suitcase full of money in each hand. Sound familiar?

Enron's chief financial officer was Andy Fastow. He went to work for Enron in 1990 and was given the position of CFO in 1998 at the tender age of 36, because his fast talk had convinced Enron's Gentile officers that he was a financial genius and could make a lot of money for them. Over the next two years, in fact, Fastow made a lot of money for himself, squirreling away more than $50 million in personal gain. He did that with a lot of fast sleight-of-hand and intricate financial deals that eventually brought about the collapse of Enron and the pauperizing of thousands of Enron's employees, who had all of their retirement money tied up in the company. Not Fastow, though: he had sold his Enron stock just before the collapse.

Fastow made most of his personal gains during the time he was the CFO of Enron by using his position to engage in private dealing on the side, often at the expense of Enron, the company whose interests he was supposed to represent. He was able to get away with this and other financial shenanigans by "cooking the books" as they say, so that it was very difficult for anyone but himself to know what was going on or what Enron's true financial situation was. But certainly he knew that his creative financing had gotten Enron into very serious trouble when he unloaded his own shares in the company at a substantial profit. He continued to tell other shareholders that the company's future was very rosy, however, even though he knew that the collapse was imminent. As in the case of Michael Milken, Andy Fastow is described by the rabbi of his synagogue as a nice Jewish boy who gave generously to Jewish charities in Houston.

There are a number of investigations underway now into the collapse of Enron, and Andy Fastow may, like Milken, end up in prison for a while and be required to repay a portion of what he stole. Some of the investigations are fueled by the hope of Democrats to implicate George Bush in the scandal, as payback for the Republican effort to implicate Bill and Hillary Clinton in the savings-and-loan scandal through the "Whitewater" investigation. We'll see. But Fastow's Jewishness provides a motive for other very powerful interests--including the media--to let the whole matter die as soon as possible, the way the matter of the looting of America's savings-and-loan industry was allowed to die.

There's a lesson in all this. It's not that Jews are the only crooks who steal from the American people. George Bush is a crook, and he's not a Jew. Bill and Hillary Clinton are crooks, and they're not Jews either. Other Enron executives, who aren't Jews, collaborated with the chief financial officer in bringing about the ruin of the company. In fact, Jewish crooks such as Milken and Rich and Fastow would have a hard time stealing anything if they weren't able to play on the greed of Gentile crooks and enlist Gentile collaborators, such as the Bushes and the Clintons. There probably are more Gentile swindlers in America than Jewish swindlers, simply because Gentiles outnumber Jews 40 to one in the overall population.

No, Jews aren't the only crooks, but they're certainly the biggest crooks. If you hear about a 100-thousand-dollar swindle, it could be anybody. If you hear about a 100-million-dollar swindle, then you know that it has to be a Jew. Why is that? Why are most of the biggest swindlers Jews? Is it because they're smarter than Gentile crooks?

Perhaps. Certainly, Jews have certain traits to a stronger degree than non-Jews, on the average. They are more verbal. They can keep the average Gentile distracted with a flow of words while they pick his pocket. They are myth-makers. They seem to have a knack for spinning fanciful yarns skillfully enough to entrance Gentiles. This is a marketplace skill that they must have inherited from hundreds of generations of forebears who made their living in exchange, in buying and selling, in camel trading and money changing, in selling underwater real estate, rather than in productive work.

Jews also are much more effectively networked than Gentiles. A Gentile crook is more likely to work alone. A Jewish crook is more likely to have a number of other Jews as accomplices in one way or another. Milken and Rich are outstanding examples of this. Milken did his insider trading in cahoots with several other Jewish crooks. When Jewish gangsters in Russia were looking for the best way to smuggle their loot out of Russia, they naturally turned to another Jew, Marc Rich. After Milken and Rich were caught they had many Jews working for them behind the scenes to help them avoid punishment. The whole Jewish town of New Square, New York, pitched in to obtain freedom for Berger, Stern, Goldstein, and Elbaum.

Perhaps the biggest advantage a Jewish crook has is that he is an outsider. A Gentile swindler is nearly always stealing from fellow Gentiles, from his own people, and he realizes that he is committing not only a crime but also a moral offense in doing so. If he is caught he becomes an outcast among his own people, and that's a very serious matter, reflection upon which tends to limit his reach. A Jewish swindler is nearly always stealing from Gentiles, and that is something condoned by his religion and by long-established custom among his people. He may be punished by the Gentiles if he is caught, but he does not become an outcast in the eyes of his own people, and so he is not held back by moral considerations. His tendency is to reach further than a Gentile crook in his place would.

I should mention here that most Jews will deny that their religion condones stealing from Gentiles, but in fact it does, and they know it, as I have pointed out in earlier broadcasts. Those who have the time for it and the interest can make a study of the Talmud for themselves. For those who are interested but who don't have the time to delve into the Talmud, I recommend the books by the late Israeli professor Israel Shahak that are available from the sponsor of this program, National Vanguard Books. I don't know about Martin Frankel's or Marc Rich's religious beliefs, but Michael Milken and Andy Fastow are both synagogue-going Jews. The New Square Four, as Orthodox Jews, are steeped in the teachings of the Talmud. And certainly that is true of Rabbi Sholam Weiss.

Well, regardless of the reason, the fact is that Jews are much more likely to be 100-million-dollar swindlers than Gentiles are, and they're more likely to get away with it. And the fact also is that without greedy, crooked Gentile accomplices they wouldn't be able to swindle our people out of so much money. We get swindled by clever and tricky Jews like Milken and Rich and Fastow because we have let our system become corrupt. We have a corrupt political system, corrupt leaders. That's one of the most important lessons in the Enron collapse.

Actually, these Jewish swindlers who get caught with their hands in our pockets do us much less damage than Jewish swindlers--Jewish myth-makers--of a different sort. Feminism is a myth spun by fast-talking Jews and Jewesses that has done enormous damage to our people, individually and collectively. It is the principal reason that the White birthrate has dropped well below the replacement level. The matron saint of modern feminism is the Jewess Betty Friedan, and most of the influential propagandists for feminism also have been Jewesses. The Jewish mass media have without exception been promoters of this sickness.

The post-World War Two destruction of White America by opening our borders to the Third World has been the work of fast-talking Jewish myth-makers. While Jews in the Congress worked with Gentile collaborators to scrap the immigration law that had favored Europeans, the Jews in the media promoted the fatuous notion that since America is a nation of immigrants, the American thing to do is to let everyone from Asia and Mexico and the Caribbean and the Middle East become an American immigrant too.

The lying and subversive slogan "diversity is our strength" is the creation of fast-talking Jewish myth-makers. Multiculturalism has been built on Jewish myths about the biological equality of the races. It was a Jewish myth that was behind the September 11 attack on America: namely, the myth that Israel is America's "ally" and deserves America's support. The Jewish swindlers who made all of these myths depended heavily on the support of corrupt or foolish Gentiles for their success, just as Michael Milken and Andy Fastow depended on the collaboration of corrupt and greedy Gentiles for the success of their clever, Jewish shell games with stocks and bonds and money.

Well, anyway, what we can hope for now is that the Enron investigations will stay alive long enough for a few perceptive Americans to appreciate fully the truly Jewish role played by Enron's chief financial officer, Andy Fastow, in bringing about the ruin of the company.

Beyond that, I suppose it is too much to hope that many Americans will gain a deeper understanding of the essential role that the corruption of our government and our society has played in allowing Jews like Milken and Fastow to do their destructive work. But it is a fact, as I have said before, that without our own weakness and corruption the Jews would have no opportunity to do their destructive work: no opportunity to exploit us or to hypnotize us with their myths. Curing that weakness and cutting that corruption out of our society is the biggest task we have before us.

Our Biggest Mistake

Last week we talked about a number of especially egregious Jewish swindlers of the past decade. In every case they stole from Gentiles with the help of other Gentiles. I pointed out that the cases I discussed were illustrations of the general rule that the really big swindlers are nearly always Jews, and that they nearly always depend for their success upon the corruption of America's Gentile political and business elites. Corrupt Gentile businessmen help them steal, and corrupt Gentile politicians help them get away with it.

There's a brand new case of a hugely successful Jewish swindler that I didn't have time to talk about last week: that's the case of Gary Winnick and the bankruptcy of his fiber-optics telecommunications company, Global Crossing. Winnick started Global Crossing just five years ago with a $35 million loan from some Jewish friends in the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce. The next year, in 1998, after issuing himself 100 million shares of stock in his new company, he sold $735 million in shares to the public. In June 1999, shares in Global Crossing were selling at 62 3/4-- $62.75 a share. That gave Winnick a personal fortune of more than 6 billion dollars--in just two years.

That's amazing, isn't it? He went from nothing to the richest man in Los Angeles in just two years. He did it by spinning a tale about linking the whole world with a 100,000-mile network of fiber-optic cable and selling that myth to the media and to the public. But of course, linking the world with fiber-optic cable was not what was really on Winnick's mind. Raking in as much money as possible as quickly as possible with a lot of fast patter and sleight of hand was what was on his mind. He had learned his trade not as a fiber-optic network builder but as a fast talker working with his buddy Michael Milken selling junk bonds.

Really, Winnick had worked in the same office with Milken in New York selling junk bonds. Even after Milken had been convicted and sent to prison, Winnick was able to scam the public and sell shares in his new company, Global Crossing. Of course, he didn't advertise his former association with Milken, and the media collaborated by not mentioning it either, even as Global Crossing became a high-profile, celebrity company in 1999.

Winnick began unloading his shares when the price peaked in 1999 above $60. And of course, as always with these Jewish scams built on fast talk instead of on creative work, the bubble eventually burst. Last month Winnick's company filed for bankruptcy, declaring more than $12 billion in debt that it cannot pay. That's like stealing $12 billion from the public, from all the people to whom Global Crossing owes money, and then asking the government for protection. That's the fifth largest bankruptcy ever declared in America. Shares in Global Crossing are now selling on the stock exchange for about a nickel each. Global Crossing's employees who had their shares in 401k retirement plans were prohibited from selling their shares for five years, and have lost everything. While Winnick was unloading his stock in the company at $60 a share, his 17,000 mostly Gentile employees were locked in and had to go down with the ship. Does that sound familiar?

Another characteristic Winnick has in common with Michael Milken and Andy Fastow is that he is a big contributor to Jewish charities--and especially to Israel. Two years ago, when Global Crossing still was flying high, Winnick gave $40 million to the Simon Wiesenthal Center in Los Angeles so that it can open a branch in Jerusalem. A recent issue of the Jewish Journal of Los Angeles reports that despite the bankruptcy of Global Crossing, Winnick continues to give generously to Jewish institutions. From his sumptuous $90 million estate in Beverly Hills, a steady stream of multimillion-dollar gifts continues to flow to Hillel houses at various universities, to the Jewish Museum in New York, to the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, to the American Jewish Committee, to the U.S. Holocaust Museum in Washington, and to a number of other Jewish groups and causes. But not to those 17,000 mostly Gentile former employees of Global Crossing who went down with the ship.

As I said, it's amazing. It just shows what can be done with a little greed, a complete lack of scruples, and the help of the media and the politicians--and when one has a Gentile population that has been so thoroughly brainwashed by the media that it simply lets itself be fleeced repeatedly by these avaricious Jews without even a peep of protest lest it be accused of "anti-Semitism." Do you believe that there's a court in this land that will hold Winnick accountable for what he has done? If you do, then you're even more gullible than the folks he fleeced to get his $6 billion. No, Winnick will get clean away with it and will continue enjoying life on his $90 million estate and giving to his fellow Jews the money he took from us. Do we deserve any better? I think not.

And I want to emphasize again, the super-swindlers we have discussed here--Winnick and Fastow and Rich and Milken and Boesky and Frankel and Weiss and the rest--are not crooks who just incidentally happened to be Jews and might just as well have been Gentiles: no, their criminal activity is an essential expression of their Jewishness. They did what they did because they are Jews. That's why nearly all of the really big swindlers, the most outrageously brazen swindlers, the super-swindlers, the ones who steal $6 billion in just two years--are Jews.

This is something for the egalitarians to think about. It's something to be pondered by those who believe that all featherless bipeds are essentially the same, except for superficial cultural differences, and that, in particular, the only difference between Jews and Gentiles is that Jews have a somewhat different religious tradition from the rest of us. They believe that if a Jew is raised from early childhood in a Gentile family he will grow up indistinguishable from a Gentile in his behavior and his thinking, and that a Gentile raised in a Jewish family will grow up to be indistinguishable from the Jews around him. Jews themselves don't believe that. That's contrary to what their religion teaches them and to what they themselves feel.

I don't believe it either.

Of course, egalitarians also believe that men and women are essentially the same--or that they would be the same, except for the fact that our old-fashioned, male chauvinist society artificially forces men and women into different stereotypical roles. I think that fewer people believe that than believe that Jews and Gentiles are the same--except for the lemmings, of course, who will believe whatever they're told to believe. Which is to say, more independent thinkers accept the fundamental and all-pervasive differences between men and women than accept the fact that there are very important inborn differences between Jews and Gentiles. Actually, I believe that even many lemmings, despite their dutiful affirmation of whatever TV tells them, deep down inside don't believe that men and women are the same.

Back to the differences between Jews and Gentiles: I mentioned inborn differences, but we shouldn't ignore the cultural differences, especially as expressed in religious differences. The Jews' religion is an expression of their racial character. It grew out of their character over a very long period of time. The Jews look back on nearly 6,000 years of history. To them this is the year 5762, and in fact, Jewish religious books actually are being printed now with this date in them. Of course, it's really their tribal history they trace back that far. It would be more accurate to say that their religion, in its present form, is about 3,000 years old. But the fact is that it is their tribal religion. They developed it themselves. It was never imposed on them from outside. And it is an intensely ethnocentric religion, a religion for Jews only.

Compare that with the two other Semitic religions, Islam and Christianity, both of which are universalist. Muslims and Christians believe that their religion is for everyone. Anyone, regardless of race, who professes belief, can be a Christian or a Muslim. Christians send out missionaries to convert the heathens--especially Black, Brown, and Yellow heathens. When Jews send out missionaries, it is only to bring strayed Jews back into the fold, never to convert those who are not already members of the "chosen" race. The Jewish religion reinforces character traits which already are embedded in the Jewish genotype. Neither Islam nor Christianity can do that to the same degree, because they didn't develop indigenously. They were imposed by fire and sword on non-Semitic peoples.

My point is that Judaism strengthens and reinforces the traits that led Michael Milken, Andy Fastow, and Gary Winnick to be so enormously successful at getting other people's money into their pockets, but the traits were already there. They were born with them. And I can think of no Gentile who has been as successful at that sort of thing: that is at fast patter and sleight of hand, at selling myths for hard cash. And the reason is not just because of a religious difference. As I said, Jews and Gentiles are different, just as men and women are different, just as Whites and Blacks and Asians are different.

In some cases, these differences are a good thing, and they work well together: as in the case of men and women, for example. As long as we have a properly structured society that takes account of these differences, a society that permits men and women to complement one another in a natural way rather than forcing them into unnatural competition, then the differences make us strong and healthy.

When we pretend that the differences don't exist, however, as between Gentiles and Jews or between Whites and Blacks, we leave ourselves open to very bad and unhealthy things. In the case of Jews we leave ourselves open to exploitation of the sort we have just discussed. We pretend that there is no difference between them and us, and so we aren't expecting to be exploited. Our guard is down. And then we are exploited. In the case of Blacks and Whites, pretending that the only difference is in the color of our skin has led us into an enormous disaster. It is destroying America and our people and our civilization. It has made wastelands of large sections of our cities. It has devastated our schools and robbed many of our young people of an education of the quality they need to make the most of themselves. It has exposed our people to the sort of criminal violence that is natural for Blacks but not for us. It has cost us many, many more billions of dollars in welfare programs and law enforcement than even Michael Milken and his fellow tribesmen have swindled from us.

Yesterday I was watching a television program that was mostly about my record company, Resistance Records, and the music we produce and distribute and the young people who compose and play the music and listen to it. The program came from VH1, which is a music channel owned by the same fellow who owns MTV. He uses the name Sumner Redstone but was born Murray Rothstein. Redstone/Rothstein is another of these billionaire Jews we've been talking about, and his program on VH1 gave the public the Jewish spin on me and Resistance Records and resistance music generally. He calls our music, "hate rock," because some of it expresses the anger and frustration of young White Americans who are forced to live with the real-world consequences of pretending that there is no difference between Blacks and Whites: the anger of young, White Americans who have experienced the reality of racially mixed neighborhoods and racially mixed schools.

The program pretends that I and these young Americans are hateful by nature, that there's really no reason for us to be angry, that everything would be rosy if we would just pretend, along with everyone else, that Blacks and Whites are the same, that there's no difference. Then we could all be happy and live together peacefully, and everything would be wonderful. It is just our perverse nature that makes us hateful and keeps us from pretending that we believe in racial equality and racial togetherness. That's the myth that Sumner Redstone has spun and is selling to the public through the mass media he owns: through his CBS television network and his MTV and VH1 channels, much like Michael Milken sold to the directors of America's savings-and-loan institutions the myth that they could become rich by investing in his junk bonds.

As I mentioned last week, Michael Milken's myth cost us $500 billion when the savings-and-loan industry went bankrupt 15 years ago. Sumner Redstone's myth of equality already has cost us vastly more than that and eventually will cost us our very existence if we continue to be deceived by it. And of course, it's not just Redstone's myth. It's a myth spun by and propagated by Redstone's whole tribe. The myth of diversity, equality, unity, and all of the other labels in which it's packaged is being peddled to the American public through every medium the Jews control: through television and radio, through newspapers, through magazine advertising, through Hollywood films, and all the rest. "Multiculturalism is a wonderful thing," they all proclaim. "Diversity is our strength." "Keep our borders open, because the Browns and Yellows that are pouring into America really are the same as Whites, and we are a nation of immigrants."

And of course, anyone who doesn't swallow the myth is a "hater." Any White person who stands up and says, "Hey! Multiculturalism is a bad idea. It's a nightmare. It's wrecking America," is attacked the way I and the other people involved in Resistance Records were attacked on Redstone's VH1 program. Pushing the idea that we ought to keep our borders open is a large-scale effort involving a very substantial portion of the Jewish community in America. Ramming multiculturalism down our throats is a joint effort involving virtually all of the mass media, and that means virtually all of the Jews in positions of control or ownership in the media, from Hollywood to Madison Avenue. Spinning and selling the poisonous myth of equality is an effort supported by nearly every Jew, not just a few evil master mythmakers.

To be sure, just as in the financial swindling of America, this ideological swindling of America has had plenty of Gentile collaborators and co-conspirators. And I'm not referring only to the lemmings who parrot back whatever nonsense about equality and the wonders of diversity they have absorbed from television; I'm talking about the Gentile politicians and businessmen and teachers and preachers and publicists who know better, but who for one reason or another went along and still are going along with the Jewish campaign to multiculturalize America. Despite these collaborators and co-conspirators, however, it is clear that it has been Jewish Hollywood and Jewish Madison Avenue that have pushed the poison from the beginning and without which the campaign never would have been able to do the damage that it has done.

In the VH1 program about Resistance Records I saw yesterday, Mr. Redstone was taking a poll of viewers. "Should White resistance music be outlawed?" he asked. "Should the government prohibit the production and sale and performance of 'hate rock' music?"

Do you think that's a joke? I'll tell you, it certainly isn't. That's the standard way that Redstone and his fellow tribesmen deal with opposition or exposure. Once they have corrupted a country, they get their bought politicians to enact legislation making it illegal to criticize or contradict them. They've already done that in Canada and in most countries in Europe. They've made what they call "hate speech"--and that includes "hate music"--illegal. Black gangsta' rap, with its lyrics about killing Whites, is all right--in fact, some of Redstone's Jewish friends in the music business produce and distribute gangsta' rap--but in Canada or Germany you can go to jail for playing White resistance music, or for contradicting any of their "Holocaust" stories about the nasty Germans converting innocent, blameless Jews into lampshades or soap. They're pushing hard for the same sort of legislation here. They really would like to make it illegal for me to produce and distribute White resistance music and for you to listen to it.

Speaking of the "Holocaust"--as you know, that's another of my pet subjects. Although Redstone and his pals like to label me a "Holocaust denier," I'm really not. I don't deny that there was a campaign by the Germans before and during the Second World War to get the Jews out of their country and off their backs, and that during the war many Jews perished in the concentration camps and labor camps into which they were herded. What I deny is many of the details, such as Jewish lampshades and soap.

The Jews, as they do with everything where they see the possibility for a good swindle, spun a myth about what had happened to them, and they sold that myth to the Gentiles. They took the basic fact that the Germans wanted the Jews out of their society and to that end put many Jews in concentration camps, and they embellished that fact with a great many lies about lampshades and soap and gas chambers and medical experiments, and that myth became the "Holocaust."

They used their grip on our news and entertainment media, which was very strong even before the Second World War, to sell to the American people their myth about the terrible mistreatment of innocent and inoffensive Jews by beastly Germans. And as is nearly always the case they had plenty of corrupt Gentile politicians willing to collaborate with them. The result was that they got us to go to war to save them from Hitler. We made an alliance with the communists, with the Soviet Union, for that purpose, and we killed millions of our own people, millions of our fellow Europeans, but we saved the Jews.

And look at what the Jews have done to us since the war to express their gratitude for being saved from Hitler! They have deliberately and with malice aforethought multiculturalized us. They have opened our borders to the Third World. They have given us feminism and Affirmative Action and gangsta' rap. They have promoted homosexuality as a "normal" lifestyle. With their advertising and their television they have persuaded millions of young, White women that it's OK to have a Black boyfriend, that it's fashionable. And Sumner Redstone, with his VH1 and his CBS network and his MTV, has been at the forefront of that particular campaign of genocide against us. And they have descended on us like a swarm of locusts with every sort of scam and swindle imaginable, fleecing us of hundreds of billions of dollars, a la Milken and Weiss and Fastow and Winnick.

The damage the Jews have done to America since 1945 far, far outweighs the damage done to the Jews by the Germans between 1933 and 1945. And the eventual death toll among our own people before we have cleaned up the mess the Jews have made of America will far exceed their losses during the so-called "Holocaust." We Americans have made some big mistakes, but really, going to war against our own kinsmen in Europe in order to save the Jews from Hitler was our biggest mistake.

Jewish Hate, the Media, and the ADL

Last week I mentioned that a record company I own, Resistance Records, was attacked in an hour-long special TV program on one of Sumner Redstone's music television channels, VH1. Redstone, who was born with the name Murray Rothstein, is one of the most powerful of the Jewish media masters. He owns not only VH1, but also MTV and the CBS network. His MTV specializes in encouraging young Whites to mix with and act like Blacks. He promotes "hip hop" culture and rap music among White kids, persuading White boys to talk Black and wear baggy shorts and backward baseball caps -- and persuading teenaged White girls to have sex with Blacks. He is probably the most destructive and hate-filled of all the Jewish media bosses.

The special VH1 program to which I referred was called "Inside Hate Rock." "Hate rock" is what Redstone and his people call the music that I produce and distribute. Actually there's nothing hateful at all about my music. Its purpose is to help young White people have a sense of identity and pride and purpose, all things that Redstone and company are trying to take away from them. Redstone's aim -- and the aim of the Jewish media bosses generally, whether they're in Hollywood or on Madison Avenue, is to alienate young White people, to uproot them, to destroy their sense of racial identity, to confuse them, to make them forget their traditions and their history, and to persuade them to mix with Blacks and other non-Whites. That's why Redstone promotes rap music so heavily. His ultimate aim is to destroy our people, our race. And because I'm trying to counter that with Resistance Records, he calls me a "hater" and calls the music that I produce and distribute "hate rock."

Well, in addition to music, Resistance Records also produces and distributes video games. A new game that we've just begun distributing is named Ethnic Cleansing. The kids really love it. It's selling like hotcakes. Not only was our music attacked in the VH1 special I mentioned, but our new video game also was denounced as "hateful." And then one of the most powerful and hateful Jewish pressure groups, the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, also jumped on the bandwagon and began screaming about our new game. "It's violent!" they screamed. "It teaches children to hate!" they screamed.

Let me tell you: every video game I've seen is violent. Combat is the most common theme of video games. That was true even back in the days of the first, primitive video games, such as "Donkey Kong" and "Pac Man." Most video games today involve shooting people or hacking people up with swords or other weapons. And I'm talking about games marketed by Sumner Redstone's fellow tribesmen. I'm talking about games produced and distributed by Jewish media companies that make regular donations to the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith. The Anti-Defamation League doesn't scream about those games.

Some parents are alarmed by the high level of violence in the video games that their children play, but the Anti-Defamation League isn't. Perhaps violent video games aren't good for kids. I don't really know, but they are a fact of life. Many kids spend most of their free time playing video games.

The point is that Sumner Redstone and the Anti-Defamation League think that our game is "hateful" and "dangerous," but not other video games. Why is that? What's the difference?

I'll tell you: our game -- Ethnic Cleansing -- is a game designed to raise the racial consciousness of the White kids who play it. That's why Sumner Redstone and the Anti-Defamation League hate it. That's why they are screaming about it. That's why they're denouncing our game as "dangerous" and complaining about the violence in it, but they aren't complaining about other video games that are at least as violent. A game that has an American GI in the Second World War shooting Germans is OK with Sumner Redstone and the Anti-Defamation League. Likewise for a Civil War game in which Yankees and Rebels slaughter each other. They think that's fine. But our game, which involves urban guerrilla warfare between Whites and non-Whites they call "hateful" and "dangerous." In other words, it's OK for Whites to fight against each other. It's OK for Whites to kill Whites. But it's not OK for Whites to fight against non-Whites. That's taboo.

Anyway, our game, Ethnic Cleansing, is designed to break that taboo. Our game is designed to teach White kids to stick up for their own people. It's designed to help White kids shed the racial guilt and self-hatred, the sense of racial inferiority, that Sumner Redstone and the folks in the Anti-Defamation League have worked so hard to instill in them. It's designed to help them think in terms of Whites against non-Whites instead of Whites against other Whites. That's why VH1 and the Anti-Defamation League hate it.

But, you know, we shouldn't be surprised about that. VH1 is owned by a Jew. It's a Jewish propaganda channel. The Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith is a Jewish pressure group. Their aim is to destroy White racial consciousness and to break down any feeling of White solidarity. The last thing they want is for Whites to learn to stick up for themselves. So we expect them to hate us and to denounce us. They have their agenda, and we have ours.

Everyone should understand that, but most people don't. The reason that they don't is that all of the mass media, even those few not yet owned by Jews, collaborate to keep the Jewish agenda concealed from the public. The media routinely refer to the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith -- and from here on I'll just call it "the ADL" -- not as a Jewish pressure group or a Jewish propaganda organization or even as a Jewish lobbying group, but as a "human rights organization" or as a "civil rights group." Really. The media want the public to believe that the ADL is an impartial group concerned with what's good for America rather than with what's good for the Jews. In fact, most media won't even tell you that it's a Jewish organization, with strong ties to Israel.

So let me tell you a little about the ADL, and you'll understand better why they do what they do. And you'll also see a little more clearly the crookedness of virtually all of the mainstream media in America. The ADL was organized in 1913 by a group of rich Jews specifically as a response to a notorious child-rape and murder in Georgia. Leo Frank was a Jew who owned a pencil factory in Atlanta. In 1913, he raped and murdered one of his White female employees, 14-year-old Mary Phagan. He was tried, convicted, and sentenced to death. The governor of Georgia, in response to Jewish lobbying -- and, most believe, in response to a large Jewish bribe -- almost immediately commuted the death sentence. Angry Georgians then seized the Jewish child-rapist and murderer and hanged him.

The Frank case was widely reported in Georgia newspapers in great detail and caused much hostile feeling against Jews. The purpose of the ADL was to deal with such matters in the future by attacking and attempting to discredit anyone opposed to Jews or Jewish policies, by generating pro-Jewish propaganda, and by exerting influence on legislators and other public officials in a more discreet manner than the rather clumsy way in which the Georgia governor had been persuaded to commute the death sentence of Leo Frank. After the formation of the state of Israel in 1948, lobbying for military and financial aid for Israel also became a major ADL activity.

The ADL still does all of those things today, and in my case the group's principal activity has been attacking me and attempting to discredit me. In fact, the ADL devotes so much of its effort to attempts to discredit anyone who opposes Jewish policies that it is known in some quarters as "the Defamation League." The ADL regularly refers to me as a "terrorist" and claims that I am "linked" not only to various terrorist acts, such as the Oklahoma City bombing, but also to bank robberies, murders, and other acts of criminal violence. For example, my "link" to the Oklahoma City bombing is that Tim McVeigh, whom I didn't even know existed until I saw him on television after he was arrested -- Tim McVeigh is said to have read and to have been fond of a novel that I wrote 27 years ago, The Turner Diaries. The other so-called "links" are even more tenuous. And yet the mainstream media regularly quote the ADL in saying that I am "linked" to terrorist and criminal activity, and they describe the ADL almost as if it were an official source of information.

So let me tell you: I have never been involved in any terrorist or criminal activity of any sort. But the ADL has. In November 1992, after confidential police files were stolen from the San Francisco Police Department, an investigation was begun that led eventually to search warrants being issued. On April 8, 1993, both the San Francisco and the Los Angeles offices of the ADL were searched by police teams armed with these warrants, and more than 12,000 stolen confidential police files were recovered. Most of these confidential police files didn't have anything to do with criminal activity but instead contained personal information on individuals collected by the police in connection with driver's license applications, pistol permits, security clearances, and other routine matters. What the individuals in all of these police files had in common is that the ADL considered them "enemies" because they had at one time or another, in some way, opposed some Jewish policy or some Jewish interest. Some of the individuals in the stolen files were legislators or other public officials that the ADL wanted to bring pressure against.

Other criminal activity by the ADL, in addition to the possession of the stolen police files, came to light in 1993. A San Francisco Police Department inspector, Tom Gerrard, who had been receiving payments by the ADL to steal the files for them, fled to the Philippines to avoid prosecution. And evidence was found during the search of the ADL's San Francisco and Los Angeles offices that the same sort of bribery, corruption of police agencies, and illegal collection of confidential police files was occurring in New York, Washington, Chicago, St. Louis, and Atlanta.

Unfortunately, the ADL already had corrupted the judicial system in California to the point that it was able to stifle further law enforcement action, and very shortly thereafter the mass media in California, which initially had given substantial coverage to the case, were persuaded to drop the matter as well.

Some of the individuals whose confidential files had been stolen by the ADL were not ready to drop the matter, however, and they filed civil suits against the ADL for invasion of their privacy. With the enormous resources of organized Jewry behind it the ADL fought these lawsuits tenaciously, appealing every adverse decision. Finally, however, after nine years in the courts, the ADL last week paid damages of $178,000 to the last three victims of its illegal spying. I'm sure that you didn't see anything about that in the news last week, because after the initial publicity back in 1993 the mainstream media have ignored the case. They continue to refer with respect to the ADL as a "human rights organization," with never a mention of its criminal activity. And they continue to quote the ADL's hints and suggestions and insinuations that I am somehow "linked" to terrorist and criminal activity. It is, of course, the ADL, not I, who is engaged in criminal activity, but you would never know that if your only source of information is the mainstream media. For those listeners who have access to good reference sources, however, find yourself a copy of the Los Angeles Times from April 9, 1993, and read all about it.

Actually, the ADL's stealing of police files is the least of its criminal activities. It just happens to be one activity where the group made a slip and got exposed momentarily. Far more serious are the ADL's links to organized crime: to the Jewish master swindler Marc Rich, for example, or to the Jewish gang boss Moe Dalitz. If you were following the news closely in January of last year, when Bill Clinton, just hours before leaving the White House, issued a number of pardons for criminals, an inordinately large percentage of whom were Jews, you will perhaps remember the controversy around his pardon for Marc Rich. Rich is a billionaire international commodities trader. He was indicted on a large number of criminal charges, including wire fraud and money laundering, before fleeing the country to avoid prosecution. He has given huge sums from his ill-gotten loot to Israel and to the ADL. The ADL chairman, Abe Foxman, wrote to Clinton specifically requesting a pardon for Rich -- and of course, Rich got his pardon.

Moe Dalitz was the boss of Detroit's all-Jewish "Purple Gang," which got its start smuggling illegal whiskey into the country and then branched out into White slavery, loan-sharking, illegal gambling, and contract murder. After the Second World War, Dalitz moved into the casino business in Las Vegas and eventually became the leading gang boss there. And he gave generously to the ADL and other Jewish organizations. He was one of the ADL's biggest donors during the 1970s and early 1980s. The ADL reciprocated by presenting Dalitz with its annual "Torch of Liberty" award at a formal dinner in his honor in Las Vegas in 1985. Dalitz and seven other gangsters were killed in a gang shootout shortly thereafter.

What's important is not that the ADL consorts with gangsters and engages in criminal activity. What's important is that the news media conceal that from the public and treat the ADL as a respectable "human rights organization" that can be relied on for accurate information about people like me -- or about anyone the Jews consider an obstacle to their policies. That's bad. That's very bad, and it's dangerous -- and not just because it misinforms the public about people like me. It's dangerous because it allows the ADL to represent itself as an authority. It gives the ADL much more power to corrupt.

It was bad enough when Jewish groups had only their money to bribe politicians and judges and law-enforcement officials, as in the days of Leo Frank. But now, with the collusion of the mass media, the ADL is able to wear a false cloak of authority. And the unfortunate fact is that whenever a military or law-enforcement person sees someone wearing a cloak of authority, his tendency is to salute and wait for orders. Most of us have at least a bit of an authoritarian streak in us, and I don't think that's necessarily a bad thing. Military and law-enforcement people, on the average, have a much bigger streak of authoritarianism in their personalities, and that's not necessarily a bad thing either. But when the ADL uses its false cloak of authority to influence America's legislative, judicial, military, and law-enforcement establishments, that's a very bad thing -- and very dangerous for the freedom and even for the survival of our people.

And in fact, the ADL is using the false cloak of authority bestowed on it by the mass media to cozy up to and corrupt military and law-enforcement people all across America. The Jewish mass media have prepared the ground by talking so much about "hate crimes" and "hate speech" that they have convinced large segments of the public that any printed material or public statement that is not Politically Correct is "hate." Anything I publish, for example, is automatically labeled as "hate" by the media. If I criticize America's insane immigration policy, the media will call that "hate." If I complain about the government's policy of putting Israel's interests ahead of America's interests in the Middle East, that's "hate" too. I could publish a book on bicycle repair, and the Jewish media would call it "hate." The media have the public sensitized to that word -- and they've done that deliberately. And they have the more simpleminded elements of the public convinced that there's something illegal about publishing or distributing anything that the media have labeled as "hate."

If, for example, members of my organization, the National Alliance, distribute leaflets calling for a halt to immigration from the Third World -- or even demanding that the government enforce the immigration laws it already has by stopping illegal aliens from coming across our southern border -- the media invariably will use the word "hate" in every other sentence in reporting our distribution. And then some of the simpletons will call the local police or the FBI to report that our leaflets were left on their front porches, believing that a crime has been committed.

All of that is bad enough. But then somebody from the local office of the ADL will approach the local police chief and offer the ADL's help as an authority on "hate" and "extremism." "We will explain to you how to recognize 'hate crimes' and 'speech crimes,'" the ADL will say. "We will teach your officers who the haters are, and we will explain why you should keep an eye on them and harass them and arrest them whenever you can."

Ordinarily any self-respecting police chief would resent someone like that telling him how to do his job. He would tell the ADL busybody to buzz off -- especially if he knows that the organization offering its advice is a criminal organization. But usually he doesn't know that, because the media have kept that a secret. Usually he thinks that the ADL is an authority, almost with an official status, because the media deliberately have created that impression. And so the ADL is able to worm its way into local law enforcement and exert its destructive influence on the way the law is enforced. In many cases, it is able to persuade the police to violate the civil rights of people that it doesn't like. For the police to let the ADL tell them how to recognize and to treat so-called "haters" is like the police going to the Mafia for advice on how to deal with organized crime.

And the ADL does the same thing with our Armed Forces. It's like having the Pentagon hiring active, practicing al-Quaeda members to teach the military about terrorism and how to recognize a terrorist. It sounds crazy, but we actually have the greasiest of Jews whispering into the ears of police and military officials all over America, telling them how they should do their jobs. We actually have such Jews with ADL connections installed in offices in the Pentagon, in the White House, and in the Justice Department.

That's a bad situation. Like many other bad situations in America today, it has arisen directly from the Jewish control of the mass media.

What can we do about it? Well, you know what I'm doing. I'm building alternative media as fast as I can to counter the Jewish media. I'm happy to have your support for my work.

Here's something else you can do. If you know anyone in law enforcement, ask him whether or not his department has been approached by the ADL or has hired the ADL to give training of any sort to the personnel in his department, or whether or not any ADL propaganda has been circulating among members of his department. If his department has had any contact at all with the ADL, tell him what you know. Tell him that you are alarmed and outraged that his department is involved with a criminal, anti-American organization that is working to undermine our Bill of Rights and to destroy our Constitution. Get him to help you spread this information to other members of his department.

The New "Patriotism"

You know, I think that the word "patriotism" has a different meaning today than it did when I was growing up. It used to mean a love of one's native land and one's people: one's fatherland, according to the etymology of the word. The fatherland was the land where one's ancestors had been born and where a large extended family -- everyone descended from those ancestors who originally had settled the land -- now lived. Patriotism really had a tribal or racial meaning. It was a feeling based on blood. And although our ancestors had come to America from all parts of Europe, they were enough alike that they still could feel the bond of blood. They still felt themselves members of a large family, a family with European roots, and they could stand together as brothers against those who were not part of the nation. Whether they came from Scotland or Ireland or England or Sweden or Germany or Poland they could fight together against Indians or Mexicans. They felt their kinship, and that was the basis of their patriotism.

Well, that racial meaning of patriotism is a meaning that the controllers of our mass media obviously don't like. They've multiculturalized patriotism along with everything else. Their propaganda for a new brand of patriotism is pretty blatant stuff. I'm sure you've seen the television ads a hundred times where a very diverse bunch indeed -- Blacks and Browns and Yellows, with a few Whites thrown in -- proclaim sequentially, "I-am-an-American."

These days, to be "patriotic" means to wave the flag and shout slogans whenever the mass media deem it appropriate. It means to cheer the government whenever the government decides to use its cruise missiles or its smart bombs to kill a bunch of people in some other country, regardless of the reason. Instead of blood-based patriotism, today we have government-based patriotism. If you wave the flag and support the government, you're a patriot. If you don't like what the government is doing and you say so, then all of the flag-waving, slogan-shouting yahoos look at you as if you were the enemy.

Back in the 19th century, American patriots -- real patriots -- were winning land for us from mestizos and pushing them back across the Rio Grande. "Remember the Alamo!" was a patriotic slogan then. Today it's something the media and the government want us to forget or to feel embarrassed about, as the mestizos come flooding back in this direction again in a great wave of re-conquest: the reconquista. And the government in Washington is helping them. They're flooding not just into Texas and the other parts of the Southwest, but wherever greedy employers want cheap labor. And if you raise your hand against this government-sponsored invasion, if you try to push a few mestizos back across the border, you're not considered a patriot; you're a terrorist or a "hate criminal."

Two years ago, in July 2000, a group of White men chased some Mexicans out of a park in Billings, Montana. Just chased them out, told them the park was for Whites, but didn't hurt anyone. Last week, a Federal judge in Billings sentenced one of the White men to 15 years in prison, and two other White men to 10 years each, for chasing some Mexicans out of a park. The media thought that those sentences were just about right. So did the Bush government, which had one of its Justice Department Jews, a Mark Blumberg, acting as prosecutor. Fifteen years in a Federal prison for chasing some Mexicans out of a traditionally White park, without actually hurting anyone. If you looked carefully, you could have seen that in an Associated Press report from Billings last Saturday.

Imagine the Billings situation reversed: Mexicans chasing Whites out of a barrio park in some Browned-out area of Texas or California. Do you think the Federal government would rush a Jewish prosecutor to the area to make sure that the Mexicans were locked up for 15 years? Let me tell you, the Bush government would pretend that nothing had happened. There wouldn't even be a prosecution. Patriotism, government style, these days means not fighting back against what is being done to the country that our ancestors fought and bled to win for us.

At least, that's one side of government-style patriotism. The other side, as I said a moment ago, is to wave your flag and cheer mindlessly whenever the government, on orders from Israel, kicks the bejesus out of some little country without an adequate air-defense system. The government-style patriots never ask why we're beating up somebody or pounding some other country back into the Stone Age. They don't really care. They're as mindless as baseball fans. To them, all that matters is that our team is pounding the other team, and so they cheer.

It used to be that, in order to have the patriotic support of the people, the government had to have a good reason for starting a war. It used to be that our people had to feel that they were defending themselves -- or at least, defending some legitimate American interest -- before they could feel patriotic about killing people in other countries. Making it easier for Israel to hang on to stolen Arab land in the Middle East is not a legitimate American interest. But the government-style patriots, with the little flags tied to their car antennas, don't need a reason. It makes them feel good that their government is able to kick sand in the face of just about anybody else on the beach and get away with it. They like cheering for the biggest bully in the block, as long as the bully is successful. They cheer the government in the same way the Roman mob used to cheer for their favorite gladiator in the Colosseum.

I spend half an hour every day scanning through the TV news channels -- not primarily to find out what has happened in the world, but rather to find out what the party line is on what's happened in the world. In this regard, Fox News is probably the most revealing. Nearly every day, Fox interviews one or more Defense Department consultants or retired generals or other government officials as "experts" on the current U.S. war in the Middle East. Without an exception, these "experts" are enthusiastic supporters of the current war. Was our blasting of Afghanistan and the ousting of the government there a good thing? They are absolutely certain that it was. Should we start another war with Iraq next? They are unanimous in their opinion that we should. What about Iran? Hell, yes, we can lick them too. But never a reason. Never an explanation of why it is good for us to tear up all of these countries, beyond the fact that we're bigger than they are and can get away with it: no explanation of how it serves our interests, of how it makes the world a better place for America.

With "experts" like that to set the tone, it is no wonder that the yahoos are going around with their chests stuck out now because we beat up Afghanistan and will go around with their chests stuck out even further after we beat up Iraq or Iran.

You know, I just said that no one ever asks why we have to whip all of these other countries. Of course, the stock answer, if you raise the question to one of the Fox News "experts," is that we're "fighting terrorism." What we're doing in the Middle East now is waging a "war against terrorism," they'll tell us. Well, that's an explanation that doesn't bear close examination. If our war aim is to protect ourselves from terrorism, why do we need to wage war against Iraq? Iraq has never inflicted any terrorism on us or even threatened to do so. Every Fox News "expert" takes it for granted that it would be a good thing to kill Saddam Hussein. Why is that? Saddam Hussein is not a fanatical Muslim fundamentalist who is likely to do anything wild and crazy against America that would provoke retaliation.

I'll tell you what Saddam Hussein is. He is a strong leader of his nation. He may be a mean and ruthless SOB -- he may be the kind of fellow you wouldn't want your sister to marry -- but he is a strong leader who refuses to take orders from Jews or from the U.S. government. He does not threaten America and has no reason to do so unless he is pushed into a corner, but the Jews are worried that he might provide help to the Palestinians. They are worried that he will be a threat to further Israeli expansion in the Middle East because he refuses to be bullied or bought. That is the reason that all of the Fox News "experts" agree that it would be a good thing to assassinate him -- although they won't come right out and state that reason. Instead they give us the standard, mealy-mouthed party line about Iraq and Saddam Hussein being a potential terrorist threat that we need to neutralize.

Of course, if we do wage war against Iraq or against Iran, then we will have to worry about terrorist reprisals. When they have nothing else to lose, then they will strike at us with whatever means they have. But if we mind our own business and look out for our own interests, neither Iran nor Iraq has any reason for provoking us. If we had been looking out for our own interests before September 11, instead of for Israel's interests, then 3,000 Americans who lost their lives on that day would still be alive.

Sometimes the Fox News "experts" use a more abstract justification for killing people in other countries who haven't done anything to us: they might do something to us in the future, so we'd better kill them now. The notion that they put forward in a roundabout fashion is that the only way for America to be safe is to kill off everyone who has the potential for hurting us in the future: which is to say, everyone who has the resources for developing weapons of mass destruction and who also refuses to take orders from us. That's a rather interesting way of looking at things, and some rather extreme conclusions can be drawn from it. But if our government actually did believe that is the best way to protect America, then we should launch an all-out nuclear attack on Israel immediately. Israel not only already has developed a very dangerous arsenal of weapons of mass destruction but also is a psychotic nest of murderous thugs posing a danger to the whole world. More than that, Israel has repeatedly shown itself willing to use terrorist tactics against anyone, including America, anytime it thinks it can get away with it.

A memorable example of that is Israel's murderous attack on the U.S.S. Liberty in 1967, which killed 34 American servicemen. The Israelis attacked our ship without warning, using jet aircraft and torpedo boats. Their plan was to sink the Liberty, kill all the survivors in the water by strafing, and then blame it on the Egyptians, in order to cause hostility between the United States and Egypt. That was not the first time Israel had tried such a trick, but it was the most murderous. It failed only because the radio operator aboard the Liberty was able to get off a message identifying the attackers as Israelis before the attack had knocked out all of the Liberty's communications.

But of course, the Fox News "experts" who advocate going to war against Iraq and Iran, sending in occupation troops, and then placing them under puppet governments, because otherwise they might someday develop weapons of mass destruction and use them against America, would faint dead away if it were suggested to them that the same reasoning should be applied to Israel, but even more so. These same "experts" also pretend that the reason for the September 11 attack was that Osama bin Laden "hates our freedom" and had nothing at all to do with the U.S. government's support for Israel.

One might forgive this sort of behavior on the part of the yahoos. In a sense, they don't know any better. They've been raised with the new patriotism -- the government-patriotism -- and they really don't see anything wrong with cheering a government that attacks other countries that haven't attacked us. All that matters to the yahoos is that their team beats the other team: Yea! We're the greatest! Don't mess with us!

But people don't get to be generals by being so shallow in their sensibilities and understanding. The Fox News "experts" understand all the subtleties of the issues involved, but they're too crooked to speak the truth.

I'm sure that it didn't used to be so bad. I'm sure that the "experts" have become more crooked than they used to be, and that truth has become a scarcer commodity. This was brought to mind last week by the media uproar when a Baptist preacher's remarks to President Richard Nixon, made 30 years ago, came to light. Billy Graham, the high-profile celebrity preacher, media star, and adviser to presidents, was about as oily as other Baptist preachers most of the time, but occasionally he spoke frankly on sensitive subjects, as the Oval Office tapes from the first half of 1972, released to the public last week by the National Archives, reveal.

During a meeting with Nixon and others in the Oval Office on February 1, 1972, Graham complained about the total domination of the mass media of news and entertainment in America by Jews. This Jewish control of the media certainly was no secret. I had published the first edition of my exposé of Jewish media control, complete with names and mug shots, which I titled "Who Rules America?," in 1968. Every politician and other leading figure in Washington knew about the Jewish domination of the media; they were just afraid to talk about it for fear of reprisals from the Jews. The result of this timidity was that Sally Soccermom and Joe Sixpack didn't have a clue. The big shots all knew what the Jews were up to, but they were afraid to tell the public. Most of the big shots were even afraid to discuss the Jews among themselves.

In 1972, however, Billy Graham not only complained to Nixon and others in the Oval Office about the Jewish stranglehold on the media, he understood what this Jewish media control was doing to America, and he told those in the Oval Office, "This stranglehold has got to be broken, or the country's going down the drain."

President Nixon agreed with Billy Graham, but he was too cowardly to do anything about it. Nixon said, "I can't ever say that, but I believe it."

That's a poor commentary on the quality of leadership that we have in America. The President understands what Jewish media control is doing to the country, but he is afraid to take any action to protect the country. He prefers to stand aside and let the country go down the drain. And you know, he could have stopped it then. There were enough top military leaders then who still had some old-fashioned patriotism. With a little planning, every Jewish media figure from Hollywood to Madison Avenue could have been arrested and eliminated in a single day. The same thing could have been done with the courts, the Congress, and the Federal bureaucracy. A clean sweep could have been made. The country could have been pulled back from the brink and put on an entirely different course.

Think what an enormous difference that would have made during the past 30 years. We could have cut off all immigration from the Third World and from Asia. The whole hip-hop, rap, MTV culture being pushed by the Jewish entertainment media could have been nipped in the bud. All of the Jewish filth and poison and brainwashing that America has been saturated with during the past 30 years could have been flushed down the drain in 1972, and the country could have been put on an upward course again.

The flow of weapons and money from the United States to Israel could have been halted in 1972, and Israel would have ceased to exist the following year, during the 1973 war. There would be no belligerent Israel in the Middle East today with a nuclear, biological, and chemical arsenal threatening to spark the Third World War and providing the impetus behind the efforts of every other country in the region, Iraq and Iran included, to develop their own weapons of mass destruction in order to counter Israel. But the man with the power to change everything, the man who understood that it needed to be done, the President of the United States, was afraid to act, afraid even to talk about it except among his associates in the White House.

Things clearly are worse today. When Billy Graham's 1972 conversation with Richard Nixon was made public last week, Graham was afraid to acknowledge it. He said that he didn't remember the conversation, but he groveled and apologized anyway. And I cannot imagine anyone in the Bush government today having the courage or the honesty even to have a conversation in the White House about what the Jews are doing to America and to the world and what needs to be done to counter them. Richard Nixon was a crook and a coward, but George Bush is far worse. And the top military leaders today are far less patriotic than the ones of 30 years ago were. The top military leaders today are like the retired generals that one sees being interviewed on Fox News: a sorry lot indeed, who will not even acknowledge the reason for the September 11 attack on America. They are not patriots; they are prostitutes.

The men who control America's mass media are the men who really rule America today. They understand that, and the prostitutes do too. It is essential to both the rulers and the prostitutes that no real patriots gain the power to upset their applecart. The military system over the past 30 years has evolved in a way that weeds patriots out early and keeps them from reaching the top. Actually the military leadership system has been evolving that way over the past 50 years, with an Affirmative Action promotion policy that favors non-Whites and looks with suspicion on White males who still have old-fashioned ideas about patriotism. But 30 years ago there were still a few patriots willing to speak out. General William Westmoreland was the last of these really to say much.

The political system is even worse. It ensures that only men like Bill Clinton and George Bush can reach the highest levels: totally corrupt men, with absolutely no sense of honor or responsibility or real patriotism. We are in real trouble, and it will take real patriots to get us out, but real patriots are in short supply these days. What we have today masquerading as patriots are crooks at the top and flag-waving yahoos at the bottom.

Nevertheless, there still are a few real patriots, a few old-fashioned patriots, here and there, and, as America continues down the drain, I will not be surprised to see one or two of them begin to take action of some sort, but it is unlikely that they will act through the conventional channels of electoral politics or the Armed Forces.

Espionage and Anthrax

Let's talk about the mass media again today. Specifically, let's discuss the consequences of the Jewish control of the media, the sort of thing that Billy Graham and Richard Nixon saw taking America "down the drain" 30 years ago.

I raise this subject with every journalist who comes to my office for an interview. It's clearly not something that they like to talk about, but I try to draw them out anyway. I've said this to you before, and I'll say it again now: journalists are the most lemming-like people whom I have met. They're not stupid, but they absolutely will not say anything Politically Incorrect, even when we're off camera. They always toe the party line. They believe that they're being quite candid with me when they say that Fox News is right wing compared to the other news channels and that perhaps that's because Rupert Murdoch, who runs Fox, isn't a Jew. They claim that these small differences in the way that the various media report the news prove that there's plenty of diversity and freedom of expression in the media.

I respond to them by saying that any differences in bias between Fox News and CNN are pretty small, and that I can learn what the Jewish party line is on any particular issue as well by listening to Fox as I can by listening to CNN. Rupert Murdoch himself may not be a Jew, but his operation is staffed from top to bottom with Jews, and his programming is about as Jewish as that on the other channels. When I say that, they pretend that they don't understand. Perhaps I shouldn't be surprised that they won't tell me anything, even in private, that would get them fired and blacklisted if their Jewish bosses found out about it.

Anyway, let's start today with a couple of very recent examples of media bias. Perhaps you heard about the case that made a few headlines last week in Fort Worth, Texas, and was very briefly reported by other media around the country. That's the case of the 25-year-old Black woman who, driving under the influence of drugs, hit a White pedestrian, 37-year-old Gregory Biggs, with her car on a Fort Worth street. The impact broke Biggs's legs and threw his body up onto the hood of the Black woman's car. His head and shoulders went through the windshield on the passenger side. He was cut by the windshield and because of his broken legs was unable to extricate himself, but otherwise he suffered no life-threatening injuries.

After hitting Biggs, the Black woman drove home with him stuck in her windshield and begging for help. She parked her car in her garage and closed the garage door so that neighbors could not hear Biggs's cries for help. Then she went into her house, had sex with her boyfriend and took some more drugs. From time to time during the next three days, as Biggs slowly bled to death and went into shock, the Black woman went into her garage to watch him wriggling, half on the hood of her car and half stuck through the broken windshield, and listen to him begging for help. When Biggs finally died, the Black woman and a boyfriend pulled his body out of the windshield, put him in the trunk of the boyfriend's car, and dumped his body in a vacant lot.

If you want to read more of the grisly details, you should be able to find them at the Web site of the Fort Worth Star-Telegram. To me, the most important detail is that no news medium mentioned the race of either the killer or the victim. That information wasn't even explicitly in the Star-Telegram, but fortunately photographs of the killer and her victim were. Now, you know what the party line is: race wasn't mentioned because it's irrelevant. One person killed another person in an especially gruesome and callous manner, and race had nothing to do with it. That's the party line.

Now ask yourself this question: Suppose a White man had hit a Black woman with his car and then had driven home with her wriggling in his windshield and had watched her slowly die over the next three days while listening to her cries for help, taking time off occasionally to have sex with his girlfriend. After the Black woman was dead, the White man got a White friend to help him dump her corpse in a vacant lot. Do you believe that the media, in reporting the story after the White man's eventual arrest, would think that the race of the killer and that of the victim were irrelevant? Hey, you know the answer. Every major media outlet in the country would be screaming about White racism and the callous indifference of Whites to the suffering of Blacks. You know it!

And here's an update on a story about Jewish mega-swindlers we covered several weeks ago. This one came from New York two weeks ago. A bribery case involving New York City's real-estate tax assessors was uncovered that cost New Yorkers more than a billion dollars. A number of people were arrested, including 13 out of the 38 tax assessors in Manhattan's real-estate tax department. The interesting thing about this case, besides the fact that such a huge amount of money was stolen, is that everyone involved is a Jew: the real-estate owners, the assessors, and the go-betweens.

Here's the way it worked. The Jewish owner of a piece of Manhattan real estate would receive his property-tax bill from the tax assessor's office. That bill might be several million dollars on a large office building or hotel. The owner would take the bill to any one of several Jewish "tax consultants." Three of these "consultants" arrested on February 25 were Albert Schussler, Joel Edelstein, and Alan Edelstein, all of whom formerly had worked for the city as assessors. The "consultant" would then visit the Jewish tax assessor who had made the assessment at his office. The "consultant" would give the assessor a bribe -- perhaps $10,000 -- and then the assessor would discover that he had made an "error" in the assessment. A new tax bill would be issued, perhaps a million dollars less than the original one. The "consultant" would then collect his consulting fee -- perhaps $50,000 -- from the property owner. The property owner would have a net saving of $950,000 in this transaction, and the city would have a net loss of $1 million.

Investigators estimate that the swindle has cost the city $160 million in the past four years alone -- and the swindle has been going on since 1967. They got away with it for so long because everyone involved is a Jew, and they all were covering for each other. And I'll bet you didn't even hear about it.

Suppose that in Israel there lived a small but very cohesive Gentile minority -- just 21/2 per cent of the Israeli population, and this small Gentile minority somehow managed to be involved in every major swindle in Israel, costing the Israeli people tens of millions of dollars -- I guess I should say "tens of millions of shekels" -- every year. Do you believe that the Israeli newspapers would fail to mention the Gentile character of all this swindling, just as the newspapers over here never -- and I mean never -- mention or draw any conclusions from the Jewishness of the biggest swindles in America?

Well, the most interesting current example of media bias in America is the thundering silence of the media in connection with the arrest and deportation during the past few months of approximately 200 Israelis engaged in espionage in this country. It was the largest espionage ring ever broken up in America. But there were no prosecutions and almost no media coverage. The Bush government simply hustled them back to Israel as quickly and quietly as possible, and most of the media kept quiet about it -- most of the media in this country, that is. In Europe, much more was revealed. The big French newspaper Le Monde reported last week, in its March 5 edition:

A vast Israeli espionage network operating on American territory has been broken up.

Le Monde went on to report the details, citing a confidential U.S. government report that had been obtained by a French group specializing in such acquisitions and posted on the Internet at intelligenceonline.com. This confidential report was prepared for the Justice Department by the Drug Enforcement Administration, the Immigration and Naturalization Service, the FBI, and the Air Force, and the copy of the report used by Le Monde has been declared authentic by the Drug Enforcement Administration. The report details the suspicious activities of a number of young Israelis in the United States, some of them posing as art students and some as sidewalk vendors. They hung around outside sensitive government or military facilities and tried to strike up conversations with government employees. Some of them tried to talk their way past security guards and get into the facilities. Others actually showed up at the homes of government officials and tried to talk their way inside.

It was the Drug Enforcement Administration that first became suspicious of their activities, early last year, but when it became evident that something more serious was going on the FBI and other agencies also became involved in the investigation. Eventually 120 Israelis were arrested and questioned, and it looked as if a major spy scandal, surpassing that of the Jonathan Pollard case, was shaping up. The backgrounds of the arrested Israelis, most of them with military intelligence experience in Israel, just didn't match their claim to be art students or trinket vendors. Six of the arrested Israelis were found with cell phones that had been purchased for them by a former Israeli vice consul in the United States.

Then came September 11, and suddenly the whole government stance on these arrested Israeli agents changed. Instead of being charged with espionage, they were deported back to Israel for visa violations. After September 11 the FBI arrested approximately 80 more of the Israeli agents, but like the others they were quietly deported rather than being prosecuted for espionage. And the media for the most part remained silent.

One U.S. newspaper that has broken the ban on news about the arrested Israelis is the South Florida Sun-Sentinel. Last week, in its March 7 issue, the Sun-Sentinel pointed out that the concentration of deported Israeli "art students" had been especially heavy in precisely those areas where the September 11 hijackers had been living -- and in some cases learning to fly, without bothering to learn how to take off or land. More than a third of the Israeli spies in the United States were operating in those communities in Florida where 10 of the 19 Arab hijackers had been living prior to September 11. At least five of the Israeli spies were in the community of Hollywood, Florida, where Mohammed Atta, who coordinated the hijacking operation, and four of his al-Qaeda associates had been living.

The South Florida Sun-Sentinel was not alone in noting the proximity of the deported Israeli spies to the al-Qaeda members. Le Monde noted that this coincidence of proximity greatly strengthens the suspicion of European intelligence services that the Israelis were shadowing the al-Qaeda agents and knew ahead of time what was up. And of course, they kept their own government informed, but Israel did not share its knowledge with the U.S. government. Some "allies!"

Now, if you ask the FBI why it let all of these Israeli spies go, all you will get is the reply that no espionage charges were filed against them. The real question is why weren't charges filed? You think maybe the FBI wasn't convinced the Israelis were espionage agents? Listen to this: the Israelis posing as "art students" in south Florida were all affiliated with an outfit named "Universal Art," which has an address listed in the town of Sunrise, Florida. Reporters from the Sun-Sentinel went to the address, and no one there had ever heard of Universal Art. The officers of Universal Art listed in Florida incorporation papers were two people with Israeli names, Yitzchak Shish and Chava Sagi. No one had ever heard of them either. Now, do you really believe that the FBI wasn't convinced that the deported Israelis were working for the government of Israel as spies?

I don't believe it. I am sure that the FBI knows that they were spies but received orders not to charge them. Why? I'll tell you: If these Israeli spies had been charged with espionage and put on trial, what almost certainly would have come out of the trials is that Israel knew about September 11 ahead of time and deliberately withheld the information from us so that the attacks could be carried out as planned. The media would not have been able to keep the lid on that, and an enormous degree of resentment by the American people against Israel would have been the consequence. So the spies were turned loose and sent home in order not to damage the sympathy of the American public for our "gallant, little, democratic ally, Israel" and so as not to jeopardize the flow of money from the U.S. Treasury to Israel. What do you call that sort of behavior on the part of the Bush government--and on the part of the media bosses who have kept the whole business as quiet as possible? I call it treason.

Well, this matter of the Israeli spies is quite clear. Another matter, on which fewer facts are currently available to the public, is that of the anthrax-infected letters that were mailed in this country a few weeks ago. There's a $21/2 million reward for information on the perpetrator, and the FBI has had thousands of agents on the case. Not only have there been no arrests, but there hasn't been much news about the search recently.

It certainly is possible that eventually someone will be arrested, but I will not be surprised if no one ever is, and if the government and the media just let the whole matter of anthrax mailings quietly fade away. Why would they do that? Well, perhaps because an arrest would be extremely embarrassing to the media bosses and to the whole tribe to which they belong.

It wasn't so long ago that the Jewish media were suggesting that the anthrax mailings probably were the work of right-wingers, of White supremacists, of neo-Nazis. I had reporters coming by my office and asking me questions about these accusations. And then there were headlines: "Pierce denies responsibility for anthrax mailings." Really. I said at the time that I believed this was a deliberate stratagem on the part of the media to misdirect suspicion. Now I am sure of it.

If the FBI knows who made the anthrax mailings but has been ordered not to arrest him, I am sure that it will be for the same reason that the Israeli spies were not prosecuted. Of course, the FBI may not be able to keep this secret that well. The FBI's hand may be forced, and it may have to arrest the perpetrator after all. Let us hope so. But with a government like we have now, nothing, no matter how treacherous or crooked, will surprise me.

I'll repeat what I've just said: Over the past year, the FBI rounded up 200 Jewish espionage agents in this country. The FBI knew that they were engaged in espionage for the state of Israel. If the FBI had wound up its investigation of this Israeli espionage ring before September 11, then the arrested Jews might have been charged with espionage and prosecuted. Maybe. After September 11, however, the Bush government was under great pressure not to do anything that might embarrass Israel. In the first place, the government and the media were desperate to maintain their pretense that the September 11 attack was not a response to the U.S. government's support of Israel: the attack came only because Osama bin Laden is "evil" and "hates our freedom," and it had nothing at all to do with Israel.

Getting the lemmings to swallow that lie was hard enough. If it were publicly revealed that Israel knew about the attack in advance and deliberately kept the information from us so that the attack could go ahead, even the lemmings would be muttering darkly about Jews and their treachery. It was essential to the media Jews to keep that from happening, and the Bush government obediently went along with the coverup.

Now I have a strong suspicion that for exactly the same reason the FBI has held off on arresting the person who mailed the anthrax letters. I believe that the FBI knows who it is but has been ordered not to arrest him because it would be very embarrassing to the Jews -- at least, don't arrest him yet, not until the Bush government has finished bombing Israel's enemies in the Middle East.

It's not just that I'm a cynical, suspicious bastard. I remember what happened in 1967, for example, when Israel deliberately tried to sink our electronic intelligence ship, the USS Liberty, killing 34 American crewmen in the process, so that they could blame it on Egypt. The government of Lyndon Johnson and the Jewish media collaborated in a massive coverup in order to avoid embarrassing Israel. That's what they're doing now in the case of the Israeli espionage ring that had advance knowledge of September 11 -- and also probably in the case of the anthrax letters. Circumstances beyond the control of the Jewish media and the Bush government may eventually force them to move against the anthrax mailer, however. We'll see.

What's interesting in connection with this business of the media always putting Israel's interests ahead of America's interests and forcing our corrupt and treasonous government to do the same is the public attitude taken by the Jews in this country. They never apologize or act the least bit guilty or embarrassed. They always act as if they were the injured parties. Their arrogance and deceitfulness are simply beyond comprehension for the average Gentile. I'll give you just one example of that today by reading to you a few excerpts from a speech made last month by Abe Foxman, the national director of the country's most powerful Jewish pressure group, the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith. This was a speech to his fellow Jewish insiders, and you can read the whole thing for yourself at the ADL's Web site.

Foxman first said that he had hoped that the world would remember the special responsibility it has to the Jews because of the "Holocaust," and then he said:

My greatest nightmare is that one day I would wake up and something terrible would happen in America and we, the Jewish people, Jews and Israel, will be blamed. It happened.... Today you can travel the Arab world, Asia, and Europe, and read in newspapers and hear on radio and TV the big hideous lie that has become a truth -- that Jews bring about a situation in their interest in order to put the blame on somebody else. How classically anti-Semitic! Now ministers of Arab governments and even newspapers in Western Europe have bought into the big lie. It has become a fact, it is being taught in the schools, that perversion of recent and current history.

The reaction that they expect from the Gentiles -- and it is the reaction they usually have gotten -- is for the Gentiles to pull out their hankies and sniffle into them on behalf of the poor, innocent Jews, being blamed and persecuted once again through no fault of their own. Well, you can read for yourself all of Abe's speech at his ADL Web site, and I know that many of you will be much more inclined to gag than to sniffle. And the one encouraging aspect of this whole, sordid situation is that more and more of the perceptive minority of our people around the world also are gagging instead of sniffling. Abe does indeed have reason to have nightmares, although it's not quite the reason he wants us to think it is.

Senator Feinstein and Police Chief Parks

The subject about which I have spoken with you more than any other is the destructive effect on our people and on our civilization of the Jewish control of our mass media of news and entertainment. In nearly every broadcast, I've mentioned the damage done to us by Jewish media control. I don't talk about this subject so often because I want to bore you but because it is the single most important fact of life today: the single gravest danger threatening our people, our future, our very existence. Overcoming this danger -- breaking the Jewish stranglehold on our mass media -- is the single most urgent and demanding task facing us as a people. That's why I keep talking about it.

And I am sure that many people believe that I overdo it -- especially when I stress the fact that the destructive effects on our people and on our society by the media are deliberate. They think that I'm going overboard when I point out that the overwhelming domination of our mass media by Jews is not a coincidence: when I point out that it didn't just happen, when I point out that the Jews have taken over our media through a deliberate, concerted effort, and that the purpose of their takeover is our destruction. This accusation of mine against the Jews seems too farfetched to many people because they cannot imagine normal men behaving that way. They cannot imagine the sort of people they live with and work with and go to school with behaving like that or having those motivations; they cannot imagine their fellow Gentiles behaving that way.

And when I tell them that the Jews are not like their fellow Gentiles, that the Jews really are different, they take that with a grain of salt. Many of them still believe that the only difference between us and the Jews is a religious difference. In fact, most Americans believe that, but the Jews certainly don't. I don't have to time to get into this subject in depth today, but there are clues all around for the observant.

Here's one clue. Geraldo Rivera, who is himself part of the Jewish media apparatus, although perhaps not as discreet a part as his fellow media Jews would prefer, thinks of his people as a race apart. He's been touring the Middle East recently, propagandizing for the war against Afghanistan and Israel's other enemies and potential enemies and making comments. The Washington Post quoted him at length last week. He said, "I have been a Zionist my entire life. I would die for Israel."

He then went on to criticize his fellow Jews for their carelessness in letting the whole world witness the campaign of genocide they are waging against the Palestinians. It gives the Israelis a bad image. It makes it more difficult for the media Jews in America to portray the Israelis as the good guys. He said:

You can't round up Palestinian young men and put numbers on their arms to make it easier to identify them. That reminds the world ... of what Hitler and the Nazi pigs inflicted on the Jewish race during the Second World War.

Did you catch that: "the Jewish race." Those were Geraldo Rivera's words in the Washington Post of March 14. Just one little slip of the tongue, but still a clue. Now I'll tell you about a more significant clue, which also was revealed last week. On March 13 a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee of the U.S. Senate, the Subcommittee on Technology and Terrorism, held public hearings on so-called "narco-terrorism": which is to say, on the support of international terrorism through the trade in illegal drugs. California Senator Diane Feinstein is the subcommittee chairman. She made the statement to the TV cameras and to the world, in her capacity as a U.S. senator and chairman of the Subcommittee on Technology and Terrorism, that Afghanistan's former Taliban government had financed international terrorism through the opium trade. They grew opium poppies, Feinstein said, in order to finance people like Osama bin Laden. Now, fortunately, we have stopped that particular branch of narco-terrorism.

Now, that is not only a lie, but it is the exact opposite of the truth, and Feinstein knew it. It was the Taliban government, destroyed by the Bush government at the insistence of Diane Feinstein and her fellow Jews, that outlawed the production of opium in Afghanistan and ordered the poppy fields plowed under. They did this for religious reasons, as Islamic fundamentalists. It is the new gangster government of Afghanistan, installed by the Bush government at the insistence of Diane Feinstein and her fellow Jews, that is replanting the poppy fields and starting up the opium trade again.

Why did Feinstein deliberately turn the truth on its head like this? Well, for one thing, it is simply part of the Jews' propaganda campaign aimed at demonizing their enemies and everyone who stands in their way. That's why the media, in every story they print about me, always call me a "hater." The Taliban government, despite all of its faults, was a government based on principles -- in this case the principles of the Koran -- and therefore was considered dangerous by the Jews. They tolerate only corrupt governments, governments that can be bribed and intimidated and manipulated -- like the present government in Washington, for example. Therefore, Feinstein accused the Taliban of producing opium in order to support international terrorism, when she knew that to be the opposite of the truth.

And the reason she made her false accusation so brazenly is that she knew her fellow Jews in the media would not contradict her. She knew that she could get away with it. And of course, the media Jews did let her get away with it. I saw and heard her make her accusation against the Taliban on CNN, and I am sure that the other networks also televised the Senate's narco-terrorism hearings. But no one in the media covering these hearings pointed out that the Jewess had lied brazenly in accusing the Taliban of being involved in the opium-poppy business.

Well, I guess that's pretty trivial stuff. The big lie at the moment remains the claim that the September 11 attack had nothing to do with the U.S. government's support for Israel's genocide and aggression in the Middle East, that the attack came only because Osama bin Laden "hates our freedom." But sometimes the little lies can be as revealing as the big lies.

I'll tell you about another clue as to the Jews' motivations. My organization, the National Alliance, is committed to building alternative media for communicating with the public and countering the lies of the Jews' media. We use books and magazines and video and the Internet and shortwave radio. We also use music produced by our Resistance Records affiliate. And just two months ago we began producing and distributing video games. Our first video game, called Ethnic Cleansing, is about urban warfare between Whites and non-Whites. The number-one bad guy in the game is the Jewish prime minister and war criminal, Ariel Sharon. The player wins if he can find Sharon's secret hideout in the depths of the New York subway system and kill him without being killed by a non-White. The purpose of the game is to get White kids to think in racial terms, to think in terms of their White identity and develop a feeling of solidarity with other Whites; it is to help them overcome the sense of racial guilt and racial inferiority deliberately instilled in them by the propaganda of the Jewish media and to teach them that they can fight back.

Well, of course, all of that makes the game anathema to the Jewish media, and they have been screaming about it ever since we began distributing it in January. "It's violent!" they've been screaming. "It'll incite White kids to commit hate crimes!" You may have seen some of this commotion in the media yourself. The most powerful Jewish pressure group in America, the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, issued a special press release last month denouncing our game and calling it a danger to children. Really!

If you play video games yourself and are familiar with some of the more popular games, then you immediately will recognize the hypocrisy in this Jewish response to our game. Nearly all video games are combat games. They're all violent. That is the nature of video games. One of the most popular video games now on the market is called Grand Theft Auto. It has sold more than 2 million copies since it came out four months ago. It's a cop-killer game. It's ultra-violent. It gives the player a chance to be an auto thief and to machine-gun policemen wholesale. It also gives the player a chance to have sex with prostitutes and then to kick them bloody afterward.

The Anti-Defamation League never has expressed any concern about Grand Theft Auto. The Jews aren't worried about what it teaches the kids who play it. Stealing cars, killing cops, and beating up prostitutes is good, clean fun as far as the Anti-Defamation League and the Jewish media are concerned: no outrage, no denunciations, despite the fact that Grand Theft Auto has sold more than a hundred times as many copies as our Ethnic Cleansing. Grand Theft Auto is available in video game stores all over the country. You have to order our game, Ethnic Cleansing, from Resistance Records, because the game stores are afraid of it. They are afraid of the Jewish media.

The Jews, in fact, have the video game business, like the other media, pretty much under their control. The trade association for video game makers is the Interactive Digital Software Association. The president of that trade association is a Mr. Lowenstein.

Amazing, isn't it? Lowenstein.

In response to the Anti-Defamation League's complaints about Ethnic Cleansing, Lowenstein issued a written statement. He wrote:

The Interactive Digital Software Association finds these games [and he means Ethnic Cleansing] abhorrent and condemns these kinds of sick efforts to abuse the wonderful technology of video games to peddle racist and anti-Semitic garbage.

To Mr. Lowenstein Grand Theft Auto is an example of "the wonderful technology of video games," and Ethnic Cleansing is "garbage."

My point here is that when Jewish organizations and the media say that they are concerned about exposing our kids to violence, they aren't. They're lying. When they say that they're concerned about teaching the wrong values to kids, they aren't. They're lying.

Well, let me refine that statement. The Jews are concerned about some types of violence: not about stealing cars, machine-gunning White policemen, and stomping women bloody; that sort of violence is all right. The sort of violence that sends them into a screaming frenzy is White people sticking up for themselves, White people fighting back: that's bad violence, so far as the Anti-Defamation League and the mass media and Mr. Lowenstein are concerned.

And as for values, Grand Theft Auto teaches kids the same sort of values that Murray Rothstein's MTV does. It teaches them anti-social values. It teaches them alienation. From the Jewish viewpoint that's good. Ethnic Cleansing teaches kids White solidarity, White community, White self-respect, White self-defense. That's not good. Oh, my goodness, no! The media do not approve of teaching kids those values.

My point is that the media are in fact destructive of our values and our society and our civilization. My point is that the media, because they are dominated by Jews, work to advance the Jews' interests, not our interests, and their interests are opposed to ours. That's supremely important. That's the most important thing of which our people should be aware.

And let me tell you something, the Jews are aware of it: not just the big-shot media Jews and the Jews at the Anti-Defamation League. They all understand that they thrive only when we have been demoralized, alienated, and atomized. It's a tribal instinct for them. The thing they all fear most is our racial solidarity, our sense of racial consciousness, our willingness to stand together for the things that are important to us. And basically that's why they prefer that young, White Americans play games like Grand Theft Auto, and we want them to play Ethnic Cleansing instead.

Their weapons against us are primarily their mass media of news and entertainment. At this time, our weapons for defending our people against them are primarily our own media. We in the National Alliance are working night and day to make our weapons more effective, to reach and move more of our people with our media, to counter the poison coming from their media. And I guess that we're having some success in that direction, judging by the uproar in the Jewish media about our new video game.

Unfortunately, our problem is not just to catch up with the Jews in using mass media to communicate effectively with the public. The Jews are moving against our people on other fronts as well. They can see the gains that we're making with our media, and their aim is to head us off by outlawing all opposition to their media. They began a decade ago with so-called "hate crimes." That was to get the public accustomed to the idea that people should be punished for what they think as well as for what they do when they commit an offense.

Now they're pushing hard for "speech crime" legislation, so that people can be punished whether they do anything or not. The general rationale they use is that as our society becomes more and more "diverse" and multicultural, we all have to be more careful what we say or write, lest we offend someone. If we offend someone there may be a public disturbance, perhaps even a riot. If we want our society to be peaceful and prosperous, then we all should be careful what we say; we all should be careful not to say something that may offend a homosexual or a feminist or a Jew or a Black or what have you. The real threats to a peaceful, prosperous society, they would have us believe, are the dissidents, the people who insist on expressing Politically Incorrect ideas or exposing Politically Inconvenient facts, the people who deliberately offend other people. They're as bad as terrorists. We need laws to protect society from them. We need "speech crime" laws, they tell us.

That's their rationale. They're pushing it slowly and carefully. Every time they complain about something I've said or something I've published, they are careful to say, "Well, there's nothing we can do to stop him, because of the First Amendment." And the implication is that it's too bad there's nothing that they can do to stop me. There ought to be a way to stop me. After all, this is the 21st century, and we need new laws. The First Amendment was written more than 200 years ago by a bunch of dead, White males who owned slaves. It's still around; it's still the law of the land, but it's about time to make some changes. At the very least, the police need to keep an eye on Pierce and other Politically Incorrect dissidents.

That's exactly what Jewish pressure groups like the Anti-Defamation League are saying, and they're receiving at least implicit support from the whole Jewish community, not just from the media Jews. And these Jewish groups are doing more than just propagandizing for "speech crime" laws. One thing they are doing is pushing for what they call "hate filters" to be installed on the computers used by students in public schools and by library patrons in public libraries. These "hate filters" are pieces of software that block access to all Web sites that are deemed Politically Incorrect. When such a piece of software has been installed on a computer, then the person using that computer cannot go to the National Alliance Web site and listen to one of my American Dissident Voices broadcasts or read the text of the broadcast. He can access only Politically Correct Web sites from the computer. And of course, it is the Anti-Defamation League that decides what is Politically Correct and what is not.

The Anti-Defamation League has been having a frightening degree of success in persuading librarians and school administrators all over the country to lobotomize their computers with these Jewish "hate filters." "It's to protect the children from being exposed to hate," the Anti-Defamation League claims. And of course, they get the politicians to back them up. What politician will dare to be against protecting children from hate? In fact, considering the terminal state of corruption of politics in America today, what politician will dare to stand up to the Anti-Defamation League on anything?

And, as I have warned in earlier broadcasts, Jewish groups are infiltrating and corrupting law-enforcement agencies all over America. They will tell you that it has nothing to do with corruption, of course, but it certainly does. The Anti-Defamation League, for example, has set up what it calls a "Law Enforcement Agency Resource Network." The Anti-Defamation League offers to provide training to police personnel on how to recognize and deal with "hate criminals" and "speech criminals." And police departments, most of which these days are headed by men who are much more politicians than policemen, will go along with the Jews. Bernard Parks, who is chief of the Los Angeles Police Department, one of the largest law-enforcement agencies in the country, signed a formal agreement with the Anti-Defamation League last month. The Los Angeles Police Department and the Anti-Defamation League will share information in the effort to protect citizens from haters and terrorists.

In connection with this agreement the Los Angeles regional director of the Anti-Defamation League announced:

In the battle against haters, extremists, and those who seek to erode our democratic values and threaten our security, we are committed to providing law-enforcement agencies with the resources and tools to augment their ongoing efforts. We have extensive resources available to law enforcement, including current and archival information, analysis and programs.

You can read that statement for yourself right on the ADL's Web site, at adl.org. What the ADL doesn't mention is that much of its "archival information" was obtained illegally. I am sure that Los Angeles Police Chief Bernard Parks is fully aware that the Los Angeles office of the Anti-Defamation League was raided by police from his department with a search warrant in April 1993, and more than 12,000 stolen confidential police files on individuals were recovered. The impropriety of any sort of agreement for collaboration between the Los Angeles Police Department and the Anti-Defamation League is staggering.

Chief Parks, like all too many of his colleagues, unfortunately, is a politician. He understands the impropriety of what he is doing by exchanging confidential information on citizens with the Anti-Defamation League. But, like Diane Feinstein and her brazen claim that the Taliban was behind Afghanistan's opium trade, Chief Parks is sure that the news media will not call him to account for his arrangement with the Anti-Defamation League.

Well, I'm sure that you can see where all of this is headed, without my having to connect all of the dots for you. We all are in an extremely dangerous situation. Our freedom is being stolen from us. We'd better start doing something about it.

Bad News and Good News

Let's begin today by reminding ourselves of something we talked about on this program two weeks ago, and that is the increasing corruption and politicization of America's most important national security and law-enforcement organizations. We talked specifically about two glaring and shameful lapses on the part of the Justice Department and the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

The first of these was the refusal to prosecute some 200 Israeli espionage agents in the biggest spy ring ever broken up in this country. These Jewish espionage agents were arrested by the FBI last year, both before and after the September 11 attack. After September 11, however, when the Bush government realized that these Israeli agents not only had been spying on various U.S. military and government installations but also had been shadowing the al-Qaeda agents in this country and had advance information about the attack that it did not share with the U.S. government, they all were quietly sent back to Israel instead of being prosecuted. The Bush government's reason for simply letting all of these spies go was that prosecuting them for espionage would have been extremely embarrassing to Israel and would have thrown a spotlight on the whole issue of U.S.-Israeli relations at a time when the government was desperate to keep the public from thinking about why America was attacked on September 11.

Mr. Bush knew that the controlled news media also didn't want the public asking questions about this very delicate subject, and he knew that if he simply sent the spies quietly back to Israel no one in the media would criticize him for it. On the other hand, the prosecution of the 200 spies for espionage would have brought things to the surface that would have earned Mr. Bush the undying hatred of the media Jews and of all of Israel's other support groups in this country. They would have given him the Richard Nixon treatment. It would have been political suicide for him. So he ordered the FBI to turn them loose and send them home.

Well, the good news in this sorry episode is that, despite the silence of the mainstream media, this issue isn't just fading away. Many media in Europe are continuing to bring out new details, almost on a daily basis, and because of the Internet many of America's perceptive and thoughtful minority are learning about these things too and are discussing them. For example, a 60-page internal report on the Israeli espionage activity prepared by the Drug Enforcement Administration is now in general circulation. Two weeks ago, when we first talked about this Jewish espionage, only brief excerpts from this confidential DEA report were available on the Internet. I believe that it is likely that more and more information on this subject will continue to become public.

It's too late, of course, to prosecute the spies now, and Sally Soccermom and Joe Sixpack will continue to remain completely ignorant of the entire affair, but more and more members of the perceptive minority will learn about it, and that will cause at least some embarrassment in both the Bush administration and in the FBI. That embarrassment, especially among career FBI people, is a very good thing.

The other thing that we discussed two weeks ago is the FBI's failure so far to charge anyone for mailing anthrax-infected letters. I suggested that the FBI probably knows who the perpetrator is but that they may have been ordered by the Bush government not to arrest him because it would be embarrassing to the media, to Israel, and to Mr.Bush himself. I suggested that the anthrax case may be something that Mr. Bush and his Jewish handlers would like to see fade away quietly, as they hoped that the Israeli espionage matter would.

The more information that comes out on the espionage case, however, the more difficult it will be to avoid charging the guilty party in the anthrax case. I think that all of the people involved believed that they could just cover up the Jewish espionage arrests, and no one would notice. They certainly were once able to get away with that sort of thing.

Remember the USS Liberty? That was back in 1967, before the Internet, and the government of Lyndon Johnson, the Navy brass in the Pentagon, and the Jewish media all collaborated in a huge cover-up, in order to avoid embarrassing the Jews. The Israelis had attacked a U.S. Navy ship, trying to sink it so that they could blame it on Egypt and cause anti-Egyptian feeling in the United States. They killed 35 American crewmen in the attempt. That should have brought massive military retaliation against Israel, but it brought a cover-up instead, and the cover-up worked. The surviving crew members were ordered to keep their mouths shut, and most Americans never heard about the USS Liberty. I don't think that the Jews could get away with that sort of thing today.

So, the more information that leaks out on the Bush government's failure to prosecute the arrested Jewish spies, the more the Bush people and the FBI people must fear that if they continue to avoid arresting the anthrax mailer, the information will leak out anyway, and when it does it will make them look very bad indeed if it appears that they tried to cover it up. In the case of the FBI, they have to choose between following the politically motivated directives from the White House and maintaining a cover-up on the one hand, or defying the White House and risking career reprisals.

There is an internal shake-up and reorganization going on now in the FBI, and I believe the reason for this is not to increase the FBI's efficiency as a law-enforcement agency, but instead to adapt it better to its politicized role and allow it to do a better job of maintaining cover-ups without leaks. The bright side of this is that the more corrupt the government and its secret police agencies become, the easier it becomes to fight them. The most formidable enemy is an honest enemy, an enemy who believes in the rightness of his cause. A corrupt enemy, who cares only about his career, will be easier to defeat. And it should be painfully clear now to every perceptive patriot that there is no way to regain control of our destiny and secure our freedom -- or even our survival -- without fighting and defeating the present government.

Considerations of this sort have been on my mind not only in connection with the preparation of these weekly broadcasts but also in connection with my responsibility as chairman of the National Alliance. We have a Membership Handbook that is given to every member of the National Alliance. The National Alliance Membership Handbook covers such subjects as rules of behavior for members, but it also covers such things as the long-range goals of the National Alliance: What sort of society do we want to have in the future, after the present mess has been cleaned up? What sort of educational system? What sort of economy? What sort of government?

I'm working on a new edition of our Membership Handbook at the moment, and so I've had to think about all of these things. In particular, I've had to deal with the problem of minimizing government corruption: of designing a government that is least likely to go astray, least likely to ignore its most fundamental responsibility of safeguarding the freedom and welfare of the citizenry and promoting their progress, least likely to be subverted and taken over by our enemies, least likely to become like our present government in Washington.

I'm not convinced that there is a perfect solution to this problem, but I do believe that we can do a much better job than we have done so far in America. Just having an ethnically clean citizenry, without 30 million descendants of our former African slaves wrecking our cities and our schools and wielding a growing bloc vote in elections, would be a huge step toward having a good government. Not having our mass media in the hands of the Jews would be an even bigger step forward. Eliminating the whole business of party politics, which has been a dirty business from the beginning, also would give our people a much better chance of having an honest government.

Many people in America will agree with one or more of these points. And I don't mean just the small, thoughtful minority of Americans -- I don't mean just the people who listen to American Dissident Voices every week -- I mean that many Sally Soccermoms and Joe Sixpacks also will agree that, yes, Blacks are a really worrisome problem, and it'll be hard ever to clean up the government when they make up such a big voting bloc. Or they will say, yeah, I agree with Billy Graham and Richard Nixon: the Jews have a stranglehold on the media, and that's not good for this country.

Well, each of these problems that many people agree ought to be dealt with -- the out-of-control Black problem, the Jewish stranglehold on the media, and the circus-like nature of our electoral system -- each of these problems grew out of the type of government that we have now: the same governmental structure, the same governmental institutions. The weaknesses were there from the beginning. The problems may not have been apparent at the beginning, but the potential was there. And we can't get rid of any of these problems with the government as it is now. That is, we can't eliminate the Black problem or the Jewish problem or the problem of party politics through the normal processes of the government that we have now under the conditions that exist now. For example, we can't expect Congress to enact legislation stripping the Jews of their media control, even if there were no constitutional conflicts, when every politician in Congress already has a string tied to him by the Jews who control the media.

The problems confronting our people can be solved only by extraordinary means: by making a radical break with our present way of doing things. And that radical break, of course, cannot come from the established procedures of the present government. This is the sticking point for most people. They want solutions. They want an honest government. But they are afraid to do what is required to bring about an honest government. They don't want a revolution. They want a solution that is safe and nice, safe and peaceful.

Blowing up buildings and destroying cities and killing a bunch of people with bombs and bullets is OK with them if it's on the other side of the world, in Afghanistan or Iraq. They can watch that on TV and still feel safe. But they definitely don't want that sort of thing happening close to home, in Washington or New York or Los Angeles, where it will interfere with their shopping-mall excursions and their ball-game viewing. Even most members of the perceptive minority, who think about our problems and worry about them much more than the Sally Soccermoms and Joe Sixpacks do, are afraid of the means necessary to eliminate the problems. Most of them also don't want a revolution.

A few more episodes like the Bush government's refusal to prosecute the huge Israeli spy ring that the FBI broke up last year, however, will help many members of the perceptive minority accept the fact that revolution is the only solution. And if the FBI's failure to make an arrest in the case of the anthrax letters turns out also to be the result of pressure from the Bush government trying to avoid embarrassing its Jewish friends, and if the facts leak out anyway, even more thoughtful people will understand that the time has passed when a nice solution could have ended our problems.

Well, the fact that things have to become even worse, before enough people to do the job will be convinced that the job must be done, shouldn't stop us from planning ahead and thinking about the sort of safeguards that we need to build into a new government to make it less likely that it will be corrupted. Of course, all we can do now, and all I'm trying to do in the National Alliance Membership Handbook is address our problems in a general sort of way. All I'm trying to do now is lay down the general principles that will guide us in building a new government. The details will involve much more work and also many decisions that simply cannot be made now.

Avoiding government corruption isn't the only thing of concern to the National Alliance, and in our Membership Handbook we look at the sort of social structure and the sort of economy and the sort of educational system that we want also. Just as in the case of government, however, our principles are quite at odds with the generally accepted notions today of how the economy and our educational system and our society should be run, and what goals are proper for them. One ruling notion today is that sexual equality should be promoted at any cost: equality between men and women in the workplace, equal roles in society, no distinction between men and women in education.

The application of this notion has had many consequences, but the one with which I am most concerned is that it has caused the White birthrate to drop far below the replacement level. Either the White birthrate comes up, or we become extinct. That consideration must take precedence over all others. To get the White birthrate up -- and not just the overall White birthrate, but especially the birthrate among the best White women, the ones with the best genes -- we must structure our society and our economy and our educational system so that many fewer of our best women choose careers outside the home. We must give them strong incentives to marry early and have several children. We must put an end to the destructive propaganda that makes so many of them believe that to be a wife and mother is to be a failure, that a woman can only find happiness by being like a man. We must make it economically possible for a man to support a family without his wife and the mother of his children having to work outside the home.

You know, we can quibble about many of the details, but we can't quibble about the fundamental fact that we must bring up our birthrate or we're finished.

And you see, it's all tied together: the type of government, the type of society, the way the economy works, the things we teach our children, and the way in which we teach them. They're all interdependent. If one becomes corrupted or subverted, eventually they all become corrupted. To become healthy again as a people, we need to do many things differently. How we need to do them differently is what I've been concerned with in preparing the new edition of the National Alliance Membership Handbook. And as I said a minute ago, I've been thinking about how we ought to do things only in broad outline, only in principle. And my touchstone in setting down the principles that must guide the building of a new government, a new society, a new economy, and a new educational system -- the touchstone is racial survival, racial health, racial progress. Everything that we do in the future must be guided by the single consideration: will it help our people to survive and to become healthy again?

And this consideration and the principles that follow from it are radically opposed to the principles governing things in America today. There can be no smooth transition from one set of principles to the other. The transition will be revolutionary and undoubtedly very disruptive for everyone concerned. And that's why the National Alliance is an educational organization at this time. We can't even begin to implement the changes now that we believe should be made, but we can get people to think and to plan now for the day when we can begin to implement changes. And that day comes closer every time the government in Washington does something like trying to cover for a huge Israeli espionage network and shows by its actions that it is more interested in protecting the Jewish spies than in protecting the American people. That day comes closer every time the government in Washington, through its Israel-first policy, brings down on America a disaster such as the September 11 attack, and then claims it doesn't know why we were attacked and continues with the same Israel-first policy as before.

Now, here's the good news: this sort of behavior by the government in Washington will continue. Some time ago the government started down a slippery slope, and it is too far down now to be able to start back up or even to slow its slide. Can you imagine that smirking, feckless nincompoop we have in the White House now even wanting to stop the slide? He and his predecessor have gotten away with everything so far. Why should they even want to have an honest government? There would be no place in it for them, except the end of a rope.

The people who go into politics in America today are not revolutionaries. They are not men of principle. They are lawyers and businessmen. They are men who have learned how to go with the flow: men who have learned to lie convincingly and to present a good image to the TV cameras. When they find themselves in a corrupt environment their instinct is to adapt. And the Jews who have a stranglehold on our mass media of news and entertainment certainly won't be inclined to do anything but tighten their grip even more. They know that they have a tiger by the tail and that they dare not let go. They will continue leading our government to pursue policies favoring their people at the expense of our people. And so my prediction is that America will continue down the slippery slope faster and faster.

America will experience embarrassment after embarrassment, disaster after disaster. The Sally Soccermoms and Joe Sixpacks may remain largely oblivious to what is happening, but more and more members of the perceptive minority, the minority whose participation is necessary to keep the gears of government and the economy turning, will understand that radical change is necessary and cannot be postponed much longer. The principles in the National Alliance's Membership Handbook, which a year or two ago seemed quite theoretical -- perhaps even irrelevant -- to most practical-minded people, because there was no obvious way in which they could be implemented, are becoming less theoretical and more relevant with each passing year: indeed, with each passing month.

Once again: The bad news is that America has gotten herself into a hell of a mess by not being careful enough about the principles by which she governed herself. The good news is that the mess is becoming more obvious, and the reaction is growing. And there is an organization, the National Alliance, that is concerned about matters of principle and is working to build itself into a force for putting its principles into practice. Perhaps you are one of those who should be working with us. Think about it.

A Fatal Influence

I've just finished watching the television news showing the latest round of bloodletting between Jews and Palestinians in the Middle East. It's certainly good to see that the Palestinians finally have learned how to improve the kill ratio. For a long time it seemed that for every Jew killed by a Palestinian, the Jews killed 100 or so Palestinians. Things are a bit better now.

But the bloodletting is not the most interesting aspect of the news about the Middle East. The most interesting aspect is the response of the politicians over here and of the media over here. All of us, of course, view the world through our own prejudices. Despite my prejudices, though, when I watch the news I do try to imagine how other people, with different prejudices, are reacting to what I am seeing. I see George Bush and the other politicians over here desperately sucking up to the Jews by demanding that Yasser Arafat "stop the violence," that Yasser Arafat "call off his terrorists." Whether it is a Palestinian blowing himself up at an Israeli military checkpoint and taking three Jews with him or one of Ariel Sharon's murder squads summarily shooting a group of young Palestinian men they have rounded up in Ramallah, the Bush crowd over here calls on Yasser Arafat to "stop the violence."

Now, on aesthetic grounds alone, I could never be an Arafat booster. He's about as aesthetically appealing as Ariel Sharon. But whenever I see George Bush, with that little smirk on his face, blaming every act of violence in occupied Palestine on the Palestinians and never on the Jewish occupiers -- whenever I hear him repeat his same old claim that "Arafat isn't doing enough to stop the violence," while Jewish soldiers are shooting more Palestinian children, I ask myself whether Bush's performance looks as grotesque to other viewers as it does to me. Doesn't it make other viewers squirm in embarrassment when they are reminded that this pathetic, smirking liar sucking up to the Jews is the President of the United States?

I've heard people who still are enamored of the democratic system of government that we have in the United States make excuses for the behavior of Bush and the other politicians: they have to behave that way, I've been told, because of the media bias. They couldn't get elected if they didn't pretend to be pro-Israel. And when I hear that all I can think is that no honorable man has to behave that way. No real American has to behave that way. No decent man has to stand for public office under the present system. George Bush and Dick Cheney and the rest got into politics knowing ahead of time that if elected they would have to play by Jewish rules.

Well, of course, Mr. Bush's apologists are right about the media bias. While Yasser Arafat was huddled in his office in Ramallah last week, without water or electricity or food, surrounded by Israeli tanks, and Jewish soldiers were trying to shoot their way in, American reporters managed to get Arafat on the telephone, and what they asked him was, "Mr. Arafat, why don't you stop the violence?"

Because of Jewish media bias, most Americans see only one side of the violence. When a Palestinian woman blows herself up in a Jewish restaurant and kills a dozen or so Jews, it's all over television here, and we get to hear Mr. Bush once again blaming the violence on Arafat. When the Jews round up Palestinians on the streets of Ramallah, handcuff them, march them around a corner out of sight, and then shoot them, Americans never hear about it. In Europe at least, the public is getting a somewhat more balanced picture.

I have on my desk a stack of news reports from European newspapers from earlier this week. On top of the stack is a report from this Sunday's issue of the Observer, a major London newspaper. It's headed: "Without Mercy: Israelis Execute Arafat's Guards." The report itself is a first-hand account by Peter Beaumont, the Observer's foreign-affairs editor in Ramallah, as he goes into an office building near Arafat's headquarters and views the corpses of a group of Palestinian policemen who have been rounded up by Sharon's soldiers, disarmed, made to kneel in a hallway, and then shot to death. These aren't terrorists; they are Palestinian policemen who have been rounded up by the Jews and murdered in cold blood.

Beaumont describes the condition of the corpses in detail. He notes that the locations of the blood spatters on the walls show that the victims were shot while they were kneeling. After the Jews mowed down the policemen with assault rifles at point blank range, a Jew shot each one in the head to finish him off. It's disgusting. But what's even more disgusting is the fact that most Americans never have a chance to see this news because the media over here either suppress it or downplay it.

Since Ariel Sharon became Israel's prime minister, have you ever heard an American reporter or an American politician ask him why he doesn't stop the violence? Have you ever heard an American reporter ask him about his murderous activities as a war criminal before becoming prime minister? Have you ever heard an American reporter ask him about the recent assassinations of the principal witnesses who might be called to testify against him in a war crimes trial? These assassinations, almost certainly carried out on Sharon's orders by the Mossad, Israel's main organ of state terrorism, have been big news in Europe, but in the United States they have gone virtually unreported.

Well, no one has talked more about the need to end the Jewish control of our mass media than I have. But again I say, Jewish media control is no excuse for people like George Bush. Jewish control of our electoral system is no excuse for any politician to behave in the way that virtually all of ours do.

There are several ways one can look at our problems, and, as I said at the beginning, I try to look at them in every way. One could say that everything is the fault of White American men. We used to run this country. If the Jews have taken over our mass media, it's because we let them do it. If we have a bunch of lying crooks in Washington who ought to be hanged, it's because we let the system become what it is today. So we could blame ourselves instead of the politicians or the Jewish media.

We also could blame the changed social and economic environment in America for softening us up to the point that we let the Jews and the politicians get away with what they're doing. We certainly do need to toughen ourselves up. We do need to discipline ourselves better, both individually and collectively. We do need to be more vigilant. We do need to have a redesigned social and economic environment that keeps us tough and disciplined. We need to have values oriented toward strength and fitness and progress and survival instead of toward comfort and luxury. And when we regain control of our situation, we do need to hang a great many politicians.

Well, it's good to think about all of these things. It's good to look at our problems from every viewpoint. One element that we encounter over and over, whether we look at media bias or at the crookedness of our politicians or at our own softness and decadence, is the role of the Jews. This role is pretty evident in the problem of media bias, although I still encounter people -- mostly conservatives -- who tell me that Jewish control of the media isn't a problem. They say to me, "What difference does it make that Jews are represented disproportionately in the mass media? They're good businessmen. The mass media are big business. It wouldn't be any different if Lutherans or atheists owned the media." That, I believe, can properly be called willful ignorance.

I encounter many more people who want to make a distinction between the media Jews and Zionist Jews on the one hand, and all the rest of the Jews -- that is, non-Zionist Jews and non-media Jews -- on the other hand. The media Jews, everyone agrees, are a sleazy bunch. And the Zionist Jews are not to be trusted because they are loyal to Israel, not to America, but those who aren't Zionists are just as trustworthy as non-Jews, I have been told. Perhaps the ignorance of many of these people is not willful, but it is ignorance nevertheless.

The truth of the matter is that our present misfortune is not just media Jews or Zionist Jews, but Jews: all of them.

Let me explain to you something that I've talked about in the past but that needs reiteration because many people just didn't get it. It's not terribly complicated, but it's quite at odds with the modern American way of viewing things. All of us White Americans -- or our ancestors at some time during the past 400 years -- came here from Europe, where we spent many thousands of years in isolation, developing into what we are. We developed as a race. We developed collectively. We not only developed our coloration and our facial features and other characteristics that distinguish us as a race, we also developed a general pattern of thinking and of behaving. We developed a way of living and of surviving, as a race.

We encountered other races on the southern and eastern borders of our area of development, but for the most part we developed on our own, and whether our ancestors for the last thousand years or so were in Scotland or Latvia or Ukraine, we developed similarly. There was a lot less difference between our ancestors in Ireland and those in Greece or Poland than between all of us and any of the non-European races. And as I said, the characteristics that distinguished us as Europeans were psychological as well as physical. We had our way of looking at the world and of relating to the world, and other races had theirs.

The fact that some racial differences are invisible makes things a little tricky. It's easy for us to look at a Black and understand that he and we belong to different races. When we look at a Jew the difference is not as apparent, but it is just as real. One difference between us and the Jews is that they have a far stronger collective consciousness, a far stronger consciousness of who they are and how they differ from us, than we do. We can spend a lot of time talking about how much of this difference in collective consciousness is genetic and how much is the result of cultural conditioning, but the essential thing for now is that the difference is real, and it's very important. And there are other important differences.

Until about 2,000 years ago we didn't have to worry about these differences, because we had no contact with the Jews, for all practical purposes. In fact, it's been only during about the past 200 years that we've had much interaction with them. They followed the Roman legions into Gaul and into Germany and into other parts of Europe to sell trinkets and to buy prisoners of war as slaves, but during the Middle Ages they were kept pretty much confined to ghettos. Even so, they caused enough problems that they were expelled en masse from every country in Europe at one time or another. But from about the time of the Napoleonic Wars they really began infiltrating our society and having a major influence.

When the barriers came down, the Jews saw a whole new world opened up to them. But they saw that world with their eyes, and of course, it was not their type of world. It was our world, our society, which we had created to suit our own nature, and it was quite different from the sort of world that would suit them. And so they set about remaking our world to suit themselves. And the result of that endeavor on their part is what we see all around us today.

Like every other race, we have our weaknesses, our flaws, which we tried to cope with as best we could when we had the advantage of isolation: that is, when we could deal with our own problems in our own ways. When the Jews came into our society they displayed an uncanny knack for sniffing out our weaknesses and exploiting them.

What I will say now is, like many other things I say, an oversimplification, but it is my way of getting at the truth. When the Jews surveyed our world and made their plans for changing it to suit themselves, they had two goals: first, to remake our society so that it would be more agreeable to them; and second, to disable us so that we would not be able to defend ourselves. With these two goals in mind they made a beeline for our mass media. It's not just happenstance that they set about monopolizing our mass media instead of, say, our railroads or our steel industry. They knew exactly what they were doing.

And it wasn't just the media Jews. While some of them were elbowing the Gentiles out of the way and consolidating their stranglehold on Hollywood, others were quietly taking over whole departments at our universities, building up their numbers in various professional societies, infiltrating themselves into the management of labor unions, working their way into positions of influence in our political parties, organizing so-called "interfaith" groups and persuading Christian leaders to enter into a one-way "dialogue" with them, setting themselves up as cultural arbiters: as "experts" on our art and our music and our literature.

And none of this was done blindly or simply as a matter of chance. They worked together like the various units of an invading army.

As I said a moment ago, I'm oversimplifying, but I'm happy to refer you to places where you can dig out a lot of the details for yourselves. I'll mention now just two books that are available from the sponsor of this broadcast, National Vanguard Books. One is You Gentiles, by the Jewish publicist, Maurice Samuel. The other is Bolshevism from Moses to Lenin, by the German playwright and publisher, Dietrich Eckart. Both books were written back in the 1920s, and both approach the Jewish problem in a fairly comprehensive way, but from opposite sides of the conflict. If you read them, I think you'll find them enlightening. And these two books will lead you to others.

I told you that the Jews have two goals. They're not just taking over our society and remaking it to suit themselves; they're also working to cripple us morally so that we can't fight back. That's why you see them doing many things in America that they aren't doing because they like those things for themselves, but because those things weaken us. Consider their promotion of feminism, for example: feminism certainly isn't something they want for themselves; it's contrary to their whole tradition. And their position in favor of open borders for America certainly isn't something they favor for Israel.

Well, an understanding of what the Jews have done and are doing to our society, and why they're doing it, isn't something that I expect everyone to develop the first time they hear about these things. That's why I talk about them over and over again and go at them from so many different angles. This understanding is important. It's a matter of survival or extinction for us, and we'd better grasp it, even if we have to read a few books and do some hard thinking.

One angle I've talked about a lot recently, especially since September 11, is the consequence for America of letting the Jews control our foreign policy. Another consequence of Jewish influence, which for me is far more important than anything Osama bin Laden could do to us even if he had 100 nuclear bombs, is what the Jews have done to America racially. I've recommended this before, and I'll recommend it again: go to a library or to your parents' or grandparents' attic and take a close look at the popular magazines that were published in America before the Second World War. Dig out 60-year-old issues of Look and Life and Time and the Saturday Evening Post. Look at the advertisements. Look at the photographs. Look at the image of America those magazines presented. It was a White America: an entirely White America. White children playing together or going to school together; White adults working together, partying together, celebrating together, relaxing together. It was a world that young White people could identify with. It was their world, and they could plan their future in it.

That world has been destroyed. Our future has been destroyed, and I don't have to tell you who destroyed it. How can a White kid today identify with the multicultural world portrayed in today's advertisements? It's not just that there are so many more non-Whites in America today; it's that the Jews have deliberately changed the image of what America should look like. They have re-made the image to suit themselves, and now it doesn't suit us.

I know that there are many White Americans, some on the Jews' payroll and some merely lemmings saying what they think is expected of them, who will tell you that the multicultural image of the world presented to us today by the Jews is a much better image than the "racist" image of a White America we had before the Second World War. These are the idiots who will parrot whatever slogans the Jews have taught them: "There's only one race, and that's the human race." "Diversity is our strength." And all the other Jewish poison.

But I know and you know that this Jewish multicultural image is not a better or healthier or more natural image. I know and you know that it is an image with which most White kids cannot identify, despite all of the Politically Correct chatter from the lemmings. That's why we have so many problems today with alienation and drug abuse and alcohol abuse and aimlessness on the part of our young people. They don't see a future for themselves in the new world designed by the Jews, because it's not our kind of world. And this is a deliberate consequence of Jewish activity.

Every perceptive person who examines the evidence objectively will understand that this is so. He will understand that it is not just America's foreign policy that has been perverted by the Jews; it is all of America's domestic policies as well. Jewish influence has not only led America to embrace an obscene creature like Ariel Sharon. Jewish influence also has White kids shuffling along the sidewalks of our cities in hip-hop attire, with safety pins stuck through their lips, listening to rap music. Jewish influence has White women walking along the sidewalks holding hands with Black males or pushing baby carriages with mongrel abominations in them.

And it is not just the Jewish moguls in Hollywood or on Madison Avenue who are exerting this influence. It is the Jewish presence as a whole. It is the entire Jewish tribe.

Most of our people are still hypnotized by the "Holocaust" propaganda that the Jews have been spewing at us for the past 50 years. Most of us still feel guilty if we even question what the Jews are doing or why they're doing it. We need to break the grip of this propaganda so that we can defend ourselves.

We need to understand why there was a "Holocaust" and what its true nature was. We need to look at the holocausts perpetrated against our people by the Jews and their helpers before, during, and after the Second World War. We need to wake up and defend ourselves, and we need to do it now.

Tiptoeing around Our Problems

We've been talking about the very dangerous situation in the Middle East recently, just because so much is happening there, and undoubtedly we'll be talking about it much more in the future. For that reason, I want to make very clear what my motives and sympathies are, lest I lead anyone astray and be thought a hypocrite for doing so.

First, regarding Palestine, although my sympathies definitely lie with the Palestinians rather than with the Jews, it is not horror at what the Jews are doing to the Palestinians that motivates me. What motivates me is horror that my country is being used by the Jews in their war against the Palestinians. If America were not involved at all in the Middle East, I still would sympathize with the Palestinians, and I would wish that they could be successful in driving the Jews into the sea and annihilating the abomination that is Israel, but that conflict between Jews and Palestinians would not be a major concern for me. At least, my concern there would be dwarfed by my concern for problems more directly involving my own people in America and in Europe and in southern Africa.

Even now, with money and weapons being supplied by America and used to slaughter Palestinians, my concern is much less with monsters like Ariel Sharon who are doing the slaughtering than it is with the filthy creatures among my own people in America who are collaborating with Jews here to keep the weapons and money flowing to Sharon -- and are ready to do whatever else the Jews require of them here or abroad.

So when I tell you about Jews in occupied Palestine shooting Palestinian children, and disapproval and anger are evident in my voice, what I really am angry about is that the American people, my people, are being used for this murderous activity. I am angry that America's whole foreign policy has been perverted to serve Jewish interests at the expense of American interests. I am angry that America's political system has been perverted to ensure that we always have so-called "leaders," whether Democrat or Republican, who are dependent on the Jewish media or Jewish money or both for their election and consequently will do the bidding of the Jews. I am angry that our whole government is riddled with Jews -- Jews in our Defense Department, Jews in our State Department, Jews in our Immigration and Naturalization Service, Jews in our Justice Department, Jews in the President's speech-writing staff -- who really set the policies of our government behind the scenes, while the politicians are out front in the spotlight making speeches and kissing babies -- and doing as they're told by the Jews behind the scenes.

Did you know that it was a Jewish speech writer, David Frum, who put the phrase "axis of evil" in George Bush's mouth to justify America's ongoing war against Israel's enemies? Did you know that a clique of Jews in the Defense Department and among George Bush's foreign policy advisers are the people actually running the so-called "war on terror" in Afghanistan: a war that they intend to expand to Iraq and to any other Middle Eastern country that gets uppity, in order to make that part of the world safe for Israel at American expense? Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld is a front man for his nominal subordinates, Deputy Secretary of Defense Paul Wolfowitz and Deputy Undersecretary of Defense for Policy Douglas Feith; and George Bush's official foreign policy adviser, Condoleezza Rice, helps him meet his Black quota for the Cabinet, but it is the Jew Richard Perle, chairman of Bush's Defense Policy Board, who gives him his foreign policy directives.

As I've said on more than one occasion, George Bush is a feckless nincompoop who couldn't come up with a defense policy or a foreign policy on his own if he had to -- which is why he's President. The real policy makers behind the scenes certainly don't want a man in the White House who has ideas of his own, because those ideas might conflict with theirs.

And it is nothing but empty sophistry to make a distinction between Jews in Israel, such as Ariel Sharon and Simon Peres, and the Jews in Mr. Bush's administration formulating his policies or the Jews controlling our mass media. They all are Jews, and that's what really matters.

There are many knowledgeable Americans besides me who think that it's not a good thing to have Jews using America to advance Israel's interests at the expense of America's interests. They know how the system works: how the Jews exert their control through money and media and a well-entrenched network of Jewish operatives, such as Wolfowitz and Feith and Perle. And many of these knowledgeable Americans also understand how Jewish subterfuge and deceit work: they understand that the Jews throw up a lot of smoke to conceal their control and make it appear that they have much less influence than they actually do.

Despite this degree of understanding that many knowledgeable Americans have, there seem to be very few who are willing or able to draw the necessary conclusions. What I keep seeing are comments about the need to get the so-called "peace process" going again in the Middle East, and how there are hard-line supporters of Israel who are obstructing the "peace process" because they think that it will give too much to the Palestinians or will compromise Israel's security, or whatever. These knowledgeable Americans seem to believe that if we could just get around the Jewish hardliners somehow -- if we could just neutralize Jews such as Wolfowitz and Feith and Perle; if Ariel Sharon could be replaced by a "moderate" Jewish prime minister -- then the "peace process" could proceed, America could gradually reduce its involvement in helping the Jews keep the Palestinians repressed, and eventually Israel no longer would be using America, and everything would be rosy. And so these knowledgeable Americans expend all of their wit and energy in these trivial pursuits.

Listen! Do you know what the most hopeful aspect of the conflict between Jews and Palestinians is now? It is the ongoing radicalization of the Muslim masses throughout the whole Middle East. The collaborator governments in Pakistan, in Egypt, in Saudi Arabia are terrified of the reaction they see among their own people to what Ariel Sharon is doing to the Palestinians. When Sharon's Jewish troops shoot Palestinian children, Muslim mobs riot, and governments that now collaborate with the United States quake. Ariel Sharon is the best thing that has happened in the Middle East in the last 54 years.

The Palestinian tactic of suicide bombing is being denounced by every politician and every media spokesman over here now. It's nothing but terrorism, they all say. There's no justification at all for suicide bombing, they tell us. Of course, whenever you hear that sort of unanimity from the politicians and the media people you should be suspicious. In fact, suicide bombing is the best tactic for the Palestinians to use now, because it provokes the Jews to step up reprisals. And the reprisals radicalize the masses in every country in the Middle East. If just one of the collaborator governments falls, the spines of all the rest will be stiffened, and the Bush government will be far less likely to find collaborators for building its so-called "coalition" to do the will of the Jews in the Middle East.

Suicide bombers now hardly put a dent in the population of five million Jews in occupied Palestine, and Sharon's bloody reprisals hardly put a dent in the overall Palestinian population. But if conflict of this sort continues until just one collaborator government is overthrown, that ultimately will be worth more than ten thousand successful suicide bombings in which only 20 or so Jews are killed each time. In the long run there can be no real peace in the Middle East and no end to America's shameful role there -- and no future for the Palestinian people -- as long as there is an Israel. There seems to be a better understanding of these things among knowledgeable Palestinians than among knowledgeable Americans.

Shallow thinking and the pursuit of trivial goals is even worse among knowledgeable Americans when it comes to domestic problems. They really do not want to grasp these problems with both hands and deal with them in a forthright way. Look, for example, at what uncontrolled immigration has done and is doing to America. And what do knowledgeable Americans propose to do about that? Very little, really. They make much of the fact that several of the al-Qaeda hijackers who carried out the September 11 attack were in the United States only because of very lax immigration policies, and so that's a good reason for tightening up the policies.

How about simply rounding up all illegal aliens immediately -- all 12 million of them -- and booting them and all of their offspring out of the country without further ado?

Oh, no, no, no! We can't do that! Why not? Well, the media never would stand for it. The media would be all over anyone who even proposed a mass expulsion of illegal aliens. They would denounce any political leader who tried to do that as a "racist" and a "neo-Nazi." And so knowledgeable Americans, who understand the immigration disaster quite well, continue tiptoeing around it, afraid to do or even say anything really significant about it: terrified even to think about really radical solutions that might actually end the problem. And it's the same with the rest of our domestic problems. Lots of people understand these problems and are worried about them, but they won't tackle them in any significant way. They let the Jews -- the Jewish media and Jewish money and the entrenched Jewish network -- have their way, for all practical purposes.

Why? Why are the Jews permitted to get away with all of their destructive policies and activities without being challenged or opposed in any significant way? Part of the reason is that the Jews are very powerful, and therefore many people are afraid to cross them. They're afraid of the sort of media reaction that I just mentioned in connection with immigration. Everyone understands that the Jews stick together and will viciously attack anyone who opposes them. It's the old story, so aptly expressed by the late-16th century writer, Sir John Harington. Harington wrote: "Treason doth never prosper: what's the reason? For if it prosper, none dare call it treason." Today the Jewish power structure is prospering, and none dare oppose it or even call it what it is.

Well, that's only part of the reason Jews are permitted to get away with so much. There's more to it than that. There's a mystique the Jews have built very carefully around themselves and nurtured diligently. It is a mystique of piety and injured innocence. It is a mystique that says to the Gentile world: "We are a gentle and inoffensive race, and because of this everyone hates us. We're smart and we work hard and achieve success, and because of this everyone hates us. We are a highly moral and ethical race, and because of this everyone hates us. We are a very talented race, with many gifted members, many geniuses, and because of this everyone hates us. We are a very altruistic race, a race of philanthropists who only want to make a better world for everyone, and because of this everyone hates us."

Many simpletons among the lemmings simply accept these claims at face value. Many knowledgeable people, however, who can see through these claims to the real Jews hiding behind them, still hesitate to challenge them. Part of the Jewish mystique is the so-called "Holocaust." In its most simpleminded form the "Holocaust" story is the claim that the Germans hated the Jews for the reasons I just mentioned -- for their gentleness and their success and their morality and their talent and their altruism -- and because of this hatred roasted six million of them during the Second World War in "gas ovens," to use one of the Jews' favorite "Holocaust" phrases.

Actually, the "Holocaust" is a very powerful part of the Jewish mystique. The Jews crafted the "Holocaust" story with great care and great effort -- well, actually not with as much care as they might have used: it's as full of holes as a Swiss cheese, but still it is sufficient to make most people, even those who understand what Jews are really like, hesitate to attack them. People don't want to be seen as bullies. They don't want to be seen as so insensitive that they would criticize the Jews, who already have suffered so much, poor dears, at the hands of anti-Semites.

In several past broadcasts, we've looked at some of the lies, exaggerations, and distortions that make up the "Holocaust" story. There are a number of good books available on the subject from the sponsor of this broadcast, National Vanguard Books, including Norman Finklestein's excellent book The Holocaust Industry, which I discussed in an earlier broadcast. The point is that despite the lies, despite the fact that many knowledgeable Americans are aware of the lies, the "Holocaust" still serves its purpose for the Jews. People are afraid of the image conjured up by the "Holocaust."

Perhaps it's that American life is too soft. Perhaps it is that too many people still are influenced by Christian sentiments. Whatever the reason, many otherwise knowledgeable and hardheaded Americans just can't entertain the idea of rounding up the Jews and getting rid of them, even when the situation is as urgent as it is in America today. And really, in the long run that is the only way to solve the Jewish problem.

The Germans understood that, back in the 1930s, and they had the courage and the foresight to act on their understanding. Unlike Americans today, they had an honest government concerned above all with the survival, welfare, and progress of the German people, and they began doing what was necessary, forcing the Jews to emigrate wholesale from Germany, beginning in 1933. And because of that the Jewish propaganda machine has attacked the Germans so viciously, has so blackened and demonized their image, that today even knowledgeable people are afraid to be associated with that image. They are afraid to say that the Germans were right, that the Germans were justified, and that we need to do the same if we are to survive. So, as I said, the "Holocaust" story, despite its glaring discrepancies and lies, still serves as a shield for the Jews; it still protects them from criticism.

Well, mostly. In parts of Europe not quite as poisoned by Jewish propaganda as America is, the shield has slipped a bit. A large British department store chain, Selfridges, has yielded to demands from anti-Israel demonstrators and has removed from its shelves products marked "Made in Israel." Last week, the second largest supermarket chain in Norway, Coop Norge -- which is to say, Norway Coop, announced its decision to boycott all Israeli imports. That decision was not the result of pressure from anti-Israel demonstrators but was based on the feeling by Coop Norge management that it would be immoral to continue supporting the Israeli economy by selling Israeli imports under the present circumstances. That is a step forward, though it is a long way from what is needed.

The Jews, of course, immediately began waving their "Holocaust" story around, and now, as the boycott movement catches hold in Scandinavia, they are trying to portray themselves as injured innocents being attacked once more by "anti-Semites." They are comparing the growing Scandinavian boycott of Israeli products to the German boycott of Jewish merchants in the late 1930s. Certainly, a boycott of Israeli products is a good thing, and the fact that such a boycott is even thinkable by big businessmen today is a sign that the Jewish mystique -- and in particular the Jewish "Holocaust" story -- is becoming a bit shopworn. It no longer has the hypnotic power that it once had -- at least, in some parts of the world.

And I suppose that we should be happy about that. The unfortunate fact remains, however, that in America the Jews still have their money and their media and their entrenched network of bureaucrats, and even if the "Holocaust" story has lost some of its charm in Europe, it still keeps most knowledgeable Americans intimidated.

Knowledge isn't enough. Courage and boldness also are necessary. Honesty and forthrightness are necessary also. Tiptoeing around the critical issues of our time isn't enough. Tiny reforms in our disastrous foreign policy and in our disastrous immigration policy and in a dozen other disastrous policies aren't enough. We need to stop apologizing to the people who are destroying us and go full bore at destroying them instead.

Instead of being hypnotized by the "Holocaust" story we need to look with clear eyes at why there was a need for action against the Jews in Germany in the 1930s and 1940s. The Jews' claim today that the Germans were suffering from collective insanity and had no reason for trying to get the Jews off their backs is as phony as George Bush's claim that Osama bin Laden had no reason for attacking America on September 11.

Wherever Jews go, they corrupt and destroy. That is their nature, always and everywhere. Let us be thankful to the Palestinians who now are making such terrible sacrifices to help the world see what the Jews are like. And I suppose that we also should be thankful to Ariel Sharon for demonstrating so forthrightly to the world what Jews are like.

Let us hope that the conflict between Jews and Palestinians intensifies and lasts long enough to wake up many more of our people around the world and fill them with disgust at America's continuing support for the Jews. Let us hope that it lasts long enough to bring about the overthrow of every collaborationist regime in the Muslim world. Let us hope that it brings about an airtight oil embargo against the United States and shuts off the lights in every shopping mall and every sports stadium in America long enough for the lemmings to become restless and to begin asking questions. Let us hope that it makes the efforts of every fool and every traitor who is striving for a resumption of the so-called "peace process" so obviously futile that these efforts no longer have the power to deceive anyone.

Ultimately, of course, we must not depend on the Palestinian suicide bombers or on Ariel Sharon's murder squads to do for us what we should be doing for ourselves. Ultimately we must stop tiptoeing and begin marching boldly and forthrightly toward solving our own problems.

The Beginning of the End?

You know, it's certainly advantageous to be smart and to be well organized in this hard and unforgiving world in which we live. On the average, a group that is smart and well organized is more likely to survive and prosper than one that isn't. But even a smart, well organized group can make serious mistakes: life-threatening mistakes. Even a smart, well-organized group that thinks it has all the bases covered sometimes gets caught by surprise, simply because history is full of surprises. As the great Robert Burns said: "The best laid schemes o' mice and men gang aft a-gley." And when a smart, well-organized group has certain inherent pathological tendencies that it is unable to control, then no one should be surprised when the group comes to grief despite all of its cleverness and despite its apparent stranglehold on the course of events.

The Jews certainly are smart and well organized. But they also certainly do have certain inherent pathological tendencies that they seem utterly unable to keep under control. At controlling us, they're pretty good. At controlling their own lethal excesses, they're not very good at all. And now, just as some of them are bragging to each other that they never have had it better -- just as some of them are dancing a hora and gloating that with their control over the George Bush government they really have a stranglehold on the world -- other Jews have noticed some very ominous writing on the wall and are warning the Jews who are bragging and gloating that the long-range prospect for the Jews may not be as rosy as they think it is.

Jews are constantly taking polls, constantly sampling public opinion, so that they can estimate how much they can get away with at any given time. When they force some new policy on our government, they take polls to see how the public is reacting to the policy. If some policy is very unpopular, they want to know whether or not the public is blaming them for the policy. They always are ready to fine-tune the propaganda being fed to the public through their mass media in order to keep the Gentiles from becoming too restless. Or if the Gentiles already are restless, then the purpose of their media propaganda is to divert blame from themselves onto someone else.

I know that what I am saying about the Jews continually monitoring public opinion and then adjusting their propaganda line in order to move public opinion in one direction or another sounds very conspiratorial and farfetched to most Americans. Americans have been taught that they are free agents, that they are able to make up their own minds about things, that no one controls their thinking or manipulates their opinions. That, however, is merely a popular illusion. As far back as 1928, the Jew Edward Bernays wrote in his book Propaganda:

The conscious and intelligent manipulation of the organized habits and opinions of the masses is an important element in democratic society. Those who manipulate this unseen mechanism of society constitute an invisible government which is the true ruling power of our country.... The important thing is that [propaganda] is universal and continuous; and in its sum total it is regimenting the public mind every bit as much as an army regiments the bodies of its soldiers.

The Gentile world paid little attention to Bernays' book in the pre-World War II period, but his fellow Jews, who had assimilated the book's message generations before Bernays had even written it, were busy elbowing their way into positions of control in this "unseen mechanism of society."

The essential points here are that the Jews do monitor Gentile public opinion around the world on a continuous basis, they do control the "unseen mechanism of society" which consists of most if not all of the mass media of news and entertainment, and they do try to adjust their propaganda line in a way to keep the Gentiles from becoming restless and to protect themselves from blame and reprisals. The ominous writing on the wall that I mentioned a moment ago, which some Jews are warning the other Jews about, is to the effect that despite their manipulation of public opinion, it is shifting strongly against them: primarily in Europe, but also, to a lesser degree, in America.

Now, the Jews are well known for their hypersensitivity to any sort of criticism. You look at one of them sideways, and he begins screaming that it's another "Holocaust." But this time there may be something to their chattering that the rest of the world doesn't love them as much as they think we should. Their poll-takers are claiming now that anti-Jewish feeling is higher than it has been since the 1930s -- and that's something.

In the 1930s, there was a big reaction in Europe -- and to a lesser degree in America -- to what the Jews were doing as communist commissars in the Soviet Union, butchering millions of Russians and Ukrainians. There were still a few big newspapers in America in the hands of people who weren't afraid to criticize Jews. America's foremost industrialist, Henry Ford, published a newspaper, the Dearborn Independent, which exposed the Jews in communism, the Jews in pornography, the Jews in White slavery, and the Jews in every other filthy, subversive, or destructive activity. Many Christian preachers were not afraid to speak out against the Jews. Jews were only tolerated in polite society, but they generally weren't accepted. To a far greater extent than today, in the 1930s the Jews were recognized for what they are.

And so I must suspect that their claim that hatred of Jews today is as high as it was in the 1930s, is exaggerated. Still, appearances can be deceptive. In the 1930s if a prominent person -- a person with an audience, with influence -- didn't like what the Jews were doing, he wasn't afraid to speak out. He wasn't afraid to write a book, and there were publishers who would print it. Today, with the media and the politicians totally in the hands of the Jews, it's harder for the average citizen to hear an honest opinion on anything. And it's harder for me to know what the real results of an opinion poll about the Jews, a poll in which a person is able to give his answers privately, would show. I can only assume that the Jews have some basis for their claim that they are more unpopular than at any time since the 1930s.

In trying to explain to themselves why this feeling against them has arisen, they see a confluence of causal events. Part of the reason they see is the recognition by many Americans that despite what George Bush and the Jewish media say, September 11 was, in fact, a direct response to the U.S. government's support of Israeli aggression. Which is to say, many Americans understand that more than 3,000 of their fellow Americans lost their lives on September 11 because their government was looking after Israel's interests instead of America's interests.

The Jewish media, of course, use their typical deceit in deflecting blame from themselves in this regard, by setting up a straw man and then knocking it down. With disgust and incredulity in their voices they announce that anti-Semites are blaming Jews for the September 11 attacks, implying that what anti-Semites are saying is that Jews themselves staged the attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon and made it look like Muslims had done it in order to generate American hostility against Muslims. And then they shake their heads in pretended disbelief that anyone could be so stupid as to believe such an obviously incorrect explanation of September 11, all for the sake of blaming the poor, innocent Jews. And while they are knocking down this straw man, they are grinning up their sleeves. But the act is quite good enough to fool millions of Sally Soccermoms and Joe Sixpacks and to close their minds to any explanation except George Bush's "they did it because they hate our freedom" baloney.

But the fact remains that everyone except the Sally Soccermoms and Joe Sixpacks understands that the September 11 attack was a direct response by desperate people to the U.S. government's support of Israel's aggression in the Middle East, and those Americans who are capable of understanding also are capable of hating those who degrade and dishonor their country and cause the deaths of their fellow Americans.

Another part of the reason for the poll results that the Jews are getting is, they believe, a delayed backlash against Jewish efforts during the last three or four years to extort "Holocaust" reparations payments from everyone in sight. I mean, can you believe that there are Gentiles in Switzerland and in France and in Germany and in Poland and in Sweden and in other European countries who dare to resent the Jews coming around with their hands out and demanding reparations from the people who saved their hides during the war? I can believe it.

Part of the reason for the Jews' unpopularity is the Bush government's war against Afghanistan and its threat of war against Iraq and other countries, along with a general recognition -- at least, outside the United States -- that the U.S. government does whatever Israel tells it to do. Many people in Europe do not appreciate the destabilization of their world -- they do not appreciate the threat of another world war hanging over their heads -- just because the world's number-one superpower lets itself be used for dangerous errands by that "shitty little country" Israel, as France's ambassador to the United Kingdom, Daniel Bernard, put it recently.

And finally, there is the growing revulsion around the world at Israel's behavior in Palestine. Television viewers in the United States don't hear much except that the poor, innocent Israelis are trying to defend themselves from Palestinian suicide bombers, who are regularly referred to by everyone in the Bush government and by every media spokesman as "terrorists." But in Europe, where the news media are in not quite so tight a stranglehold as in the United States, the word is getting out about what the Jews are doing to the Palestinians. I'll read to you excerpts from a few British news reports about what the Jews did in the Palestinian refugee camp in Jenin. For more than a week after committing a massacre of Palestinian men, women, and children in Jenin, the Jews wouldn't permit ambulances, relief supplies, or journalists in, while they tried to hide the evidence of what they had done. Earlier this week, a few British journalists managed to evade Israeli tanks and snipers around the camp and get in. All the excerpts that I'll read now came from British newspapers published on April 16.

This first report is from The Times of London and was filed by reporter Janine Giovanni:

...we had to run through olive groves, dodging from tree to tree because of an Israeli sniper. I have seen demolished houses before. I have seen wells stuffed with bodies. I have seen civilians terrorised and living under siege. But what remains of Jenin camp is a wasteland of death that once housed 13,000 people.

Then Miss Giovanni describes the destruction and the horror, and she quotes a 30-year-old Palestinian who lived through the massacre:

I saw some children who were wounded take four days to die, bleeding to death because there was no one here to tend them.

Reporter David Blair wrote for the Telegraph:

All the paraphernalia of normal life littered the ground: toilet paper, shoe boxes, sanitary towels, buckets, crockery, chairs, and clothes. Hanging over everything was the sickly smell of rotting corpses, an unknown number of which lay under the rubble.... Dazed people gathered around what remained of their homes. Riad Hussain, 30, saw a house receive a direct hit from a rocket fired by an Apache attack helicopter. The woman and baby inside were killed. Sixteen-year-old Fahdi Jamir, who lives on the edge of the worst devastation, said he saw seven arms and legs among the rubble. Kamal Anis said he saw an Israeli bulldozer scooping up 30 bodies and dumping them beside a ruined house. It knocked down the building, covering the corpses with rubble. It then drove over the pile, leveling it into a crude mass grave. Standing at the point where Mr. Anis said this had occurred, the stench of death was overpowering.

Reporter Phil Reeves wrote for London's The Independent:

A monstrous war crime that Israel has tried to cover up for a fortnight has finally been exposed. Its troops have caused devastation in the centre of the Jenin refugee camp, reached yesterday by The Independent, where thousands of people are still living amid the ruins.... The sweet and ghastly smell of rotting human corpses is everywhere, evidence that it is a human tomb. The people who spent days hiding in basements crowded into single rooms as the rockets pounded in say there are hundreds of corpses entombed beneath the dust, under a field of debris, criss-crossed with tank and bulldozer treadmarks.... A quiet, sad-looking young man ... led us across the wasteland, littered now with the detritus of what were once households, foam rubber, torn clothes, shoes, tin cans, children's toys. He suddenly stopped. This was a mass grave, he said, pointing.... We could not see the bodies, but we could smell them.... Until two weeks ago there were several hundred tightly packed homes in this neighbourhood.... They no longer exist. Around the central ruins there are many hundreds of half-wrecked homes. Much of the camp -- once home to 15,000 Palestinian refugees from the 1948 war -- is falling down. Every wall is speckled and torn with bullet holes and shrapnel, testimony of the awesome, random firepower of Cobra and Apache helicopters that hovered over the camp. Building after building has been torn apart, their contents ... spewed out into the road. Every other building bears the giant, charred impact mark of a helicopter missile. Last night there were still many families and weeping children living amid the ruins, cut off from humanitarian aid. Ominously, we found no wounded.... Israel was still trying to, conceal these scenes yesterday. It had refused entry to Red Cross ambulances for nearly a week, in violation of the Geneva Convention. Yesterday it continued to try to keep us out.... Hidden, whispering people directed us through narrow alleys they thought were clear. When there were soldiers about, a finger would raise in warning, or a hand waved us back. We were welcomed by people desperate to tell what had happened. They spoke of executions and bulldozers wrecking homes with people inside.... Rajib Ahmed, from the Palestinian Energy Authority, came to try to repair the power lines. He was trembling with fury and shock. "This is mass murder...." All had the same message: tell the world.

Yes, tell the world. That's easier to do when the Jews don't control every medium of mass communication, as they do in America. I've been sampling the news on CNN and Fox TV all week. All I learned about the Jewish assault on Jenin was that 13 Israeli soldiers were killed when a boobytrapped building collapsed on them. And of course, I heard over and over again about every suicide bombing, now officially known as "homicide bombing." But I have still to see any information about the mass murder of Palestinian civilians in Jenin or any of the other refugee camps invaded by the Jews during the past few weeks.

One other piece of information that was in the European media, but was not in the news over here, was the way in which the Jews were targeting their victims. I'll quote now from a story in the Guardian four days ago:

"The soldiers had a map with them of the houses they wanted bulldozed and outlined them with a blue marker," said Aisha Salah, whose house overlooks the field of destruction. "you could see the houses. You could see the trees. It was a very detailed map. I could even find my own home." Ms. Salah's home was occupied by Israeli soldiers who entered her living room by punching a hole through the neighbour's wall. Rumors abound that the homes marked for destruction were the homes of professionals: of doctors, lawyers, engineers, teachers. The men who were rounded up and executed or marched away by the Israelis were not just Palestinian fighters: they were intellectuals, writers, political activists: anyone who might provide leadership to the Palestinians.

That sounds an awful lot like what the Jews did in the Baltic countries and in Poland in the early days of the Second World War. In Poland, for example, they rounded up 25,000 of Poland's leading citizens -- army officers, professors, writers -- and murdered them. When the Germans found some of the mass graves of these murdered Poles in Russia and called in the Red Cross and representatives from neutral countries to see what the communists had done, the newspapers over here ignored the evidence and blamed the murders on the Germans. Years after the war, these mass murders of the Polish elite still were being blamed on the Germans by the media here.

Anyway, in Europe the news about what the Jews are doing in Palestine is leaking out, and Europeans aren't buying the George Bush and Ariel Sharon explanation that the Jews are just defending themselves by going after terrorists in the refugee camps. The Jews are complaining that the news from Palestine, along with the other things that I mentioned, is leading many Europeans not to like them. One of the most worrisome aspects about the current rise in anti-Jewish feeling, according to the Jewish poll takers, is that it isn't just anti-Israeli or anti-Zionist feeling. It is a real hatred of Jews as Jews, not just as Israelis or Zionists. They cite mobs attacking Jews in the streets of Ukrainian and Russian cities and shouting, "Kill the Jews!" They refer to attacks on synagogues in France and in Germany. They complain that all of the old anti-Semitic conspiracy theories about Jews wanting to dominate the world are being resurrected.

Now, what's really happening is this: the Israelis are irritated by Palestinian suicide bombers. They decided to punish the Palestinians by simply slaughtering a bunch of them and destroying the homes of a few thousand Palestinian families. It would be like the government over here becoming irritated by the high Black crime rate and deciding to teach Blacks to behave themselves by wiping out a few Black neighborhoods and shooting a few thousand Blacks at random. The media, of course, would immediately go ballistic and begin shrieking, "Genocide!" But when the Jews do something equivalent, the media in this country can be counted on to not say much about it and to keep the lemmings preoccupied with ball games or the pedophile scandal in the Catholic Church. And the Jews figured that they would simply ride out the criticism in Europe, as they always have in the past, counting on their bought politicians to cover for them.

As they have done so often in the past, however, the Jews overreached themselves. Their arrogance led them to miscalculate. They are whining now that the world hates them just for trying to defend themselves. And of course, a growing number of thinking people do hate them -- at least, in those places where thinking people are well informed. One of our responsibilities here in America is to compensate as much as we can for the lack of independent media. Our responsibility is to inform thinking people here, at least to the extent that they are informed in Europe, and then let their natural decency and sense of responsibility do the rest. Perhaps we can help make this the beginning of the end for the Jews.

Two Crucial Tasks

Last week, we ended our discussion of the rising tide of anti-Jewish feeling around the world with the optimistic thought that this may be the beginning of the end for the tribe that has caused so much misery and destruction for others. Some listeners have told me that I was being far too optimistic. They reminded me that the Jews don't really have to worry about the fact that many Europeans hate them. Every synagogue in France could be burned to the ground, and it wouldn't do much to shake Jewish power, which lies in the Jews' control of the U.S. government, which in turn depends on the Jews' control of the mass media of news and entertainment in America. The Jews always have been hated, by every people among whom they have lived, and they haven't let that worry them much or cause them to change their behavior. In fact, there have been times when Jewish leaders welcomed the hatred directed against Jews by gentiles, because this hatred hindered assimilation and generated a stronger Jewish hatred of the gentiles, along with a stronger Jewish feeling of solidarity.

So what is it about this new wave of anti-Jewish feeling that makes me think it really can lead to the end of Jewish domination of our society?

First, I am not predicting anything specific. I just have a feeling, an intuition, based on several things that are happening now. Back in the 1960s and 1970s, when the Jews were really trashing American society, turning everything upside down and rearranging it to suit themselves, I was mostly an observer, first from the university campus, where I was teaching, and later from Washington, DC, where I finally began to write and to speak out. For the most part, I just watched from the sidelines while the Jews organized huge, pro-Black, so-called "civil rights" demonstrations and equally huge, pro-Viet Cong, so called "peace" demonstrations. I could see some very bad trends, some very dangerous and destructive trends being established, but of course neither I nor anyone else could be certain where these trends would take us. Most of my colleagues at the university believed that we were merely going through a temporary social disruption, and that things would settle down later. They weren't willing to do anything or to take a stand. In fact, in my own case, it wasn't until 1975 that I began writing my first novel, The Turner Diaries, in which I extrapolated the trends that I had been observing for well over a decade and predicted that they would lead to a long-term degenerative change in American society, and that this degenerative change was a deliberate consequence, calculated by those promoting the trends.

Now other thinking Americans cannot evade the same conclusion that I reached in the 1970s. They can see what the Jewish push for uncontrolled immigration from the Third World has done to America. They know who it was that pushed through the big change in our immigration laws back in 1965. They can see what the Jewish promotion of feminism has done to the White birthrate in America, and they can understand that together these two things -- non-White immigration and the lowered White birthrate -- will lead very soon to the extinction of our race and to the end of the civilization that our ancestors spent thousands of years building for us. They can experience every day the insanity of the multiculturalism endlessly promoted by the Jews through every medium under their control, from Hollywood to Madison Avenue, and forcefully imposed on us by our government, and they can see what it is doing to our young people. They can see the growing confusion and alienation and demoralization. They can smell the stench of the non-stop Jewish propaganda of equality and democracy and non-resistance and racial death being spewed onto us by the Jewish media during every hour of every day.

Now, all of these things that I've just mentioned have been with us for a while. They've been pushed and promoted and built up during the past 40 years. And, for most of that time, they have not resulted in any great degree of resolve among thinking Americans to put up any resistance to what the Jews are doing. In fact, for most of that time I kept hearing the same excuses for inaction: "you can't blame all of the Jews for what a few Jews are doing," or, "there are gentiles every bit as bad as the Jews, so don't try to blame it all on the Jews."

And of course, there are gentiles every bit as bad as the Jews -- worse, in fact, because on top of all their other crimes they are traitors, they are collaborators, and in my eyes there is no worse crime than collaboration with the Jews against our people. I am pleased to note that the Palestinians, at least, know how to deal with collaborators, and I can only hope that when the day of justice arrives in America, those gentiles who have collaborated with the Jews will get their dose of justice first.

So what's different now from, say, five years ago? Why do I believe that thinking Americans won't keep on making the same excuses and doing nothing as things continue to get worse and worse?

Well, first, historical processes that may appear to be continuous in nature sometimes reach a tipping point. A person who evaded action for years suddenly decides he's had enough. And if many of the people around him also have become exasperated, they may be influenced enough by his change of attitude to decide suddenly that they also have had enough. And when conditions are right, decisions of this sort can spread with explosive speed throughout a society -- or at least, throughout a stratum of society, because I'm still talking only about thinking Americans, not about the masses of Sally Soccermoms and Joe Sixpacks, who never think very deeply about anything.

Certainly, we cannot make an exact analogy between France and the United States -- there are many differences between the two societies -- but we certainly have seen an explosive change in public attitudes in France in recent days. In France's presidential election last Sunday, the surprising electoral success of Jean-Marie Le Pen, who had been completely written off by the mainstream media and by the French political establishment certainly is not unrelated to the role of the Jews in France. France has the largest and most obnoxious Jewish population in Western Europe, and Le Pen has been repeatedly denounced by the Jews as an anti-Semite. I hesitate to say at this time that the historical process in France has reached a tipping point, but Le Pen's explosive gain in popularity tells us something about the changing attitudes of the French toward the Jews in their country -- and these changes have been quite abrupt, suggesting a wave of exasperation spreading through the French public in the way that I just described.

Second, history always is full of surprises, surprises that not even the cleverest schemer could predict, and we've had a few of those recently. September 11 did a lot more than kill 3,000 Americans and wipe out some expensive real estate. It initiated a whole chain of unforeseen events, and we're still a long way from the end of that chain. I've already talked about some of these events stemming from September 11. There was the very clumsy and transparent effort by the government and the media to deflect blame for the attack from the government's policy of unquestioning support of Israel. Every thinking American noticed and flinched when George Bush parroted the Jewish media line that he had no idea why America was attacked. It must have been because Osama bin Laden "hates our freedom." It certainly had nothing at all to do with the government's support of Israeli aggression in the Middle East.

Now, I already had been telling people for nearly two years that George Bush is a shameless liar, that he lies habitually, that he will say whatever the Jews tell him to say, without embarrassment or shame. But most people took that with a grain of salt. They thought that I was exaggerating, but after September 11 they understood that I wasn't exaggerating at all. They saw and heard the Jewish media telling the American public that the attack had nothing to do with U.S. support for Israel, that we would have been attacked even if the government weren't sending money and weapons to Israel, that the attack was based solely on the fact that Muslim fanatics "hate our freedom." And then they saw and heard George Bush and Dick Cheney and John Ashcroft and all the rest parrot this Jewish lie -- this obvious and unbelievable Jewish lie -- without even blushing.

They saw and heard various Jewish spokesmen announce that what the United States had to do now was wage war against Afghanistan and Iraq and Iran and any other country that didn't approve of what the Jews were doing to the Palestinians. The Jewish spokesmen announced that we were a bunch of wimps if we didn't take out these countries now; that punishing the people who perpetrated the September 11 attack wasn't enough, and that the only way to protect ourselves from future attacks was to go after everyone who didn't agree with our policy in the Middle East. And then they saw and heard George Bush and the rest chime in. There has never been a clearer demonstration of the degree of Jewish control over the U.S. government.

Thinking Americans -- and also thinking Europeans -- are much more inclined to believe me now when I tell them that the U.S. government will do whatever the Jews tell it to do, that the politicians in the White House and in the Congress are totally irresponsible people who really don't care about anything except pleasing the Jews so that they can be reelected.

The U.S. government will start another world war if the Jews demand it. It's not just the countries in the so-called "axis of evil," which Bush's Jewish speech writers have him raving against, that are in danger: it's everyone. We all are at risk when the world's greatest nuclear superpower is having its strings pulled by a bunch of arrogant megalomaniacs who believe that they are God's chosen people and can do whatever they want. That worries a lot of people -- especially in Europe, but also in America. And it's not the sort of worry that will fade quickly. Once a thinking person has digested the reality of Jewish control of the U.S. government, he understands that something radical must be done to break that control. And he begins thinking about the whole nature of Jews and the way they behave, the way they operate collectively, the way in which they exercise control of a society. And what gradually takes shape in his mind is a new attitude toward Jews as Jews, not just as Zionists or as Israelis. He begins to understand that it is the Jewish community working as a whole that is the problem, not just a few Zionist Jews or a few media Jews or a few Jewish bankers.

Well, this sort of thing has been going on, in a cyclical sort of way, for millennia. Always in the past, when public anger at what the Jews were doing reached the tipping point, the Jews were able to recover, regroup, and renew their assault against our people. In ancient times, the Egyptians ran them en masse out of Egypt. The Romans found them so troublesome that they were expelled en masse from the province of Palestine. And during the Middle Ages, at one time or another, they were expelled from every country in Europe, and from some countries several times. When they were run out of one country, they would bribe their way into another country that wasn't yet at the tipping point. Then after 25 or 30 years -- that is, after a generation -- the people in the country they had been run out of would have forgotten why they had run the Jews out a generation earlier, and the Jews would come sneaking back in.

Sometimes the cycle was much longer than a generation. King Edward the Great expelled all of the Jews from England in 1290 in order to calm the public unrest they were causing, and it was more than 350 years before they were able to get back in, under Oliver Cromwell. But they did get back in -- that was in the middle of the 17th century -- and they've been gnawing away at British society for another 350 years since then. They have done at least as much damage in the United Kingdom as in the United States, pushing for non-White immigration and for interracial marriage, promoting feminism and homosexuality, using the media to promote every sort of perversion and abnormality, but the Brits apparently are a demoralized bunch, willing to tolerate even more abuse than Americans are, and I doubt that they are close to the tipping point yet.

So, again, why do I hold out more hope for the present cycle than for earlier cycles? For one thing, in the past when the Jews got booted out of one country, there always was another country for them to go and to regroup. The world is a much smaller place today. We are likely to see the whole White world tip at the same time. For another thing, once the thinking people, the independent-minded minority, has come to a general understanding of what the Jews are, what they are trying to do, and how they operate, it will not be as easy for them to forget as it was in the past. With universal literacy, with the Internet and the laser printer, once the word is out, it will stay out.

The principal obstacle in the way of a final solution to the Jewish problem is the lack of radicalism on the part of the majority of the people who now oppose the Jews. The conservatives in most countries were emasculated long ago and are a total loss. They oppose, in their effete, limp-wristed way, the policies of the Jews -- or at least, some of those policies -- but they are so terrified of being denounced as anti-Semites or as racists that they will not take a more general stand against the Jews. In Britain, for example, the Conservative Party is part of the chorus of those denouncing the second-place electoral showing of Jean-Marie Le Pen last Sunday and expressing hope that the corrupt system politician, Jacques Chirac, will defeat Le Pen in the runoff -- as he almost certainly will.

Leftists are a very large part of the current opposition to the Jews, but a majority of them are basing their opposition on the atrocious policies of the Jews in the Middle East. Their opposition generally goes a bit beyond mere anti-Zionism and includes exasperation with the tolerance of Jews outside Israel for Israeli atrocities and with such things as Jewish media control and Jewish influence on governmental policies. But in most cases their opposition to the Jews would disappear if Israel would disappear.

And we should be realistic about people such as Jean-Marie Le Pen. He may be hated and even feared by most of France's 700,000 Jews because of his opposition to many Jewish policies, but he actually has a Jew in a position of authority in his political organization. If Le Pen actually gained power in France -- and that is unlikely -- he almost certainly would fight against many Jewish policies and might even slow somewhat the Jewish program for the destruction of the French people, but I doubt very much that he would make any radical moves against the Jews as Jews. He might even collaborate with the Jews in suppressing the very troublesome Muslim minority in France. He seems much more a conservative French nationalist than a farsighted White racist.

Our real hope for making this the final cycle lies with a minority of those who are now raising their voices against the Jews. This minority consists of those who really understand the Jews and have the correct motivation for opposing them: not as Christ-killers, not as Zionists, not as international bankers, but as incurable corrupters and destroyers. This radical minority always has been around, but it is larger now than it has been in a long time. As I mentioned last week, the Jewish poll-takers are saying that it is larger than it has been since the 1930s. I'm not sure about that, but it has been growing in recent decades as the destruction being wrought by the Jews on our society and on our civilization has become more evident.

The big, new element in all of this is the groundswell of opposition to Jewish policies among non-radical elements: primarily the elements opposing Jews because of what they are doing in the Middle East. What we have now is an opportunity for synergistic action on the part of radical and non-radical elements, which we have not had since the Second World War. We already may be seeing some of this now, as liberal opponents of Israel push for more radical measures against Israel than they have in the past. Did the liberals all by themselves institute the boycotts of Israeli imports that are spreading across Europe now? In Europe, there is an initiative among academics and scholars to boycott Israeli academics. Did the academic liberals all by themselves launch this initiative? Certainly, radical White nationalists have an unprecedented opportunity to radicalize at some of the non-radical opponents of Israel.

Finally, we have the grass-roots elements who are firebombing synagogues and beating up Jews in the streets. Many of these, especially in France, are Muslim immigrants angry at what the Jews are doing in the Middle East, but not all of them are Muslims: some are young White nationalists, and some are young Whites who are simply angry and alienated. And again we have synergy. The presence in Europe of large numbers of angry Muslim immigrants, who are there because of Jewish policies aimed at polluting Europe racially, makes it easier for angry young Whites also to express themselves on the Jewish question.

The real key to building this opposition to the Jews into something with long-term viability lies, as with so many other important issues, in the effective use of communications media. As long as they are able to keep their stranglehold on the mass media in America, they can ride out almost anything, because they can keep the lemmings deceived and therefore can continue to control the government, with its police and military powers. They can thumb their noses at Europe, so long as they have the United States under control.

There are two things that, together, can finish them. One of these things is the breaking of their media stranglehold in America, and with it the spell they have over the lemmings. The other thing is an independent-thinking elite that understands them and is morally and psychologically prepared to move against them when their media stranglehold is broken or weakened significantly. We are working now on both fronts. We are working to educate this elite, and the unforeseen upsurge of anti-Jewish feeling now sweeping the world is greatly facilitating this part of our task. We also are working as hard as we can to weaken the Jewish stranglehold on the mass media of news and entertainment by building alternative media and learning to use them effectively.

Your support can help us greatly with both of these tasks: these crucial tasks, at which we must not fail.

Democracy and Propaganda

I do appreciate the feedback I receive from listeners. They give me responses to my broadcasts and tell me about their own concerns and ideas, and they sometimes give me useful tips on news stories that I might not have learned about otherwise.

One thing that I'm reminded of over and over again by listener feedback is that many listeners still haven't assimilated a message I've included in nearly every broadcast, and that is the central importance of Jewish media control to all of our problems. Many listeners, perhaps even a majority, still believe that somehow, when the White public becomes sufficiently exasperated, we can vote ourselves out of our problems. When I have said that the whole democratic process is merely a sham, an illusion, in the age of television, they haven't believed me. They still cling to the notion that democracy is inherent in White life, that it is with us to stay, and that we must rely on it in order to overcome our problems. This notion seems to have been implanted so deeply in their consciousness that it will take a real trauma to uproot it. Well, you can be sure that the trauma is on its way, but meanwhile it behooves some of us to understand the situation.

A couple of weeks ago, I quoted a few sentences from a book published in 1928 titled Propaganda, by the Jew Edward Bernays. Today, I'll read to you an expanded set of excerpts from Bernays' book to give you a little more of the gist of his message:

The conscious and intelligent manipulation of the organized habits and opinions of the masses is an important element in democratic society. Those who manipulate this unseen mechanism of society constitute an invisible government which is the true ruling power of our country.

We are governed, our minds are molded, our tastes are formed, our ideas suggested largely by men we have never heard of. This is a logical result of the way in which our democratic society is organized. Vast numbers of human beings must cooperate in this manner if they are to live together as a smoothly functioning society....

Whatever attitude one chooses to take toward this condition, it remains a fact that in almost every act of our daily lives, whether in the sphere of politics or business, in our social conduct or our ethical thinking, we are dominated by the relatively small number of persons.... who understand the mental processes and social patterns of the masses. It is they who pull the wires which control the public mind, who harness old social forces and contrive new ways to bind and guide the world....

Sometimes the effect on the public is created by a professional propagandist, sometimes by an amateur deputed for the job. The important thing is that it is universal and continuous; and in its sum total is regimenting the public mind every bit as much as an army regiments the bodies of its soldiers....

The systematic study of mass psychology revealed to students the potentialities of invisible government of society by manipulation of the motives which actuate man in the group.... So the question naturally arose: If we understand the mechanism and motives of the group mind is it not possible to control and regiment the masses according to our will without their knowing it?

The recent practice of propaganda has proved that it is possible, at least up to a certain point and within certain limits....

No serious sociologist believes any longer that the voice of the people expresses any divine or especially wise and lofty idea. The voice of the people expresses the mind of the people, and that mind is made up for it by the group leaders in whom it believes and by those persons who understand the manipulation of public opinion....

Whether in the problem of getting elected to office or in the problem of interpreting and popularizing new issues, or in the problem of making the day-to-day administration of public affairs a vital part of the community life, the use of propaganda, carefully adjusted to the mentality of the masses, is an essential adjunct of political life.

I should mention that Bernays' book is not profound or especially valuable in itself. It merely states a few self-evident facts about the way in which a modern society works. For the person interested in propaganda, far more useful books are available. The fact that Bernays was a Jew is not even especially relevant here except to emphasize that propaganda, the mass media, psychology, and the manipulation of others always have been subjects of special interest to the Jews. It is not for nothing that they are as thick in these fields today as they were in the time of Bernays and Freud. The reason I chose Bernays' book to quote is that it provides a more concise and clear summary, in a few quotable paragraphs, of the role of propaganda in modern life than most other books on the subject.

If I were you, I wouldn't even waste time trying to hunt down a copy of Bernays' book. Although it is available in larger libraries, it's long been out of print, and all it does is state the obvious: namely, that the whole concept of democracy is meaningless in an age where a few people have in their hands the mechanism for controlling the attitudes and opinions of a majority of the electorate. And Bernays also takes the disingenuous position that not only is this control a fact of life, but that it is a good thing; it is necessary to control and to regiment the thinking of the public in order to avoid chaos, and it can only lead us to greater progress and prosperity. He simply glosses over the question of who should exercise this control and what their motives should be.

If you really want to study the subject of propaganda, a good place to start is with the 1962 book, also titled Propaganda, by the Frenchman Jacques Ellul. That book is still in print and is available from the sponsor of this program, National Vanguard Books. Professor Ellul deals with the subject in much greater depth and with much greater honesty than Bernays does, but he agrees with Bernays on the most obvious and fundamental conclusions: on the irrelevance of the idea of democracy, for example. I quote from Professor Ellul's book:

If I am in favor of democracy, I can only regret that propaganda renders the true exercise of it almost impossible. But I think that it would be even worse to entertain any illusions about a coexistence of true democracy and propaganda.

To me, it is frustrating that a conclusion that seems so obvious is nevertheless resisted by so many otherwise intelligent people. Democracy has become almost a sacred concept to them, this idea that the policies guiding our nation should be decided by counting the votes of every featherless biped who has reached the age of 18. It's like motherhood: they're almost afraid to question it.

This seems to be as true of intellectuals in our society as it is of Joe Sixpacks. The fact is that intellectuals are no more likely to be independent-minded than people who work with their hands; most intellectuals, just like most Joe Sixpacks, are lemmings. In fact, as Ellul points out, it is precisely the intellectuals who are most strongly controlled by propaganda, because they are more open to every medium of propaganda.

And I must admit that it took me a long time to overcome the ideas drummed into me when I was in school that under a democracy people are more free than under any other political system, that under a democracy we are all free to think and to say whatever we want, and that we have a greater responsibility as citizens of a democracy to make up our own minds about things independently, and so on. Actually, we still have some degree of individual freedom in the United States today because, more than 200 years ago, men whose temperament was far more aristocratic than democratic in the modern sense of the word were willing to go to war against their legitimate government in order to secure that freedom for us, and people with a truly democratic temperament, who have been gnawing away at that freedom ever since, haven't yet succeeded in suppressing it completely.

Well, it should not be surprising to us that although books such as Professor Ellul's Propaganda -- and many others -- are readily available, almost no one has heard of them. Keeping the public believing in the myth of democracy is an important element in maintaining control over the thinking and behavior of the public. It is simply immoral and scandalous to question the reality of democracy. It's like questioning the truth of the "Holocaust" story. And for that reason we're not likely to be taught in our social studies classes in school or to read in the New York Times or the Wall Street Journal even the most obvious and self-evident conclusions presented by Bernays or Ellul. We're still taught how democracy safeguards our freedom, even while those who control the mechanism of propaganda in our democratic society are working day and night to eliminate that freedom.

Already "freedom" means to Sally Soccermom the right to buy either blue plastic hair curlers or pink plastic hair curlers or yellow plastic hair curlers or no hair curlers at all at the shopping mall. And to her husband it means the right to watch whatever ball game he chooses and to go to the refrigerator for another six-pack at halftime. And both Sally Soccermom and Joe Sixpack have pretty well been brought around by democrats to the opinion that the First Amendment doesn't really give anyone the right to say "hateful" things: things that offend other people. A majority of them already believe that racism is illegal -- or ought to be illegal.

And I hardly need to remind you that in most of democratic Europe the controllers of propaganda already have reduced freedom to a choice of hair curlers and ball games. Just last week, 59-year-old Tore Tvedt, a Norwegian member of my organization, the National Alliance, was convicted in an Oslo court and sent to prison for stating personal opinions on the Internet that the court considered "racist" and "anti-Semitic." The liberal intelligentsia of Norway have applauded the conviction. The details are available in an April 23 Associated Press report from Oslo.

The reason that it is important for us not to let that sort of thing happen in America -- the reason why it is essential for us to preserve the freedom that we still have -- is that for us freedom is the right to fight against the controllers of the propaganda machinery, who not only are attempting to reduce freedom in America to the sort of hair-curler-and-ball-game freedom that exists in Norway and in most of the rest of Europe, but who also have as their goal the annihilation of our race. We still can fight against these enemies of our people by legal means, but they are working very hard to take that remaining freedom away from us.

It is unfortunate that we cannot use propaganda against them the way they use it against us. I'm certainly not a propaganda expert myself, but I understand enough about it to know that the use of propaganda on a large enough scale to be effective in changing the attitudes and the behavior of the public requires a much larger mechanism than anyone but the Jews possesses. I'm talking here about so-called "vertical propaganda," which simultaneously conditions large numbers of people through the use of television, magazine advertising, and other mass media. The Jews worked hard to seize control of that mechanism and to build it up throughout all of the last century.

There is, of course, what is called "horizontal propaganda," in which the attitudes and behavior of individuals in small groups are changed through suggestion by group leaders and guided group discussion. This is the sort of thing that was used in communist prison camps and in some religious cults and is used in "sensitivity training" in America to condition employees in government and in private business today. It also is used to a frighteningly large extent in America's schools to propagandize children. It doesn't require much in the way of mechanism, as "vertical propaganda" does, but it does require a large number of conditioning groups operating simultaneously in order to be effective on a significant portion of the population, and that in turn requires a large organizational infrastructure to get people into the groups and then to coordinate their conditioning.

I find all of this very interesting, but also a little depressing. I cannot help but agree with Bernays and Ellul that the governing role of propaganda is inevitable in a modern, centralized, technological society. Without propaganda as a coordinator for the lemmings, we would have chaos. The only way to avoid propaganda would be to return to the sort of decentralized society without mass media, based on the farm and the village, that we had during the Middle Ages and in ancient times, and we can't do that as long as we live in a world where we are surrounded by dangerous enemies: which is to say, we cannot afford decentralization and the giving up of our mass communications capabilities as long as we have Chinese or Jews waiting for us to lower our vigilance. The important thing is not to try to avoid propaganda -- we really can't do that -- but to ensure that the people who control the content and the direction of the propaganda are our people and that they have the right motivations. That is the essential thing. Beside this, everything else becomes insignificant.

An understanding of our present situation leads us to a conclusion that many otherwise intelligent people are afraid to confront. That frightening conclusion is that there is no peaceful way out of this situation. The Jews never will voluntarily relinquish control of the mechanism of propaganda, and as long as they retain control America and our civilization and our people will continue down the slippery slope toward oblivion: non-White immigration will continue, the White birthrate will remain far below the replacement level, the media will continue pushing multiculturalism and race-mixing, and the Jews will continue their efforts to reduce our freedom to a choice of hair curlers and ball games, as they already have done in Norway. And as long as their television screens stay lit and the shelves at the shopping malls remain full of consumer goods, the lemmings will go along happily with everything.

We cannot vote our way out of our planned demise. Either we will let ourselves be led into extinction by the masters of propaganda like lambs to the slaughter, or we will fight back, and when we fight back there will be a period of bloody chaos. When I have said this in the past, I have been accused by people who otherwise agreed with me of having bloody-minded fantasies. They did not want to face the prospect of violence and bloodshed, and, when I said that we must face it, they accused me of wanting it.

Well, I don't want it -- except as an alternative that is infinitely preferable to extinction. I prefer a peaceful path to survival and to freedom and to progress, but I no longer believe that a peaceful path remains for us. The people who accused me of being bloody minded were people who were comfortable, who were living fairly high on the hog, and of course they didn't want their comfort to end. They didn't want their comfortable world to become chaotic and dangerous and bloody. I can't blame them for that. But they let their desire for a continuation of comfort hide the truth from them. They wanted to believe that we can vote our way out of the mess that we're in and that everything can be resolved peacefully, and so that's what they believed. I can only agree with Professor Ellul that the worst thing that we can do now is entertain any illusions about the efficacy of democracy in combating the destructive propaganda mechanism being used against us by the Jews.

In this regard, I should mention the current situation in France. Tomorrow is the runoff voting in the French presidential election. Many people in the United States are very excited by the fact that the conservative French nationalist Jean-Marie Le Pen came in second in the voting two weeks ago, and the Jews in France have been denouncing him as an "anti-Semite" and demonstrating in the streets against him ever since. Almost certainly the winner in tomorrow's voting will be the corrupt system politician Jacques Chirac. We must remember that France doesn't have the two-party system that we have in the United States. The vote is divided among a number of competing parties, and Le Pen won second place two weeks ago with less than 17 per cent of the vote, while the front-runner Chirac received less than 20 per cent. Tomorrow Chirac will win with something between 70 and 80 per cent of the vote.

But even if Le Pen were to beat Chirac tomorrow, it certainly wouldn't mean beating the Jews. For the Jews it's a win-win situation. If Chirac wins, he will continue taking money -- and orders -- from the Jews, as he has in the past. If Le Pen wins, it will be a setback for some Jewish policies, but probably the first thing Le Pen will do is begin kicking Arabs out of France -- and it is the Arabs in France, brought there by Jewish "anti-racist" immigration policies, who have been in the forefront of attacks on synagogues and on Jewish businesses in France in recent months. Le Pen certainly will not begin kicking Jews out of France. The man running his current electoral campaign, Bruno Gollnisch, is a Jew, as are several other key members of Le Pen's National Front party. Le Pen's own son-in-law is a Jew. Jewish propaganda in France, as elsewhere, has set the limits for permissible political behavior, and Le Pen will act only within those limits.

There remains the fact that Le Pen did surprise most observers by winning second place two weeks ago, and people in America who desperately want to believe that we can vote our way out of our mess here are grasping at that fact like a drowning man grasping at a straw. But really, what Le Pen's surge in popularity proves is not that democracy has a chance, but that surprises do happen. That is what should give us hope: that even with their stranglehold on the propaganda media in America, the Jews can and do miscalculate, and unforeseen events do happen.

Our responsibility here is to continue building our capability for taking advantage of surprises when they do happen, and that means primarily to continue building our means for communicating effectively with every independent-minded White man and woman with a conscience and attempting to gain his or her participation in the effort to reach others. I don't expect that our communications capability will win any elections for us, but it certainly will enhance our ability to fight back -- and that is what I intend to do until my last breath.

Philadelphia and Kampala

I spend most of my time in rural, nearly all-White West Virginia, but last week I was in Philadelphia. While there, I spent some time late Friday night strolling the sidewalks of a commercial and tourist area in eastern Philadelphia, not far from the waterfront. It was an area full of cafes and bars and trendy clothing shops and tattoo parlors, and the sidewalks were jammed with pedestrians. It was a multiculturalist's dream, with people of every race and culture imaginable pushing past one another.

I had to walk around knots of a dozen or so Blacks blocking the sidewalk in places: real Blacks, so dark they looked as if they had just dropped out of a tree in equatorial Africa. More numerous were the mongrels of every shade: mestizos from Central America, Middle Easterners, mulattos and quadroons and octoroons, and God only knows what else. And there were Whites too: at least, they were genetically White, judging by their features and light skin and hair. But many of them wore hip-hop clothing: backward baseball caps and baggy trousers and rings in their ears. Some of the Whites affected dreadlocks or cornrows. And they seemed right at home in this multicultural stew. I didn't see on any of their faces the revulsion that I felt. And I thought of the fact that this used to be a fine, White city, a European city. This is in a sense America's birthplace: Independence Hall, the Liberty Bell, and all of that. What happened?

Well, of course, we know what happened. We've been talking every week on this program about various aspects of what happened to change our cities from civilized, White communities to the filthy, multicultural jungles they are today. My companion last Friday night, a long-time resident of the city, told me that Philadelphia is worse than most American cities, and perhaps it is, but I've seen enough of the others to know that they're all headed the same way.

Earlier in the day last Friday, I had read a Reuters dispatch from Kampala, the capital of Uganda, about an incident that had taken place a few days before. Ugandan rebels, members of a fundamentalist Christian sect led by a self-proclaimed "prophet," Joseph Kony, who wants to set up a state based on the Biblical Ten Commandments, had ambushed a funeral procession and taken the 60 mourners captive. The Christian rebels then forced the mourners to cook the corpse they had been carrying and eat it. After the corpse had been boiled in sorghum and eaten, all 60 of the mourners were slaughtered by the rebels.

A grisly story indeed, and one that embarrassed multiculturalists probably would blame on the unsettled conditions in Uganda at the moment. I don't think that this incident can be blamed entirely on unsettled conditions, however, nor do I think it fair to blame it on the fact that the rebels are Christian fundamentalists. In settled times as in unsettled times, Ugandans have had a proclivity for eating each other. In the 1970s, when Idi Amin was president of Uganda, he ruled with an iron hand and did not tolerate unsettled conditions. He also ate choice parts of people who displeased him. And Idi Amin was not a Christian like Joseph Kony, but a Muslim. Neither religion nor politics is the essential element in this little story from Uganda. The essential element is race.

And the fact is that year by year Philadelphia is becoming more like Kampala. And as I said a moment ago, we understand why that is so. If you don't mind though, I'll go ahead and explain it again. A century ago, when Philadelphia still was a White city, a huge wave of Jewish immigration to America from Eastern Europe was taking place. By 1900, there already were a million Jews in the United States, and more were arriving at a rate of 40,000 a year. Almost as soon as they got off the boat, these Jews began elbowing their way into the mass media of news and entertainment, buying up newspapers, theaters, magazines, and book publishing companies. A few years later, they were taking over Hollywood and buying up radio stations, then television stations and TV-production companies. They seemed to have an unerring instinct for what they needed to do in order to destroy the new country in which they had arrived.

We had, of course, plenty of destructive undesirables of our own already here. Even before the Civil War psychopaths such as John Brown murdered their fellow Whites on behalf of Blacks and attempted to "equalize" the races. After the Civil War, we had even more hate-crazed egalitarians attempting to punish Whites -- mostly White Southerners -- for being better than Blacks. Some, like John Brown, justified their murderous egalitarianism on Christian grounds, but after the Civil War and the shameful policies directed against Southerners during the Reconstruction period, there was no large-scale, systematic effort by Whites, Christian or otherwise, to mongrelize and to degrade America. We still had an abundance of crazies and haters around, but without an organizing force behind them they were a potential rather than an actual danger.

Such an organizing force appeared after the Jews had fastened their grip on America's mass media of news and entertainment and brought the lemmings under their influence. In fact, it really wasn't until after the Second World War that the Jews pulled out all the stops and made the destruction of White America their primary goal, enlisting our own worst elements for assistance in that purpose. Before that, they had needed America to beat Europe into submission. If they hadn't been able to use America against Europe during the Second World War, the Jewish problem would have been solved in a final way 60 years ago, at least in Europe.

But after the war, they no longer needed a powerful America, and so they employed every corrosive medium in their arsenal to subvert and to weaken us. They promoted homosexuality, first as an acceptable life-style and then as a fashionable life-style. They pushed feminism and the "liberation" of women: which is to say, they convinced our women that they were being "liberated" by choosing to be lawyers or financial consultants or business executives instead of mothers. They opened our borders to the Third World: which is to say, they used their media control and their bought politicians to scrap our pro-White immigration laws and replace them with laws favoring non-White immigration. They financed and led the so-called "civil rights" movement. They demanded and got the abolition of laws against miscegenation.

And they did all of this in typically Jewish fashion. They didn't try to strong-arm us. They didn't put guns to our heads and demand that we destroy our country, or else. Instead they sniffed out our weaknesses and then used those weaknesses against us, remaining behind the scenes as much as possible. These days, none of the major Jewish media will openly promote the use of illegal drugs, but back in the 1960s and the 1970s it was the Jews who were pushing the use of drugs by Whites, on university campuses and elsewhere. They made the use of so-called "recreational" drugs -- marijuana and cocaine, for example -- fashionable among impressionable young Whites. When I was in school in the 1950s, White kids didn't smoke marijuana. And even today the newer recreational drugs, such as "ecstasy," are promoted almost exclusively by Jews. The world center for the "ecstasy" trade is Israel.

Body-piercing and virtually every other degenerate fashion among young Whites today is promoted by the Jewish media. I don't mean by this that the New York Times openly advocates that young White males should wear earrings or push safety pins through their lips, but the young White males that do this -- the young White males that one sees on the streets of Philadelphia -- have been persuaded that it is fashionable by some Jewish media aimed specifically at them, whether MTV or the slick, degenerate magazines for yuppies that have proliferated in recent decades.

Much more serious and directly destructive has been the Jewish effort to persuade young White women that it is fashionable to have a Black boyfriend, and in this effort the hand of the Jews is even more clearly visible. Not only do we see the increasingly brazen promotions of interracial sex in Hollywood films and in slick magazine advertising, but the promotions for miscegenation are backed up by pseudo-serious support in everything from the New York Times to U.S. Army recruiting posters to guided discussion groups in classrooms.

And so, here's the $64,000 question: Is the spread of the sort of multicultural filth that I saw in Philadelphia last week inevitable? We've seen it get worse decade by decade and year by year. Will it continue getting worse until all of America is nothing but a sewer like Philadelphia and until we all have drowned in the filth? Are the Jews, with their stranglehold on the media, on the politicians, and on the minds of the lemmings, unstoppable?

And the answer is "no." What is happening is not inevitable. It will only continue spreading and becoming worse to the extent that we permit it. The Jews, despite all of their power, both apparent and real, are indeed stoppable. Let me explain.

I have a huge stack of news reports from the Middle East and from Europe on my desk. Here is a typical headline. It's from an Associated Press report datelined this Sunday in Jerusalem: "Israeli Soldiers in West Bank Kill Palestinian Woman, Her Two Children, and a Young Boy." The report goes on to say that the Jews shot the Palestinian woman and children because they looked "suspicious." The shootings came immediately after an Israeli tank maneuvering in the area lost one of its treads. The Jews suspected sabotage, so they opened up on the unfortunate Palestinian woman and children with the tank's. 50-caliber machine gun. To the average reader it looks an awful lot like the Jewish soldiers were angry about the damage to their tank and simply decided to kill any Palestinians they saw. And this is all too typical of the news coming from Palestine these days. I have a hundred other reports in a similar vein.

So what's the reaction to this news? That depends on who's reacting. If you're one of Israel's bought politicians in the U.S. government, then your reaction is along the lines of George Bush or Attorney General John Ashcroft or the head Republican in the Congress, Dick Armey. House Majority Leader Dick Armey believes that it's just fine for Jews to shoot Palestinian women and children whenever they feel like it. He announced last week that he believes that the Jews should ethnically cleanse Israel and the entire West Bank, expelling or killing all non-Jews and claiming the land for Israel. And his fellow political prostitutes agree with him, although most of them are not quite as bold as he is to call for ethnic cleansing. The fact is that they've all been bought, they're all traitors, and they all should be hanged, every one of them. And I'm dead serious when I say that, although I also should say that I am grateful to Congressman Armey for announcing his approval of ethnic cleansing, because that's what will have to be done in this country on a huge scale. And it will be done.

Anyway. I'm not the only thoughtful person who keeps up with the news. There are many thousands of other Americans who read the news reports about Jews venting their anger by shooting Palestinian women and children and then hear our government leaders respond with approval. Whatever the Jews want is all right with these politicians. And thoughtful people understand. They understand how the system works. They see that the lemmings aren't told about the murdered women and children. They know that the government is told but that it doesn't care. They see that the lemmings aren't told about Congressman Armey's approval of expelling all the Palestinians from Palestine so that the Jews can have their land. Almost no mass media reported Armey's statement. Thoughtful people realize that the lemmings wouldn't understand even if they were told. They note that Ariel Sharon, the repulsive mass murderer and war criminal who heads Israel, visited the United States this week and was hugged by Donald Rumsfeld and by George Bush and the other politicians as if he were Santa Claus.

Thoughtful people are forced to admit, after years of evading the truth, that I have been right. Thoughtful people are being forced to admit that the truths that I have been rubbing in their faces for years, which they didn't want to see, are in fact truths. Not all thoughtful people yet, of course, but many more now than a year ago. And let me assure you, more and more of them are admitting it to me. And when thoughtful people have been forced to admit the utter and total corruption and treason and irresponsibility of our government, when they have been forced to admit that the government will do whatever the Jews tell it to do where the Middle East is concerned, they also begin to pay attention when I tell them that what has happened to Philadelphia is also the result of Jewish corruption and subversion. And they begin to understand that if we do not want to sink to the level of Uganda then we must attack the corruption and the subversion at its source.

What's happening now in Palestine has broken the ice. For the past 50 years the Jews have used their "Holocaust" story as a shield to protect themselves from criticism: "You can't blame us for anything we do, because we suffered so much in the concentration camps under those awful Germans. If you say bad things about us, you're no better than those German doctors who performed medical experiments on us or those German concentration camp guards who shoved us into gas chambers."

And for 50 years, the Jews weren't blamed for anything. No matter what they did, they were portrayed as innocent and inoffensive. All of us were afraid of being considered "anti-Semitic." That has changed very recently to a remarkable degree among thoughtful people. We all owe to the Palestinian suicide bombers and other resistance fighters a great debt of gratitude for this. When thoughtful people see Jews behaving like Jews, killing Palestinian women and children just because they're angry, and when they see the media here -- at least, the mass media, the media that influence the lemmings -- ignoring this atrocious behavior, and when they see our government expressing its implicit approval -- and in some cases explicit approval -- not only do they no longer feel an obligation not to criticize Jews, but they also begin seeing the bigger picture of Jewish influence and control and subversion.

And really, it goes far beyond a question of moral outrage at what the Jews are doing in Palestine. It even goes beyond a sense of alarm on the part of patriots about the Jews' corruption of our politicians through their control of the media. People who really don't care whether or not the Jews are massacring Palestinians and who already were pretty cynical about our politicians and their subservience to the Jews are quite concerned about the direction that world events have taken recently. A lot of thoughtful people simply don't want us pushed into a Third World War. They don't even want us pushed into another war that can be confined to the Middle East. They don't want us invading Iraq and in general being used as Israel's bullyboy and butcher in the Middle East. They see this sort of behavior as very, very dangerous and very, very destructive of American interests.

There are even thoughtful people who look into the future and think about things such as America's long-term status as a nation, about our future as a people, and about what will happen to our civilization. I consider myself one of these people, and I believe that I have much more company now than I did as recently as a year ago.

An important aspect of this growing awareness of the Jewish role in things is that it isn't confined to America. It's worldwide. In Europe, it has reached the grass-roots level. It's not just thoughtful people in Europe who are reacting to the Jews and to the politicians now. I'm not suggesting that there is any sort of general awakening among the lemmings. That simply won't happen until the Jewish stranglehold on the mass media is broken. But there are stirrings now by more ordinary people, whether they understand everything or not. The natives in Europe are becoming restless.

And in the Muslim world, restlessness has reached the thermonuclear level. If the present conflict between Jews and Palestinians continues at its present level of intensity for a few more months, governments will fall. And those who are governing know it. They are bracing themselves. They are preparing themselves to switch roles. Instead of their present role -- or their perceived present role -- of lackeys of Jew-controlled America, they will adopt the role of patriots. One sees this quite clearly in the content and tone of the government-controlled media in countries such as Egypt and Syria and Saudi Arabia.

These countries know that they're not strong enough to take on Israel and America. But the men in power also don't want to be lynched as traitors by their own people. For a long time they have had to play a balancing game, trying to remain friendly with the American bully and at the same time keep their own people from becoming too restless. But the balance is shifting now. Respect for America is lower than it ever has been, and fear of their own people is greater. And so the government-controlled media are saying things about the Jews that they haven't said in the past, when they were more concerned about not displeasing America.

In fact, when one reads some of the things being published in Muslim countries about Jews now, one sees more than merely an effort to show the public that the government isn't friendly with Jews: one almost can see a preparation for some sort of final showdown, almost a recognition by the governments involved that a final showdown with the Jews is imminent.

All of this may seem far removed from the mess in Philadelphia, but it really isn't, because the same people responsible for what has happened to Philadelphia are responsible for what's happening in Palestine. Let me outline just the first part of a possible sequence of events. The Palestinian resistance continues, and the Jewish reprisals become even more atrocious. Public unrest in the Muslim countries continues to build. The Pakistani collaborator General Musharraf is assassinated, and the government of Pakistan is taken over by militant Muslims who immediately halt all collaboration with the United States. The leaders of other Muslim governments are terrified that they may suffer Musharraf's fate too, and so they also halt all collaboration with the United States. The Jews, increasingly desperate as they see their situation deteriorating, demand that the United States immediately bomb and invade Iraq. Without the permission of Iraq's neighbors, that can only be done by waging war against those neighbors as well. Thoughtful observers in Europe and in America, concerned now, will be vastly more concerned then. And you can imagine where things might go from there.

Well, all of this is extremely speculative, but it is clear that many things happening in different parts of the world are tied together. We are living in interesting times.

A Third World War?

It's interesting watching the government and the news media working together to condition the public to support a war against Iraq. This week's issue of Time magazine -- that's the May 13 issue -- has a painting of Saddam Hussein on the cover in which he looks like a sinister Colombian cocaine lord, with dark glasses, a straw hat, and a scowl. The story about him and his family inside gives us a pretty greasy image of the bunch: certainly not the sort of people you'd want living next door.

Is Time's image of Saddam accurate, or is it a deliberately distorted caricature? I've never met Saddam or even spoken with anyone who does know him personally, so I can't answer that question with certainty. But the same issue of Time magazine also presents a whitewash of Ariel Sharon's murderous incursion into the Jenin refugee camp. And, of course, the magazine is part of the Time-Warner-CNN Jewish media conglomerate. Time's editor-in-chief is Norman Pearlstine. And all of the Jewish media are beating the war drums against Iraq. And so is everyone in the Bush government, from the Jews behind the scenes, like Paul Wolfowitz and Richard Perle, on up through the top figureheads, such as Donald Rumsfeld and George Bush.

What's especially interesting to me about all of this is that it is a 180-degree change from the situation we had 30 years ago, during the Vietnam war. Then the media and the government, instead of being aligned as they are now, were directly opposed to each other, with the Jewish media making up what amounted to a cheering section for the Viet Cong. The equivalent today would be Fox News to interviewing former Taliban officials instead of Defense Department bureaucrats and Israeli diplomats and for Time magazine to depict on its cover Ariel Sharon with a sinister expression instead of Saddam Hussein. Well, that's another story. What's clear today is that where Jewish interests are concerned -- where the Middle East is concerned -- the news media and the government are in lockstep. Perhaps you remember how, before the U.S. bombing of Afghanistan began last fall, all of the Jewish media were pushing hate propaganda against the Afghans, trying hard to convince the American public that we ought to bomb them.

There were television specials about how mean the Afghans were to their women. In one Kabul street scene that was broadcast over and over again in various anti-Afghan news segments, an Afghan man was shown ineffectually swinging what looked like a fan belt at the legs of a woman, presumably his wife. The implication was that this was typical of the way Afghan men treated their women. Bush's wife announced on television that we needed to "liberate" the Afghan women. Then, after a few weeks of intense hate propaganda by the media, the bombing began. And it looks as if that's exactly what they have in mind for Iraq.

Well, we expect that from the media. As long as they are controlled by Jews they will support Jewish interests rather than American interests. Anyone who expects otherwise is living in a dream world. More disappointing is the behavior of the Gentile politicians and bureaucrats. Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld seems to be trying to outdo George Bush as the government's champion liar. Rumsfeld has been raving all week about the need to "take out" Iraq as soon as possible, because Saddam Hussein is trying to develop weapons of mass destruction. We need to get rid of Saddam because he is a threat to the peace and security of the United States, et cetera. Every time I turn on Fox News, they have Rumsfeld or some other government "expert" warning us about the danger of not invading Iraq and getting rid of Saddam before he develops nuclear or biological weapons.

And every time I see or hear such propaganda I must repress the urge to shout: "And what about Israel, you lying SOB? What about Ariel Sharon? You pretend to be concerned about nuclear and biological weapons being in unauthorized hands, but Israel is the only country in that part of the world that has an unauthorized arsenal full of nuclear and biological weapons. You never mention the danger of a homicidal maniac such as Ariel Sharon having his hands on nuclear and biological weapons. Iraq never has attacked the United States, but Israel has. Have you forgotten already about Israel's attempt to sink the USS Liberty and blame it on the Egyptians?"

Then, there is that pompous little bigot we have for an attorney general, John Ashcroft. He was on TV last Saturday giving a commencement speech at Catholic University in Washington, DC, and preaching a crusade against terrorism and terrorists. He was telling us how evil terrorists are, how different they are from us, how they hate everything we stand for, and how we must root them out and destroy them. Watching this grim, tight-lipped little religious fanatic rave against terrorists was an experience in surrealism. Does Ashcroft believe that Palestinians blow themselves up because they like to do that sort of thing? Does he believe they would be using suicide bombers if the Jews didn't have an occupation army in Palestine and weren't killing Palestinian women and children and bulldozing Palestinian homes? Does he believe that they would be strapping explosives on their own women and sending them into Jewish restaurants and discos if they had tanks and F-16s and Apache helicopters like the Jews are using against them?

And when Ashcroft rages self-righteously about waging war against state-sponsored terrorism, he never mentions the state that sponsors more terrorist activity than any other, and that is Israel. Perhaps Saddam Hussein would like to sponsor terrorism against other countries, but it is Israel, not Iraq, that actually sends teams of trained assassins into other countries to kill and to terrorize: into Jordan to squirt poison into the ear of a popular Muslim cleric or into Lebanon to use a car bomb to kill a potential witness against Ariel Sharon in a war-crimes trial.

Well, of course, Bush and Rumsfeld and Ashcroft and all the rest of that slippery crew understand these things. I never have said that they should be hanged for being stupid or ill-informed but for being liars and traitors; they should be hanged for letting American interests go to hell while they scramble to serve the Jews at America's expense. And now they're hell-bent on dragging us into another war because that's what the Jews want -- certainly not because it will benefit America.

And I have to tell you that I have mixed feelings about all of this. On the one hand, I am automatically, instinctively against anything that the Jews and their collaborators in Washington are for. If they want us to fight another war for them, I'm automatically against it. If they tell us that Saddam Hussein is an evil person and ought to be killed, my reaction is that there has to be something good about anyone they hate so much. But I also try to be cold-blooded and rational about these things. Anti-Jewish feeling is stronger now, all around the world, than it has been in a long time, and the basic reason for this very welcome development is the servile obedience of the Bush government to Jewish demands.

It's the U.S. government allowing itself to be used by Israel that caused the September 11 attack, that resulted in the war against Afghanistan, that has emboldened the Israelis to brutalize and repress the Palestinians even more than usual, that is leading us toward a war against Iraq, and that may yet lead us into a Third World War. All of these things in themselves are undesirable, and yet they are having an overall good effect by raising anti-Jewish feeling, and that in the long run may outweigh everything else.

It's like Affirmative Action. The forced integration of Blacks into our White society in America has had many evil effects. Easily the worst of these effects has been the increase in miscegenation, the increase in mongrelization. But Affirmative Action has been the most irritating aspect of racial integration for many White Americans: the most unpopular aspect. Many ordinary White Americans are willing to accept miscegenation, in some cases because their churches tell them that that's what Jesus wants, and in other cases because they don't feel personally threatened by it. But they do feel threatened by Affirmative Action. They feel that it's fundamentally unfair to take jobs or promotions away from Whites and give them to less-qualified Blacks just because they're Blacks. They feel that it might deprive them personally of employment or of a higher salary. And so my attitude toward Affirmative Action is, right on! The more the better! White Americans need to be irritated by the racial problem.

I feel the same way about the new campaign that Blacks are pushing to obtain reparations for slavery. It sounds like a really stupid idea with no merit at all. I mean, if anybody should pay reparations, Blacks should pay them to us for bringing their ancestors over here from the African jungle, teaching them the rudiments of personal hygiene, tripling their life expectancies, putting them on welfare, and tolerating their criminal behavior for the past 400 years. But Blacks want trillions of dollars -- and I mean trillions -- in reparations for the unpaid labor of their slave ancestors, and they figure that now that White men have become such a spineless bunch of wimps, this is a good time to push for it.

Of course, most Whites still don't feel threatened by the reparations campaign; it still seems to them more theoretical than real. But the campaign is gaining momentum, and I think that it'll have a really salutary effect on most White Americans when it finally dawns on them that they're being asked to cough up a sizable piece of change for Blacks who, they feel, already have gotten more than enough from them. So I'm hoping that the reparations campaign will continue growing and that it will cause a lot of irritation.

I believe that many racially conscious White Americans will agree with me that it's worth putting up with Affirmative Action and reparations, just so Blacks as a whole will be seen as a threat by Whites who might otherwise be tempted to tolerate them. I believe that many patriotic Americans can see the silver lining in the September 11 attack that served as a walk-up call for all Americans and convinced many who needed to be convinced that we must regain control of our government, that we must get the Jews off our back.

But a Third World War? Am I really willing to accept a Third World War just so more people will become conscious of the danger of permitting the Jews to control our government? Isn't that like throwing the baby out with the bath water?

If we back off a bit and look at our situation realistically and from a viewpoint that takes in the whole picture, one of the first things we realize is that we already are involved in a worldwide war -- or at least, a race-wide war. Up through the end of the 19th century, our people ruled the world unchallenged. And then came a century of self-destructive insanity. Two fratricidal world wars of unprecedented destructiveness and the rise of communism stand out in the 20th century. We killed off tens of millions of our own people in these wars, and Jewish communists killed tens of millions more in a selective way, deliberately butchering the best of our people in an effort to make us easier to rule. The 20th century was the century during which the mass media rose to dominate the thinking of the masses of our people -- and fell into Jewish hands.

The 20th century also was a century of unprecedented scientific and technological progress for our people. We made enormous strides forward in transportation, manufacturing, communications, agriculture, the eradication of disease, and weaponry. If in addition to our technological advances we had retained control of our mass media, not let ourselves be lied into two world wars, and nipped Jewish Marxism in the bud, we would be in an absolutely unassailable position now.

But we did let the Jews gain a stranglehold on our mass media of news and entertainment. We did let ourselves be lied into two world wars. We didn't stamp out communism before it had wreaked a dreadful toll. And we let all of our technology be turned against us. We gave it away to other races, foolishly thinking that we were being good Samaritans. We went into the Third World and helped the non-Whites there control the diseases that were keeping their populations in check. We showed them how to increase their agricultural production so that they could support vastly larger populations. We permitted them to replace their spears and sticks and stones with modern weapons that we had invented.

The result, of course, was a population explosion among the non-White races, so that they now outnumber us 12 to one around the world. And this non-White population explosion that we foolishly caused has resulted in the destruction of our planet's tropical rain forests and other natural habitats and the extinction of thousands of species of plants and animals. White Americans don't pay much attention to this because it is happening mostly in Africa, Asia, and Latin America, but I find it distressing. Even if the explosion of Black and Brown races didn't pose a direct competitive threat to the White race for breeding and living space on the planet, I greatly prefer a world with more rain forest and more big cats and members of other non-human species, and fewer Black, Brown, and Yellow featherless bipeds.

Some of the cleverest of our own people now are making great efforts to find an AIDS vaccine that will halt the plague that otherwise might trim the Black population of Africa back to a more manageable size. Others are concerned about more efficient ways of getting relief supplies to parts of the Third World that are suffering from chronic famine. Microsoft chairman Bill Gates, certainly an otherwise intelligent man, has given hundreds of millions of dollars for medical aid to lower the death rate among African infants and children. All of this is suicidal insanity.

Of course, we have other problems that seem much more pressing, but the problems of habitat destruction and species extinction caused by the overpopulation in the non-White parts of the world will catch up with us very soon. We are sharing the dwindling resources of this planet with far too many non-Whites. It's pretty clear that to deal effectively with these global problems we need to reorient the way in which most of our people look at the world. We all need to understand that we still are as much subject to Nature's laws as we ever were. We all need to understand that we are living in a finite world and are competing with other races for survival in this world. We need to root out the egalitarianism, the "we're all one species" nonsense, the whining "why can't we all just learn to get along with each other?" lunacy that has pervaded our policies toward other races and replace it with a hardheaded racial survivalism.

There are two ways to go about this. One way is for us to let ourselves be pushed into a Third World War. That might go something like this: The Jews continue their insistence that the United States use its military power to bomb and to invade Iraq and to set up a puppet government, more or less as we have done in Afghanistan. The ever-obedient Bush government goes along, using bases in Saudi Arabia. Outraged Muslim militants in Pakistan stage a coup there and lynch all of the politicians and bureaucrats who have been collaborating with the United States. U.S. military units that had been operating inside Pakistan in the hunt for Afghan patriots are ambushed by Pakistani military units and butchered. The Bush government retaliates by bombing Karachi. Frightened Saudi leaders demand that the U.S. military units stationed in Saudi Arabia for the assault on Iraq leave immediately. The Bush government, on orders from Ariel Sharon, refuses. OPEC imposes a total oil embargo on the United States and threatens similar embargoes on any countries in Europe that collaborate with the United States in the assault on Iraq. That includes Germany, which serves as a staging area for the U.S. military in its assault on countries in the Middle East. There is rioting in German cities as German citizens protest being dragged into the U.S. war against Israel's enemies, and at the same time a wave of Muslim suicide bombings takes place in the United States, mostly in crowded shopping malls, killing hundreds of Sally Soccermoms.

North Korea decides to take advantage of the U.S. problems at home, in Europe, and in the Middle East, and invades South Korea. The Bush government threatens a nuclear strike unless the North Koreans withdraw immediately. The Chinese government decides the time has come to take possession of Taiwan and does not believe that the United States will try to wage nuclear war against China and North Korea at the same time.

Well, you can use your imagination to complete the scenario. The good news that could come from a Third World War is that with an end to intervention by misguided White do-gooders, AIDS, famine, and cannibalism would be able to whittle the African population back down to pre-colonial levels pretty quickly. Some European governments certainly would be overthrown, and perhaps in a few cases patriotic governments would replace them. In the United States, just about anything might happen. At least, no more welfare checks would be going out, and the urban rabble would be eating each other.

No matter what developed, however, it hardly could lead to anything worse than leaving the present course of events on track, because that course leads to certain extinction for our people. A Third World War would at least reshuffle the cards.

There is, of course, a better way, and that is to break the Jewish stranglehold on our mass media, regain control of our government, and then follow a rational plan to do with surgical precision and with much less destruction of our planet that for which a Third World War might or might not lay the groundwork. That's the way I have chosen. It's certainly not an easy way, but it is a way that becomes surer and surer as more and more decent and responsible White men and women join me along this path.

I have prepared a video presentation that outlines my path. If you find my American Dissident Voices broadcasts interesting, I think that you'll also find my 51-minute video presentation interesting too. I'd like to send you a copy to view for yourself and to share with your friends. Send $5 to National Vanguard Books for the compact-disk version of this presentation or $10 for the VHS cassette version. If you're outside the United States, make that $6 and $15 respectively. Ask for my 51-minute video presentation.

The Big Lie

In the eight months since the September 11 attack, I've had probably 50 interviews with people from the mass media. A standard question they nearly always ask me is how have I responded to the attack. Part of my answer to that question is that I have tried to use the reaction of the government and the mass media to the attack to show that the politicians and the media lie shamelessly and outrageously to the American people about matters of vital importance.

That is, everyone who pays attention to what is happening in the world -- which is to say, everyone except the lemmings -- understands that the attack was a retaliation for the U.S. government's arming and financing Israel's aggression in the Middle East. That is crystal clear. And yet everyone in the government and everyone in the mass media has denied it since September 11. Their standard response to the question, why were we attacked, is that there is no good reason for it. We were attacked only because Osama bin Laden "hates our freedom." The attack certainly had nothing at all to do with American policy in the Middle East or with Israel. We would have been attacked even if we never had supported Israel, they say. Not only did Mr. Bush and Mr. Cheney and Mr. Ashcroft and everyone else in the government -- and every media spokesman -- repeat this lie over and over again, but they tried hard to avoid the question. It became Politically Incorrect even to ask why we were attacked.

And it was all very obvious -- at least, to the perceptive portion of the population. Usually the politicians and the media bosses have time to prepare their lies more carefully and to rehearse them, but September 11 caught them by surprise, and their lies and their attempts at misdirection were clumsy and transparent: good enough for the lemmings, but certainly not good enough to fool anyone able to observe and think for himself. Usually a clever liar will leave enough ambiguity in his lies so that it's difficult for anyone to say with absolute certainty that he's lying. One can be pretty sure that he's lying, but there's usually a little doubt: maybe it's not really a deliberate lie; maybe it's just a difference of opinion, a difference in interpretation. But in the case of September 11, with the government and the media both claiming that the attack had nothing to do with the government's support for Jewish policy in the Middle East, there's no room for ambiguity: they're lying. And the things they're lying about are not trivial: not the sort of inconsequential lies that politicians always tell to get reelected. The lies about American foreign policy and its consequences are important lies, big lies, lies that impact heavily on America's security and survival.

And so nearly every time a reporter asks me about September 11, I use the opportunity to point out that George Bush is a liar: a conscious, deliberate, bald-faced, shameless liar. Of course, he's much worse than merely a liar: he's also a traitor. He has cynically and deliberately violated his oath of office and betrayed America, betrayed our people, and I use the September 11 attack to illustrate that, too. If George Bush claimed that the September 11 attack was not a response to the government's pro-Israel policy simply because he didn't want to be blamed for having a bad policy that got more than 3,000 Americans killed, then he could have set about changing that policy after September 11. He could at least have opened the policy up for discussion. He could have blamed the policy on Bill Clinton. He could have said that it was just one of many bad policies left over from the Clinton era that he hadn't gotten around to changing yet.

But there was no discussion, and there were no changes. Discussion of whether the United States should pursue America's interests in the Middle East, or Israel's interests instead, simply is not permitted. It is a taboo subject. And it is clear enough why it is a taboo subject.

When Osama bin Laden attacked the United States on September 11, he did much more than send us a message that Muslims are not happy about what the Jews, with the aid and support of the U.S. government, are doing to the Palestinians. He forced the American people -- at least, the two or three per cent of the American people able to think for themselves -- to pay attention to what their government is doing. He forced the whole subject of U.S. policy in the Middle East into the open: the subject of American interests versus Jewish interests, of Jewish media control and its influence on governmental policy. He broke the taboo. He exposed the treason. In the long run that may more than compensate for the 3,000 American lives that were lost.

And of course, the fact that his attack opened up for debate the subject of American interests versus Jewish interests, the fact that he exposed the treason, is the real reason that George Bush hates him enough to start a war to punish him.

To be sure, Bush is more popular than ever with the lemmings. They have accepted without question his explanation that we were attacked only because Osama bin Laden "hates our freedom." It is only the thinking minority who have seen his nakedness, and they don't have enough votes to make a difference. Nevertheless, it is the thinking minority, not the lemmings, that will one day judge him and condemn him and hang him. And behind that smirk of his, he knows it.

Let's get back again to the subject of lying to the American people. It's something that is continuous and massive. But as I said earlier, there's usually a certain degree of ambiguity to it, so that it's difficult to prove that any particular lie is a conscious and deliberate lie. And so when I encounter a lie that's easy to prove is a lie, I like to use it as an example. There's a Jewish outfit that calls itself "FLAME." That's an acronym for "Facts and Logic about the Middle East." FLAME buys full-page ads in various print media and instead of facts and logic publishes pretty outrageous lies about the Middle East that are proved fairly easily to be lies. I have one of FLAME's full-page ads in front of me now. It's titled "Arabian Fables," and the copy I have appeared in the February 11 issue of U.S. News & World Report.

According to the FLAME ad, "the fundamental myth" about the Middle East, is that there are any such people as "Palestinians." Before 1948, according to FLAME, the Palestinians were Jews, and now they are Israelis. But in 1948 Arabs who wanted to take the Jews' land away from them began calling themselves "Palestinians." The clear implication of the FLAME ad is that the people of Palestine always were Jews, and that the people calling themselves "Palestinians" today are Arab interlopers. That is the opposite of the truth.

Actually, there are hundreds of books available that were written before the current conflict between Jews and Palestinians began that provide demographic data on Palestine. Just before the First World War, in 1914, Palestine was a part of the Ottoman Empire. In that year the Turkish government took an official census. Of a total population of 689,000, just 84,660, or 12.3 per cent, were Jews, and many of those were recent immigrants who had come to Palestine as part of the Zionist movement.

During the First World War, Britain took Palestine away from Turkey and after the war permitted large numbers of additional Jews to immigrate. According to the official British census of 1931, the Jewish population of Palestine had risen to 16.9 per cent: that's 174,606 Jews in a total population of 1,033,314. The influx of Jews into Palestine during the 1920s and 1930s was a source of continual provocation to the native Palestinians, and there were a number of riots and other disorders. Jewish pressure on the British government, however, prevented the British from making any permanent or effective halt to the immigration of Jews into Palestine.

After the Second World War, shortly before the United Nations partition of Palestine into separate Jewish and non-Jewish areas, Jews still made up less than one-third of the population of Palestine. The 1946 British census counted 608,000 Jews out of a total population of 1,845,000. The great majority of these Jews were recent immigrants, whereas nearly all of the Arabs were natives who had roots in Palestine going back many generations. What the Jews had that the Palestinians didn't have, however, was a very substantial degree of control of the governments of the United States and the United Kingdom, and these two countries exerted a decisive influence on the policies of the United Nations. The result of this influence was the partition of Palestine in 1948 into separate Jewish and non-Jewish areas, with the one-third of the population that was Jewish being awarded two-thirds of the land, including the most valuable areas.

The Jews immediately set about ethnically cleansing their areas, carrying out a number of horrifying massacres of non-Jewish Palestinians and terrorizing tens of thousands of others into fleeing from their homes, which immediately were seized and occupied by the Jews. In a series of wars since 1948, the Jews, backed by the United States, seized even more Palestinian land. The Palestinians who were driven from their land -- the real Palestinians, whose parents and grandparents and great-grandparents had owned the land -- were forced into crowded and dirty refugee camps, where they still live. And whenever one of these dispossessed Palestinians strikes back at the Jews who stole his country from him, everyone in the Bush government, from the chief liar on down, and everyone in the controlled media here denounces the Palestinian as a "terrorist" -- and all of the Sally Soccermoms and Joe Sixpacks nod in agreement.

I'll tell you about one of these Palestinian "terrorists" you've certainly heard mentioned by the media if you pay any attention at all to what's happening in the world. He's called Abu Nidal: the most feared Palestinian "terrorist" of them all. The name the man called Abu Nidal was born with is Sabri al-Banna. He was born in 1937 in the Palestinian coastal city of Jaffa. His family was one of the wealthiest and most distinguished families in Palestine and owned, among other things, more than 6,000 acres of orange orchards, which were the major source of income for the family. When Sabri al-Banna was an 11-year-old schoolboy, the Jews seized all of his family's orchards and other lands, all of their houses, and everything else his family owned, and he and his family ended up living in a tent in a refugee camp in the Gaza strip. Quite a shock for a quiet, introverted little boy.

The shock led him to dedicate his life to evening the score, to gaining justice for his people, to striking back at the Jews who had stolen all of his family's property and driven them into a refugee camp. He built what was probably the most highly disciplined and ruthless fighting organization on the Palestinian side. He struck not only at Jews but also at Palestinians who collaborated or compromised with the Jews. Whenever Abu Nidal's troops would strike, machine-gunning Israeli tourists at an airport or bombing some Jewish facility in another country, the politicians and the media here always would go into hysterics about Arab "terrorism." I always cheered. Abu Nidal is not some crazed murderer who likes to kill people. He is a Palestinian patriot fighting for his people and for his country in the only way he can fight under the circumstances. He does not "hate America's freedom" as George Bush and the media would have you believe. There is no reason for him to be an enemy of America, except that we have made him an enemy by arming and financing the Jews who stole his family's orange groves and forced him into a refugee camp. Remember that whenever you buy an orange that came into America from Israel: one of those sweet Jaffa oranges that are so favored by New York Jews. That orange is stolen property. It belongs to Abu Nidal. It was stolen from him by the Jew who sold it to you.

By the way, a good source of information on Abu Nidal is a report published for the U.S. government in September 1999 by the Library of Congress. It's titled "The Sociology and Psychology of Terrorism: Who Becomes a Terrorist and Why?" It's available on the Internet now.

Nearly everything that the average American thinks he knows about the Middle East -- everything told to him by the government or the media about current events or history in Afghanistan, Iraq, Palestine, Israel, or about American involvement in that part of the world -- is part of a tissue of lies spun by the Jews to serve their interests at the expense of ours. The lie told by FLAME and published by U.S. News & World Report -- and that magazine, incidentally, is owned by Jewish real-estate speculator Mortimer Zuckerman -- the lie that the real Palestinians are Jews, and the Arabs claiming to be Palestinians are interlopers, is typical.

The lies told to the American people by the controlled media and the government and the schools certainly are not limited to lies about the Middle East, however. The same FLAME ad in U.S. News & World Report that we've just discussed begins with a lie that has nothing to do with the Middle East. It's a lie that Americans have been told so often that most of them accept it unquestioningly as the truth: even university-educated Americans who believe that they are sophisticated enough to distinguish Jewish propaganda lies from the truth. This is the way the FLAME ad begins:

Josef [sic] Goebbels, the infamous propaganda minister of the Nazis, had it right. Just tell people big lies often enough and they will believe them.

The message there is clear: the Nazis advocated fooling the people by telling them big lies and repeating those big lies frequently. Right? We've all been told that a thousand times, haven't we? We learned it in school. We heard it on television. Half the politicians in Mr. Bush's government undoubtedly have warned us at one time or another about the Nazi "big lie" propaganda technique. Usually, however, the principal Nazi advocate of the "big lie" is named as Adolf Hitler rather than Joseph Goebbels. We've all heard about Hitler's "big lie" technique. And so we all should be grateful to the Jews for warning us about it. Right? I mean, no matter what we think about Jews otherwise, we at least owe them for warning us about Nazi lies, don't we?

You know, I used to believe that myself. But I was fortunate enough to know someone who told me that it wasn't so. This person told me that neither Hitler nor Goebbels had advocated the "big lie" technique for deceiving the public. He told me that the opposite was true: that in fact Hitler, far from advocating the use of the "big lie," had warned his people that the Jews use this "big lie" technique, and that the German people should be wary of it.

Well, when I hear something like that, my tendency is to check it out for myself. I don't accept many things on faith. And when my friend told me that Hitler had neither invented nor advocated the "big lie" after I had heard so many times in school and on TV that Hitler had done those things, at first I didn't believe him. I checked it out for myself, and that's what you should do. I got a copy of Hitler's book, Mein Kampf, from the library, and I read what Hitler wrote back in 1925 about propaganda and lying and about the Jews. You know, Mein Kampf, is still in print today. If you can't find an English translation of the book in your local library you can buy a copy from amazon.com or from Barnes & Noble. Or, better, you can buy a copy from the sponsors of this program, National Vanguard Books. They stock and sell both the original German edition and two different English translations.

Anyway, I'll read to you exactly what Hitler wrote about the "big lie." I'll read from the Ralph Manheim translation that is currently published in this country by the Houghton Mifflin Company. In Chapter 10 of the first volume of Mein Kampf Hitler writes about the role of Jewish-Marxist propaganda in bringing about the collapse of the German war effort during the First World War and then blaming that collapse on German General Erich Ludendorff:

It required the whole bottomless falsehood of the Jews and their Marxist fighting organization to lay the blame for the collapse on that very man who alone, with superhuman energy and will power, tried to prevent the catastrophe he foresaw and save the nation from its time of deepest humiliation and disgrace. By branding Ludendorff as guilty for the loss of the World War, they took the weapon of moral right from the one dangerous accuser who could have risen against the traitors to the fatherland. In this they proceeded on the sound principle that the magnitude of a lie always contains a certain factor of credibility, since the great masses of the people in the very bottom of their hearts tend to be corrupted rather than consciously and purposely evil, and that, therefore, in view of the primitive simplicity of their minds, they more easily fall victim to a big lie than to a little one, since they themselves lie in little things, but would be ashamed of lies that were too big. Such a falsehood will never enter their heads, and they will not be able to believe in the possibility of such monstrous effrontery and infamous misrepresentation in others; yes, even when enlightened on the subject, they will long doubt and waver and continue to accept at least one of these causes as true. Therefore, something of even the most insolent lie will always remain and stick -- a fact which all the great lie-virtuosi and lying-clubs in the world know only too well and also make the most treacherous use of.

The foremost connoisseurs of this truth regarding the possibilities in the use of falsehood and slander have always been the Jews; for after all, their whole existence is based on one single great lie, to wit, that they are a religious community while actually they are a race -- and what a race! One of the greatest minds of humanity has nailed them forever as such in an eternally correct phrase of fundamental truth: he called them 'the great masters of the lie.' And anyone who does not recognize this or does not want to believe it will never in this world be able to help the truth to victory.

Now, I ask you: does that sound as if Hitler invented the "big lie" or was advocating its use -- or does it sound as if he were condemning this as a Jewish technique and warning his fellow Germans about it? What do you think?

It's too bad he didn't warn us Americans too, because over here the Jews have used the very technique of which Hitler warned in 1925 to put the blame on Hitler himself! I guess that all it takes is enough chutzpah, as they proudly call it. And it certainly took chutzpah on the part of the Jews who wrote that FLAME ad accusing the Palestinians of being interlopers in Palestine and furthermore accuses them of using the "big lie" technique when the Palestinians charge that it is the Jews, not they, who are the interlopers. The brazenness of the Jews really takes one's breath away.

Anyway, I apologize for reading such a long excerpt from Mein Kampf, but it does give us just one more really clear-cut and unambiguous example of the way in which the Jews in the media and their collaborators in the government lie to us with the utmost brazenness and arrogance.

The Importance of Leadership

Every time I fly somewhere for a meeting or a speaking engagement, I have to spend an hour or two in airports. That's a very democratic experience. One really sees the dregs of humanity in airports these days. It used to be that what bothered me most was seeing young White women with mongrel offspring in tow. What irritates me at least as much these days is the sight of young White males trying to look and act like Blacks. In every airport one sees these sorry specimens wearing hip-hop garb: backward baseball caps, baggy shorts or trousers, and clueless expressions on their faces. More and more one sees these slack-jawed cretins with their hair done in cornrows and pieces of metal through their lips or cheeks or nostrils.

I mentioned in a recent broadcast that I saw young Whites like this shuffling along the sidewalks of Philadelphia during one of my rare visits to that urban pesthole last month. The more White males I see garbed and groomed like Blacks, the less surprised I am to see White females leading by the hand the disgusting proof that they have been dabbling in bestiality. It's obvious that this sort of degeneracy is rapidly becoming much more widespread. When I did an interview with Rolling Stone magazine nearly two years ago, they sent along a German photographer who had his blond hair done in dreadlocks. I don't know why I should expect more of Germans than that. After all, they have had 57 years -- two generations -- of Judaeo-American forced education in democracy now. Turn on any TV receiver in Germany, and you will see much of the same poisonous, race-destroying filth from Hollywood that you see here. Young Germans watch Sumner Redstone's MTV just about as much as young Americans do. And in Germany as in America: monkey see, monkey do.

Last year the first-place photojournalism award for the best photograph by a newspaper photographer went to Mike Urban of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, for a photograph he took during the Mardi Gras riot there. I talked about that riot on this program last year. Gangs of Blacks ran through the mostly White crowd of Mardi Gras revelers, snatching purses, punching White women in the face, throwing them to the ground, and kicking them senseless, while Seattle's cops stood on the sidelines and refused to interfere, lest they be accused of "racial profiling." One young White man who tried to help a young White woman who had been knocked down and was being kicked by Blacks, was smashed in the head by a Black wielding a bottle and was killed. I repeatedly watched the newsreel footage of the riot, and it clearly was a Black-on-White riot.

But not entirely. There were some Whites among the rioters: "wiggers" I call them. That means "White niggers." They're the ones with the backward baseball caps. Mike Urban's prize-winning photograph, which the Seattle Post-Intelligencer did not have the courage to publish, is of a young White woman in the crowd who has been stripped naked by a gang of men and is being pawed and sexually abused by some of them while others constrain her. Most of the 20 or so men holding the naked girl down and pawing her are non-Whites: mestizos or Blacks. But in the photograph one can see clearly three or four White males -- wiggers -- grinning as they help the Blacks hold the struggling girl: a shocking and sickening portrait of the reality of multiculturalism.

What should be done with wiggers? In my view they are a thousand times worse than Blacks, and when the time of cleansing for America comes, they certainly will be dealt with first.

And there's another class of White people we can do without. They don't wear hip-hop clothes or have their hair done in cornrows. On the socioeconomic ladder they're a rung or two above wiggers, but they're at least as bad as wiggers. They are the Whites who collaborate with the Jews. With the exception of the German photographer for Rolling Stone, who was a wigger, virtually all the other journalists with whom I've dealt are in the collaborator class. They don't help rioting Blacks tear the clothes off White girls and sexually abuse them, but they help the Jews generate the social climate in which that sort of thing can happen. They help the Jews disseminate their multicultural propaganda. They help the Jews teach young Whites that they shouldn't resist Blacks, that it's all right to mix with them. They help the Jews indoctrinate politicians and police officials with Political Correctness, so that White cops are less likely to intervene to protect Whites from Blacks. Sumner Redstone could not spread his poisonous, racially destructive, hip-hop filth through his MTV channel without the active collaboration of thousands of White helpers.

And its not just the Whites who help Redstone by buying advertising on MTV or working for him as announcers or scriptwriters who are collaborators. Here's an example: a month ago a small, nearly all-White South Dakota college town was turned upside down when it was discovered that a Black basketball player, whom the local college recently had imported from Chicago, was infected with HIV and was having sex with the White girls at the college: with lots of them. Nearly everybody at the college had to have an HIV test, and it turned out that several of the girls there already had become infected by the Black. It's likely that a few of the White boys will be testing positive for HIV pretty soon.

The only reason this story made the news is that the Black basketball player knew he was infected and was having sex with White girls without telling them of his infection. He had found out he was infected after a routine blood test, but he kept the news to himself so as not to interfere with his sex life. Well, there's a law against that sort of thing in South Dakota, and so now the Black is locked up and out of circulation. To me the shocking thing is not that the Black was deliberately infecting his sex partners; the shocking thing is that White college girls were willing to have sex with him, and that White college boys were willing to tolerate that sort of behavior and to have sex themselves with girls they knew had been having sex with a Black. So far as I am concerned, every White woman who has sex with any Black deserves to be infected with HIV and to die a horrible death from AIDS.

But the really reprehensible people in this story are the White college officials who imported this Black basketball player from Chicago. I imagine that before they found out that he was spreading HIV through the whole student body they were quite proud of themselves for having brought some "diversity" to this White college. I have a pretty strong suspicion that these academic idiots wouldn't have been bothered a bit about White girls having sex with the Black if it hadn't been for the HIV. They would be proud that they had taught the girls to be so "tolerant." They would be happy that the White girls aren't "racists."

These South Dakota college officials almost certainly aren't Jews, but they are doing the Jews' work for them. Sumner Redstone and the other media Jews have been working for decades to create the moral and ideological climate where this sort of thing could happen -- they have been making racial mixing fashionable -- but without the active collaboration of White college officials and White journalists and White politicians and White Christian preachers, all of the Jews' racially destructive efforts would have been in vain.

I'm sure that everyone listening is familiar with situations similar to that at the South Dakota college, but without the HIV. There are Christians in small communities all across the Whiter areas of America who feel guilty that their communities are so White, and many of these guilt-stricken Christians have tried to remedy the situation by importing Blacks or other non-Whites into their churches or their communities. Some of them even bring in the Blacks from as far away as Africa. And again, the Jewish media people have been the biggest factor in generating the moral and ideological climate in which being White is something to feel guilty about, but it is local Gentile preachers and teachers and politicians and journalists who actually do the destructive work of making their communities more racially "diverse."

So what's to be done with all of these collaborators if we want one day to have a clean America again?

The reason we're discussing this subject today is that there is a difference of opinion among members in my own organization, the National Alliance, about what attitude we should have toward wiggers and collaborators. Some members believe that we should take the hardest possible line toward them. Whether they are wiggers or White women who consort with Blacks or White journalists who follow the Jewish party line or White politicians who do the Jews' bidding in order to get themselves elected or any other sort of collaborator, they should all be put up against a wall and given traitors' justice.

And some members of the National Alliance believe that we should be more understanding of the conditions, of the environment, that made these wiggers and collaborators opt for treason.

Now, all of this is pretty academic at this time, since we're still a long way from being able to punish anybody for anything. About all we can do now is try to understand what is happening in the world around us and communicate with others, help others understand. But I should tell you that until a few years ago I was pretty much in agreement with the hard liners. I was in favor of getting rid of all of the wiggers and all of the collaborators as a first step toward building a healthy society for our people.

But my views on this have changed as I have learned more about human motivation and human behavior. What I have come to understand about people -- our people, White people -- is that there are very few, probably only a fraction of a per cent, who are consciously evil: a fraction of a per cent who collaborate with the Jews knowing that they are helping the Jews destroy our people but who do it anyway for reasons of personal gain. These collaborators fit the clinical definition of psychopath: people without conscience. I believe that most politicians are in this category.

And there are only a small minority of our people who have an innate moral sense, a minority of two or three or four per cent of the White population who are able to think independently and form their own views about what is good and what is evil, what is right and what is wrong.

And the remaining 95 per cent or so of the population simply don't have minds or consciences of their own. They may be bright or they may be dull, they may have good work habits or they may be lazy and careless, they may be well disciplined and have good character or they may be weak and self-indulgent slobs, but all of them conform their opinions about what is right and what is wrong, about what is proper behavior and what is unacceptable, to their perception of the opinions and behavior of their peers.

No matter how foolish we may think their opinions, no matter how perverse we may consider their behavior, they have no innate compass for judging these things; they can only conform their thinking and their behavior to the thinking and behavior they perceive in their peers. Sometimes -- that is, at most times in the past, prior to the last century -- what they perceived was real. They observed and listened to their neighbors at first hand. And especially they observed and listened to community leaders, to role models, to authority figures, including especially parents. So what we had in the past among this 95 per cent of our people were patterns of thinking and behavior that varied primarily with social class. But the patterns were based on perceptions of real behavior among peers.

Since the rise of the mass media during the past century, however -- and especially since the rise of television during the past half-century -- what has been perceived has been increasingly artificial. What has been perceived has to a large degree not been the thinking and behavior of their flesh-and-blood peers that have evolved naturally over the course of generations, but rather the artificially contrived behavior and pretended thinking of actors and actresses and commentators on movie screens and TV screens and of models in magazine advertising. Scriptwriters and film directors and spin doctors and advertising executives have to a very large degree taken the place of parents and of other natural role models in shaping the thinking and behavior of the masses. And of course, perception gradually becomes reality. Eventually we observe among our peers behavior that is very similar to that we see on our television screens. But the mass media -- especially the mass media of entertainment -- continue to lead and to move and to shape public thinking and public behavior.

That is a fact with profound implications. I'll recapitulate: Most people -- probably 95 per cent of the population -- are neither good nor evil. They are morally neutral. Their attitudes and opinions and aspirations -- their moral judgments and their behavior -- are determined not by any innate sense of right and wrong but rather are conformed to the attitudes and behavior they perceive in their peers, real or artificial, and especially to the attitudes and behavior they perceive in role models and authority figures. When those role models and authority figures incorporate and display what is best in a people, then the attitudes and behavior of the masses will be good and progressive and characteristic of the best tendencies in the race. If the leaders and role models display noble qualities and greatness, then the masses will strive toward nobility and greatness.

They won't all get there, of course, but they will strive for those qualities, and many will achieve them.

If their leaders show their racial consciousness and pride and their respect for the best traditions of their people, then the masses also will be racially conscious and will try to behave in a way that displays racial pride and respect for tradition. They will not even consider mixing with non-Whites or imitating their ways, and they will not tolerate such behavior in their peers. The concept of racial treason will be abhorrent to them.

But if their role models and authority figures display the worst and weakest traits in the people, then that behavior will be reflected in the behavior of the masses. And if their role models and authority figures are mere puppets controlled by aliens whose aim is the demoralization and destruction of the people, then the masses will behave in the way we can see them behaving on the streets of Philadelphia or in our airport terminals today. That is the consequence of permitting the Jews to gain a dominant influence over our mass media of news and entertainment.

And so what is the point in shooting wiggers or collaborators, except as an educational measure, to provide an example of behavior that will not be tolerated in a healthy society? Or perhaps, in the case of wiggers, we might consider shooting the most slack-jawed among them as a eugenic measure.

The point is that what we need to aim for is not eliminating the great mass of people who have bad behavior or bad attitudes, but rather changing their role models and authority figures. We should not even think about getting rid of the lemmings, just because they have been behaving badly. They make up the great majority of every society, and it is necessary that they do so. They provide the stability and cohesiveness necessary for a viable society. A society cannot tolerate too many independent thinkers, just as it cannot tolerate too many psychopaths.

Think about these things. I know that it took me a lot of thinking and a lot of observing to become quite sure that what I have just told you is, in fact, correct. Twenty years ago, I believed that people are born with all of the fundamental traits that they will display as adults. And at one level -- a very basic level -- that is true. Intelligence -- various types of intelligence -- is a group of fundamental traits that individuals are born with. And there certainly are inherited tendencies toward certain types of behavior as well. But these are underlying tendencies, and the ways in which these underlying tendencies are expressed in individuals -- the ways in which they manifest themselves as the individuals mature -- are very much subject to external influences.

The 15-year-old, slack-jawed White boy encountered on a Philadelphia sidewalk who wears a backward baseball cap and baggy trousers and collects basketball cards with pictures of Black players could have turned out to be a decent White teenager instead, with pride of race and aspirations to be a policeman or a soldier or a craftsman: perhaps not a brilliant member of White society, but at least a constructive member. The 20-year-old White woman encountered in an airport terminal with needle marks on her arms and three mulatto offspring trailing behind her could have turned out to be that White policeman or soldier or craftsman's wife, living a clean life and proudly bearing and caring for his children.

For the masses, everything depends on the examples that are set for them, on their role models and authority figures. Monkey see; monkey do.

That is why it does not behoove us to think of ourselves at war against wiggers and collaborators. When I see a White kid wearing hip-hop clothing, I still feel a strong urge to kick. And when I see a White woman with mongrel offspring, I wish that I could call in an air strike against New York or Washington or Philadelphia or Los Angeles; I really have an urge to lay waste to the whole society that tolerates such abominations.

But I understand that our task is not to kick and shoot and bomb; instead it is to communicate and to teach. We don't need to try to communicate with the wiggers and the collaborators now. But we do need to communicate with those of our people capable of being positive role models and authority figures, and we do need to continue to build our means -- our media -- for reaching ever larger numbers of ordinary White people: those who have not yet been completely corrupted by the aliens who have subverted our mass media into a weapon for waging genocide against our people.

When the time comes there will be enough punishment for those who need it. But what most of our people, who are behaving badly now, need is not punishment but good leadership, good examples. And that is what we must strive to give them.

The FBI, the ADL, and Christina Long

We need a government. Every civilized nation needs a government. Certainly, there are independent people who just want to live out in the woods by themselves and not be bothered. They don't need a government.

And there are weepy, wimpy, liberal types who whine, "Oh, why can't we all just get along with each other?" and who believe that governments wouldn't be necessary if we would just be nice and share everything. But believe me, these feminized, flower-power types don't know what they're whining about. Every civilized society does need a government.

The problem with governments -- even well-designed governments -- is that they tend to get out of control. They tend to become corrupt. The wrong sort of people tend to get their hands on the levers of power. That's the problem Americans have today: big time. The U.S. government has become a malignant monster that not only is gobbling up the remaining freedom of its citizens as fast as it can but also is threatening the very existence of our nation, the survival of our race.

I'll repeat that: the U.S. government is doing two very harmful things. On the one hand it is taking away our remaining freedom, using the excuse that only by taking away our freedom can it effectively fight against terrorism and thereby give us more security. And on the other hand the government is coming more than ever before under the influence of the most destructive elements in our society. We'll talk about both of these things in detail and look at some specific examples.

You know, this so-called "War Against Terror" that the Bush government and the controlled media claim to have been fighting ever since September 11 is an enormous fraud. The way to fight terrorism is to get rid of the un-American policies that cause terrorism in the first place.

Why was the Federal Building in Oklahoma City bombed in 1995? It was a direct response to the U.S. government's massacre of the members of the Branch Davidian church in Waco, Texas. Tim McVeigh explained that clearly enough. The U.S. government had no business laying siege to that church and then burning its members to death. Tim McVeigh wanted to send the government a message that such behavior would not be tolerated. He wanted to send a message that wouldn't be ignored. He wouldn't have had to send that message if the government hadn't committed the Waco massacre first and then refused to accept the blame for what it had done.

Why were the World Trade Center and the Pentagon attacked last year? The attack was a direct response to the U.S. government's complicity in Israeli aggression in the Middle East. Osama bin Laden has explained that clearly enough. There would have been no September 11 attack if the U.S. government had been backing American interests in the Middle East instead of Jewish interests.

The way to stop terrorism is to eliminate the causes of terrorism, especially when those causes are bad in themselves and should be eliminated even if they didn't cause terrorism. The arrogant and high-handed behavior by the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms and the FBI that led to the Waco massacre are bad in themselves and should not be tolerated in a free country. It's not angry patriots like Tim McVeigh who are the cause of terrorism; he's just an agent. It's the arrogance and high-handed behavior by the government's secret-police agencies that are the cause.

The U.S. government's policy of supporting Israel at the expense of our own interests is bad in itself and should be eliminated. It's not Muslim fundamentalists like Osama bin Laden who are the cause of terrorism; he's just an agent. It's the un-American foreign policy of the U.S. government that is the cause.

But just as the government and the media after the Oklahoma City bombing refused to talk about the real cause of that bombing, since the September 11 attack they have refused to talk about the real cause of that disaster too. The government and the media don't want to make the secret police obey the law and respect the rights of citizens, and they certainly don't want U.S. foreign policy to put America's interests ahead of Israel's interests, and so instead of remedying the bad policies that were the causes of those catastrophes they have made the bad policies even worse. They started a war in Afghanistan and are hot to make it an even bigger war. And they have unleashed the FBI and other secret-police agencies, giving them free reign to rummage through the curbside trash or the e-mail of people who are not even suspected of criminal activity, just to see whether or not the secret police can find something Politically Incorrect.

They're able to get away with this because they have a constituency of lemmings who really believe that the government will allow them to consume in greater comfort and safety if they will just let the government do whatever it wants, including abolishing the Bill of Rights and bombing the hell out of everyone that Israel doesn't like.

Let's be sure that I've made myself absolutely clear: This whole "War Against Terror" is phony. It's unnecessary. It's counterproductive. The terrorism Americans have experienced in the past decade, whether in Oklahoma City or New York or Washington, has not been the irrational activity of madmen as the government and the media would have us believe. It has been the response to bad government policies from aggrieved men who had no other way of fighting back. The way to minimize terrorism in the future is to have better government policies, not to let tight-lipped little religious fanatics like Attorney General John Ashcroft have his secret police check library records to see what books we've been reading or to let irresponsible dimwits like George Bush play at war in the Middle East and risk taking us all back to the Stone Age.

And the reason for all of this -- the reason for both the government's assault on our freedom and the warmongering in the Middle East -- is the growing Jewish control over our government. Day by day America is moving closer and closer to a total Judeocracy.

If you've been paying attention to the news, you know that the FBI has been receiving a great deal of criticism recently for ignoring evidence of a coming terrorist attack prior to September 11 last year. There have been many insinuations from the media -- which is to say, from the Jews -- that the FBI has become too soft and careless and that it needs to be reorganized and needs to reorient its activities. Well, now we know one of the ways in which the FBI's activities are being reoriented: more snooping into the private lives of citizens. But there also are other ways. Last month FBI Director Robert Mueller addressed a conference of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith in Washington.

I've spoken with you on several of these broadcasts about the Anti-Defamation League: the ADL. It's a criminal organization that has been snuggling up to and infiltrating law-enforcement agencies at every level. I reported to you more than once that the ADL had its offices in Los Angeles and San Francisco raided by police and was caught redhanded with thousands of stolen confidential police files. I reported that the ADL has strong ties not only to the government of Israel but also to Jewish organized crime in this country. The head of the ADL, Abe Foxman, is one of the Jewish leaders who leaned on Bill Clinton to get a last-minute pardon for the billionaire Jewish master-criminal and fugitive Marc Rich last year.

None of this ADL involvement with Jewish criminals and criminal activity is a secret, except to the American public. It's all a matter of public record, but most people don't know about it because the Jewish media won't report it. The media always refer to the ADL as a "respected human rights organization." And so that's the way the politicians and the Federal bureaucrats treat the ADL. Certainly Robert Mueller, the FBI director, knows all about the ADL's criminal activity and criminal connections, but he still accepted an invitation to address the organization last month. Here's an excerpt from what FBI Director Mueller told the ADL:

We in the FBI tremendously value your perspectives and your partnership. Your insights and research into extremism are particularly helpful to us, shedding light on the changing nature of the terrorist threats facing America. Your support of hate crime and terrorist investigations, which are now front and center in the work of the FBI, is essential to us. And the training and education you provide for the FBI and for law enforcement have never been more relevant. That includes the conference on extremist and terrorist threats you are sponsoring later this month at the FBI Academy.... So thank you for all these efforts. And again, I look forward to working with you to strengthen our partnership.

That should scare the hell out of every patriotic American. The ADL -- the Jewish organization that helped Jewish master-criminal Marc Rich escape justice, the organization that gave an award to Jewish contract-murderer Moe Dalitz in 1985 in appreciation of all the money received from Dalitz's criminal enterprises, the organization that was caught redhanded with thousands of stolen police files -- now has a partnership with the FBI and is teaching the FBI about the changing nature of terrorism in America. Specifically, what the ADL is teaching the FBI is that the people the FBI needs to keep an eye on are the "hate criminals" and "speech criminals," the White racists and anti-Semites, the White "extremists," the White Americans who complain about the growing influx of non-White immigrants, about multiculturalism, about the government's Israel-first foreign policy, and about the Jewish control of the news and entertainment media. They are the new terrorists and potential terrorists, according to the ADL. And the FBI is going along for the ride. As Director Mueller announced in his speech last month, those new threats are now "front and center" in the work of the FBI.

Now I'll tell you what's not front and center in the FBI's work. I'll begin with an especially shocking bit of news that some of you already may have heard. In fact there's even a very brief item about it in the June 3 issue of Newsweek magazine. That's the sex-murder in Danbury, Connecticut, on May 24 of 13-year-old Christina Long. Christina, a bright, pretty sixth-grader, was lured to a shopping mall in Danbury by 25-year-old Saul Dos Reis, a mestizo illegal alien from Brazil. Dos Reis had sex with the blonde, blue-eyed little gringa in his car, then killed her and threw her corpse into a nearby creek.

Well, you may think, that sort of thing happens all the time these days, but it's just a local police matter. What does it have to do with the FBI or the ADL? Let me tell you.

The murder of 13-year-old Christina Long didn't just happen. It wasn't just a fluke. It was the product of a process that has been developing for decades. This individual murder by itself may have been unpredictable, but the process leading to the murder was deliberate. It was planned. And the process has targeted not just Christina, but every young, White, Gentile girl in America.

Let's look at Christina a little more closely. She was a sixth-grade cheerleader at a private Catholic school, St. Peter's, in Danbury. A good student and described as "sweet" by those close to her, Christina had many of the interests common to other girls her age: fashion, dancing, popular music. Her friends did note, however, that recently Christina had begun using cosmetics heavily and dressing provocatively. To understand why one only needs to look at what she wrote about herself in her Internet postings. She wrote in Black "jive talk" she evidently had picked up from watching MTV. The music she listened to was rap. Christina's favorite group was the Black female trio called "Destiny's Child," which performs songs with titles like "Stimulate Me" and "Bootylicious." Here are just a couple of sentences from her private Web site:

i love to shopp but then again what girl doesnt. I like hot cars too. im like dress nice. im not hoe. I just dance a little sexyer then most girls.

For the uninitiated, "I'm not hoe" is Black talk for "I'm not a whore." But Christina dressed and talked like a whore. When she went to the shopping mall, she went with the intention of having sex with a 25-year-old illegal alien she had met on the Internet.

What led a White sixth-grader to behave like that? I'll tell you, and I'll also tell you that many, many other young White girls are behaving like Christina, and a lot of them are even younger than 13. Do you remember JonBenet Ramsey, the six-year-old girl who was murdered in Boulder, Colorado, in December 1996 by an unknown person? Like Christina she was a cute, blue-eyed blonde. Like Christina she used cosmetics heavily, wore sexy clothes, and danced provocatively -- at the age of six!

That seemed such a bizarre thing at the time that it received an enormous amount of media coverage. All of the media attention, however, focused on the murder-mystery aspects of the case: who had killed little JonBenet? Nobody asked why a six-year-old White girl from a well-to-do family was dressing and behaving like a 20-year-old strip-club dancer. That's really a taboo subject, but we'll talk about it anyway. The more general question is, why are young White girls, some as young as JonBenet Ramsey, others 12 or 13, like Christina Long, dressing and trying to behave like adult women? Why are they trying to be "sexy" at such an early age?

I wish we had a lot more time to answer this question. All I can do today is give you a few bare-bones answers and then let you dig into it yourself. The basic answer as to why very young White girls are trying to be "sexy" is that young girls are very fashion conscious, and the fashion being pushed by the media to which they are exposed is early-teen and pre-teen sexuality. And I hardly need to tell you that the people pushing this sexualizing of children are Jews, and that they are doing it deliberately and consciously. It's not a trend that just happened to develop by itself.

The media through which young White girls like JonBenet and Christina are receiving this message of premature sexuality are multicultural entertainment media and fashion advertising directed at children.

You know, it used to be that parents decided what their 11- and 12- and 13-year-old children should wear. Parents decided what fashions were appropriate and picked the clothes. But not any longer. Let me quote a spokesman, Kurt Barnard, for the children's garment industry: "In our sophisticated day and age," Mr. Barnard told a writer for the publication Business First, "a 10-year-old girl can be expected to try and exercise her own sense of fashion."

And guess who it is that manipulates that 10-year-old girl's sense of fashion. The dominant media influence on young teens comes from MTV, which is owned by the Jew Sumner Redstone. Says MTV's chairman of the board Bob Pittman:

At MTV we don't just shoot for the fourteen year olds -- we own them.

The man who decides on the content of the entertainment presented to 14-year-olds is MTV's president of programming, Brian Graden, a homosexual Jew.

Nickelodeon, a cable channel also owned by Sumner Redstone, shoots for the younger teens and pre-teens and is pushing the same trend as MTV. Bruce Friend, the vice-president of planning for Nickelodeon:

In the last ten years we've seen a rapid development of upper-age children. The 12- to 14-year-olds of yesterday are the ten to 12s of today." The rise of the pre-teen teen is "the biggest trend we've seen."

Friend is seconded by New York market researcher Michael Cohen, who says: "There's no question there's a deep trend, not a passing fad, toward kids getting older younger."

Redstone's child-poisoners take frequent polls to see what effect their poison is having. The Nickelodeon-Yankelovich Youth Monitor found in its polls that by the time they are 12, children describe themselves as "flirtatious, sexy, trendy, athletic, cool." And Nickelodeon's Bruce Friend reports that by age 11, children in focus groups say they no longer even think of themselves as children.

Well, that's the entertainment-media side of the coin. The other side of the coin is the children's fashion industry itself, which, as you may have guessed, is as heavily Jewish as the entertainment media. From the clothing chains Gap-Kids and Old Navy, which are run by Donald Fisher and Millard Drexler, to The Wet Seal's Zutopia stores run by Irving Teitelbaum, and Limited Too, which is run by Michael Rayden, the Jewish influence on children's clothing is pervasive and pernicious.

You may have heard of the recent protest by outraged parents over the children's division of Abercrombie & Fitch introducing thong-style underwear for 7- to 14- year-old girls. Until 1988 Abercrombie & Fitch was well-known as a traditional American supplier of quality outdoor attire. Then it was acquired by the clothing chain The Limited, where, under the guidance of Leslie Wexner, a fervently Zionist Jew, it was transformed into a purveyor of trendy, provocative attire for young people, and then spun off as an independent company. Limited Too was another of Wexner's creations that followed a similar course.

The sexual exploitation of White children by Jewish fashion designers and executives can be traced back at least as far as the early 1980's when the bisexual Jew Calvin Klein hired Brooke Shields to model his line of jeans and later devised an ad campaign using children in seductive poses. Today's children are being morally and culturally abused by a fashion industry that receives its inspiration from a degenerate entertainment industry. Seven- to 14-year-old children who visit Limited Too stores have been encouraged to come to the mall dressed as their favorite female pop star, such as the bizarrely-attired and vulgar performer who calls herself "Pink." What could be more obvious proof of a deliberate attempt to corrupt our youth?

If the FBI really wanted to accomplish something useful for America, instead of collaborating with the ADL's program to abolish our Bill of Rights, it would investigate and terminate the constant flow of propaganda spewed out by the Jewish media and fashion industries which is subverting our youth. Instead, it is up to us to neutralize this assault on our children.

If you are the parent, grandparent, uncle, or aunt of young White children, you have a sacred obligation to help them develop a lifelong resistance to these Jewish attempts to destroy their racial and cultural identity. Don't wait until a policeman comes to your home bearing tragic news. Remember what happened to Christina Long.

The New Extremists

I've been thinking more about the things we discussed last week. I tried to tie several very important threads together, each of which could have used much more discussion than we devoted to all of them together. I'm afraid I didn't do a thorough enough job. In future broadcasts we'll discuss each of these extremely urgent subjects repeatedly. I want to begin today's broadcast, however, with a brief recap of what we talked about last week.

I pointed out that there is a major, long-term, concerted effort by the Jewish entertainment media and the Jewish fashion industry to sexualize our children prematurely, to cause little White girls 10 or 11 or 12 years old to behave sexually like 20-year-olds. I used as examples six-year-old JonBenet Ramsey, murdered by an unknown person more than five years ago, and 13-year-old Christina Long, murdered last month by an illegal alien from Brazil. Both of these little girls were dressing and behaving like women much older than they.

Those, of course, are exceptional cases. Most little girls don't get murdered. Most 13-year-old White girls don't meet non-Whites in shopping malls for sex. But virtually all little girls are subjected to a non-stop flood of Jewish propaganda through television entertainment and TV and magazine advertising designed to make them act older than their age, designed to confuse them about their own racial identity, designed to make them believe that it's cool to have sex with non-Whites, designed to steal their childhood from them -- and, of course, designed to get them and their parents to spend money on the fashions the Jews present to them.

And this flood of propaganda is having an effect -- a big effect -- on our little girls, and not just in getting them to spend money. It is changing their attitudes and behavior. It is persuading them to act older and more sophisticated than they really are and to become more sexually active. It is making them much more receptive to sexual approaches from non-Whites. It is stealing their childhood from them, and it is stealing them from their own people, from their own race. If you are the parent of a young girl you know this is true. You have seen it with your own eyes.

I told you last week that this is a two-pronged attack on our children, with the media and the children's fashion industry collaborating in the effort. If you've listened to many of my broadcasts, you've certainly heard me talk about the Jewish control of the mass media, naming names. When our children are the target of the media, it's the entertainment media that are important, since most children these days have no interest in news. The entertainment medium with the most influence on White teenagers is MTV, and for sub-teens it is Nickelodeon. Both are owned by the Jew Sumner Redstone, born Murray Rothstein, who also owns CBS. But Jews exercise a similar degree of control over every major entertainment medium, whether it's part of Michael Eisner's Disney empire or a Hollywood motion-picture studio or a popular music label.

And the same Jewish control is found in children's fashions. Jews have long held a dominant position in the garment industry in this country. The mass media and the garment industry were the first two industries they took over when they began arriving in this country in large numbers at the beginning of the 20th century. Last week I mentioned a few names of leading Jews in the children's garment industry -- Leslie Wexner, Donald Fisher, Irving Teitelbaum, Millard Drexler, Michael Rayden, Calvin Klein -- but it's easy for you to explore this subject for yourself. The Jews are not so secretive and defensive about their control of the garment industry as they are about their control of the mass media.

This matter of the Jewish assault on our children, the concerted Jewish effort to prematurely sexualize and alienate our little girls, is an extremely important matter, but I should confess that my principal reason for bringing it up last week is that I wanted to catch the attention of many parents who need to be approached at a personal level, parents who just don't otherwise care much about what is happening to their government or other parts of their society but who have seen the effects of this Jewish assault on their children and are concerned about it.

As I said this assault on our children is extremely important, but the other things we discussed last week actually are much more urgent and need to be dealt with first. I pointed out last week that what the Jews are doing to our children should be a concern of any government agency with a responsibility for the security of our people -- and I mentioned the Federal Bureau of Investigation in particular. And I pointed out that not only is this deliberate assault on our children not likely to become an FBI concern, but that in fact the FBI is moving in the opposite direction. The new direction for the FBI is to be concerned with anyone -- like me -- who is opposed to this assault on our children, anyone who exposes to the public the Jewish nature of this assault, anyone who urges that something be done to counter this assault. I am -- we are -- the new extremists the FBI is becoming concerned with.

That's the extremely urgent subject I want to discuss with you today. If you've been keeping up with the news or listening to my earlier broadcasts, you are aware that the Jews are complaining about their precipitous loss of popularity around the world. Anti-Jewish feeling has risen 50 per cent in the United States in the past four years. That's certainly encouraging if it's really true. Of course, the Jews blame it all on "bigotry" and refuse even to consider that their own behavior might have something to do with it.

Well, they've always been that way, never accepting blame for anything they do. But 30 or 40 years ago, seeing the worldwide upsurge in hostility against them, they probably would have responded by deciding to keep a lower profile for a while. But not now. With their control of the Bush government and the mass media in the United States they are so confident that they can deal with any threat that instead of minimizing provocations for a while, they are moving aggressively ahead with their campaign to gain total control.

They already control the lemmings through the media, and their grip on the lemmings will remain secure as long as they retain their media control and keep the ball games coming -- and, of course, as long as the shopping malls stay full. And they already have controlled the politicians for a long time. They control them at least as much in the Bush government as they did in the Clinton government. As long as they can keep intelligent, courageous, and honest patriots out of the government -- and they've been pretty successful at that -- they can retain their control of the government too.

An especially worrisome aspect of this governmental control is the Jews' infiltration and subversion of our law-enforcement agencies. They are in the process now of completing their subversion of the FBI, and the effects of that are evident. There's been much controversy in recent weeks about why the FBI didn't respond to warnings about a planned al-Qaeda attack before September 11. Conspiracy-minded people believe that the failure of the FBI to respond to the abundant evidence that something nasty was being planned was due to a decision in the Bush government to let the September 11 attack take place and then use it as an excuse to launch a war against the Jews' enemies in the Middle East.

Maybe. But I'm more inclined to believe that the FBI's failure to respond to warnings of a coming attack was due to bureaucratic inefficiency rather than to a deliberate decision to let the attack take place. Our bureaucrats these days just wouldn't take the risk of being blamed for something like that. What is beyond dispute, however, is that last year the FBI did break up a huge Israeli espionage operation against the United States and then deliberately let some 200 Israeli espionage agents quietly go home instead of prosecuting them. The decision to do that undoubtedly was made at the highest levels in the Bush government, but the FBI's willingness to go along with that decision is very disturbing. I can understand a nutcase religious fanatic like Attorney General John Ashcroft going along, because he believes that the Jews are "God's chosen people" and must not be opposed or criticized, but there should have been strong resistance inside the FBI itself.

And then there's the case of the anthrax terrorism. There's strong evidence that that was done by a Jew with Zionist connections in an attempt to cast suspicion on Muslims and generate public hostility against them. And almost certainly the FBI knows who it was. But there has been no arrest, and I'm beginning to suspect that there won't be an arrest, for the same reason that the Israeli espionage agents all were turned loose. That's an extremely worrisome matter, indicating a terminal degree of corruption in the FBI.

Last week I read you portions of an address FBI Director Robert Mueller gave to a meeting of leaders of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith on May 7. Mueller spoke of a growing "partnership" between the ADL and the FBI and of how much he appreciated the "training and education" the ADL had been providing for FBI agents. He spoke of how the ADL was helping the FBI understand "the changing nature of the terrorist threats facing America" and was providing information on "extremism" and "hate crime." Mueller's May 7 address to the ADL was phrased in the sort of bureaucratic doubletalk that is standard for government officials these days -- on the surface nothing very radical or alarming to a naïve listener -- but I explained to you the real meaning of his remarks.

The real meaning of a partnership between the ADL and the FBI and of the FBI's willingness to accept the ADL's judgment on the "changing nature" of terrorist threats is that the FBI will devote less of its resources to the investigation of actual criminal activity and more of its resources to helping the ADL counter the people the ADL considers "extremists": which is to say, people who have views the ADL labels "extreme."

Well, on May 31 a joint FBI-ADL conference was held at the FBI Academy in Quantico, Virginia. Last week, on June 6, the ADL issued a press release from its New York headquarters bragging about the May 31 conference and confirming my interpretation of Robert Mueller's May 7 address to the ADL. The press release stresses the need for the FBI to fight extremism and terrorism, usually lumping the two "isms" together as if they're pretty much the same: as if having views the ADL considers "extreme" is tantamount to being a terrorist. Extremism, of course, is absolutely no business of the government in a free country. We're entitled to hold views as extreme as we want without being investigated or harassed.

I'll read to you from the press release the words of the ADL's national director, Abraham Foxman:

In order to assess threats against the United States, law enforcement must have credible information about domestic and foreign extremists whose rhetoric promotes violence. Through our network of regional offices and our experts in the field, ADL is uniquely suited to aid in the war against terrorism. This conference was an opportunity for law enforcement and extremism watchdogs to compare notes and forge alliances.

Did you catch that? The new threat to America comes from rhetoric: not from truck bombs or hijacked airliners or anthrax, but from rhetoric, from words. I'll interpret for you again. Abe Foxman is telling the FBI that the real danger to America is not from actual terrorists but from people whose views the ADL considers extreme and whose words might "promote violence." And through the ADL's "network of regional offices" and "experts in the field" the Jewish organization will keep the FBI informed about who's an extremist.

The ADL's network is a spy network. For years they've been sending out their "experts in the field" to steal people's curbside trash to see what information they could glean from it. When the ADL's "regional offices" in Los Angeles and San Francisco were raided by police armed with search warrants in 1993 and more than 12,000 stolen police files were found, there were reports in the Los Angeles Times and the San Francisco Chronicle. The Los Angeles Times carried a report on the raids in its April 9, 1993, issue that also gave information about some of the ADL's other spying operations, such as collecting the curbside trash of people it didn't like, people it would label "extremists."

What's surprising about that is that there were any news reports at all. No major news medium today ever refers to the ADL as a criminal organization or a spy organization but only as a "respected civil rights organization." Fortunately, among the stolen police files found in the ADL's offices in 1993 were those of some fairly prominent people, who had enough money to sue the ADL for invasion of their privacy. One of them was a former congressman. Jewish pressure on the prosecutor's office in California was able to kill the criminal charges against the ADL, but the civil suits kept the matter alive for years, and the ADL eventually had to pay out several hundred thousand dollars to the plaintiffs. The news on the suits and the payments always was scanty, but it's available to anyone who is really interested. Certainly the FBI and FBI Director Robert Mueller and Attorney General John Ashcroft know about it, and they also know about the ADL's involvement with Jewish organized crime figures, such as Moe Dalitz and Marc Rich.

I'll summarize again. The ADL always has wanted to silence people it considers "extremists": which is to say, people whose views it doesn't like. In the past the ADL would spy on these people and either blackmail them or apply economic or political pressure to shut them up. Now it's enlisting the FBI to do its spying on "extremists" for it. That is horrifying and frightening, but we all should have seen it coming. We have had an Alice in Wonderland government in Washington for the last decade at least. When we have an FBI that catches Israeli espionage agents and then turns them loose because to prosecute them would embarrass Israel, we all should understand that we're in serious trouble. When the FBI won't arrest a Jewish fanatic sending out anthrax-infected letters because it might embarrass Israel, we're all in even worse trouble. And when the FBI begins investigating and harassing citizens for being "extremists," it's time for an armed uprising.

You know, I'm oversimplifying a little. It's not just that the people in the Bush government don't want to embarrass Israel: they also don't want to embarrass themselves. They've all compromised themselves so thoroughly by collaborating with the Jews against America's interests, against the freedom of American citizens, that they undoubtedly feel that they have a tiger by the tail now and dare not let go. And now they are taking the next step. Now the FBI is moving to do the anti-American things that the ADL used to have to do by itself. Now the ADL will tell the FBI who is an extremist whose rhetoric might promote violence, and the FBI will then use its own muscle against the offender.

Let me tell you something: the sort of rhetoric we've heard recently from FBI Director Robert Mueller and ADL National Director Abe Foxman, the rhetoric that I've quoted verbatim from their public statements today and last week, ought to promote violence, if there were any real patriots listening. Do you understand what I'm saying? These FBI and ADL people have been talking about taking our freedom away, and that sort of talk ought to be responded to in a forceful way. And I'll tell you something else: Just for saying what I've said to you today, they will label me an extremist whose rhetoric might promote violence. And I really don't care. I'm not trying to promote any specific sort of violence now, but there certainly will be violence before we've straightened things out in this country. Things have gone much too far already. The longer we wait, the more violent the straightening out will be.

You know, I've just been watching the news about this fellow Jose Padilla that they've accused of wanting to set off a so-called "dirty bomb" in Washington. He's being held now by the Army and almost certainly never will be turned over to a civilian court for trial because he hasn't actually done anything or even made a plan to do anything. The government is trying to force him to talk about his Muslim friends now, threatening him with a court martial and a summary execution, and the media are talking about his non-existent plan to bomb Washington in order to spook the lemmings and persuade them to give up a little more freedom.

One thing you certainly can count on is "dirty bombs" -- that is, radioactive bombs -- being used in this country in the future, because they're so easy to prepare and use and can cause such enormous damage. I wrote in detail about the use of "dirty bombs" in America way back in 1975 in my first novel, The Turner Diaries, and you may be sure that when the first "dirty bomb" actually is used here, the ADL will be saying that I promoted it and that my novel was a "blueprint" for it, just as they blamed the Oklahoma City bombing on me.

Well, one expects self-serving accusations of that sort from the ADL and other Jewish organizations. But now, with the FBI ready to take its direction from the ADL, such accusations become really dangerous -- and not just for me: for everyone who refuses to live like a slave and keep his mouth shut lest he be labeled an "extremist."

Listen: I don't want any listener to go out and start shooting government officials now, because nothing that a single angry patriot can do by himself will help our situation. But I do want every serious and responsible listener to be absolutely sure that everything I've been telling you is true. I want you to be absolutely sure that the situation is as dangerous as I have told you it is. I want you to check the facts for yourself. Everything that I've told you today and last week is available from reliable sources on the Internet: the news reports about the 1993 raids on the ADL's offices and about other criminal activity by the ADL, the text of FBI Director Robert Mueller's May 7 address to the ADL, and the text of ADL National Director Abe Foxman's press release that I read to you a few minutes ago, not to mention the facts of the Jewish control of the mass media and of the children's fashion industry, and of Christine Long's murder.

And these things are just for starters. Every serious patriot needs to be informed. He needs to understand the situation we're in. He needs to know who America's enemies are and what they're doing. I'll continue doing everything I can to inform you every week, but I don't expect serious patriots to be like lemmings and simply believe whatever they're told. I expect them to be skeptical and to check things out for themselves, because only by being sure that we're right and that we know what we're talking about can we persuade others and gain the strength to rid our country and our race of this terrible threat to our freedom and to our very existence.

The Consequences of Corruption

Suppose Saddam Hussein sent a team of Iraqi agents into the United States to shoot down the presidential helicopter on the way to Camp David with George Bush aboard, or to plant a large bomb in the Capitol building, or to poison the water supply for Washington, DC, with the aim of bringing down the Bush administration....What would you call it? Terrorism, right?

Suppose George Bush ordered the CIA to send a team of American agents into Iraq to destabilize the government there, or to carry out economic sabotage and generate public unrest, or to assassinate Saddam Hussein. What would you call it? I'd call it embarrassing.

Has Saddam Hussein sent anyone into the United States to "take out" George Bush? Not that we know of. Has George Bush ordered anyone into Iraq to "take out" Saddam Hussein? Yes. Mr. Bush has made the order public, and the politicians in the Congress have fallen all over themselves in their rush to second him. So who are the terrorists: Iraqis or Americans?

You know, what's most embarrassing about this situation is not the hypocrisy -- the pretense of "fighting terrorism," the pretense of being opposed to terrorism on principle, while actually engaging in terrorism on a bigger scale than anyone else -- what's most embarrassing is that once again the head Jew has said "Jump!" and once again an American president has responded, "How high, sir?" It may not be obvious to the yahoos with the little flags on their cars who are sitting around in the American Legion halls and drinking beer, but destabilizing the government of Iraq or assassinating Saddam Hussein and setting up a puppet leader in his place is not something that serves America's interests. It's not something that's worth inviting more terrorist reprisals against Americans. It serves only Israel's interests, only the interests of the Jews.

George Bush understands that. Everyone in the Congress understands that. But they don't care. When the Jews say "Jump!" they jump. They all understand that that's the way to get good press and keep their places at the public trough, and that's all they care about. The Jews want the U.S. military to wage war against Iraq the way we waged war against Afghanistan, but among the American people there's not much enthusiasm for another war. So Mr. Bush launches a CIA terror campaign against Iraq in the hope of provoking Iraq to commit terrorist acts in the United States and help him drum up support for a new war.

We all thought the Clinton government was embarrassing, but really, what we have now is at least as bad -- and at least as dangerous. George Bush's personal style is different from Bill Clinton's -- so far as we know, Bush doesn't chase teenaged female interns around the Oval Office -- but Bush takes his orders from the same people Clinton did, and so do all of the politicians in the Congress.

I know that there are many, many people in America who have seen so much of this hypocrisy and lying and self-serving behavior from Washington that they have just washed their hands of the government altogether. "That's the way politicians and bureaucrats are," they think. "They're hopeless. I give up on them. I don't want anything to do with them."

We can see the growth of this attitude in the growing number of people who have stopped voting. They see that it doesn't make much difference which party is in power, and they're disgusted by the whole process. They don't want to have anything to do with the government. They just want to take care of themselves and their families, and they hope that the government will leave them alone.

Unfortunately, it's not that simple. Unfortunately, the government will not just leave us alone. We cannot afford simply to ignore what the government is doing. As I said a minute ago, what the government is doing is not just embarrassing; it's also dangerous for all of us. It's dangerous to our freedom and even to our survival. Let's look first at the danger to our freedom. I've talked about this before, but today I have a new example of what is going on in our government at all levels.

Last week my organization, the National Alliance, received a letter from a police official in Florida, and I want to read parts of that letter to you. The letter was attached to a copy of a National Alliance leaflet that our members have distributed widely around the country. The leaflet has a photograph of a little White girl about three years old and is headed, "Missing, a future for White children." Under that heading the text reads:

Description: blond, red, or brown hair; fair skin; innocent, inquisitive, intelligent, trusting personality. Corrupt politicians and minority special-interest groups have abducted her future. There will be no future for her in the Third World America that our nation's enemies are planning. Let's take back our country and make it great, clean, decent, and beautiful once again. For our children's sake. The men and women of the National Alliance want you to join in this great, patriotic effort.

That's the text, and it's followed by our address, so that people will be able to contact us.

Now here's what the letter that was attached to this leaflet says. It's on the official letterhead of the St. Pete Beach Police Department, and the letter is from the chief of police. The letter reads, in part:

The enclosed was distributed illegally in our area this past Friday night-Saturday morning.... I need to make it quite clear that hate mongering is not tolerated in our state, and any future distributions of this illegal nature will result in criminal prosecution of those distributing same.... Hatred is hatred -- no matter what color or religious preference you are (or hide behind) -- and it is illegal.
Sincerely,
R.F. Kaminskas, Chief of Police.

The letter is dated June 7, and I received it last week. Well, that's it. Hatred is illegal, says St. Pete Beach Police Chief Kaminskas, and it will be prosecuted. I don't know whether to laugh or to cry, but I'm more inclined to cry. Certainly, there are dumb cops, even dumb police chiefs, in this country, just as there are dumb people in every profession, and perhaps Chief Kaminskas is just an especially dumb cop. Or perhaps he's just trying to please his Jewish constituents in St. Pete Beach. St. Pete Beach, by the way, used to be St. Petersburg Beach, but I guess the locals were having trouble spelling the name, so they shortened it. Anyway, I don't know whether Chief Kaminskas' problem is stupidity or corruption. I've never met the man. But letters like the one he sent me are symptomatic of a very widespread and very dangerous trend in this country.

Last week, we talked about the rapidly increasing Jewish infiltration and subversion of law-enforcement agencies in the United States. I gave as an example of this the developing relationship between the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, the most influential Jewish pressure group in America and a group with a long history of affiliation with Jewish organized crime. But this subversion is taking place at all levels, not just in the big Federal secret police agencies in Washington. State police agencies in every state and even uniformed police departments in little one-horse towns like St. Pete Beach also are being subverted.

As I just said, I don't know whether Police Chief Kaminskas is consciously corrupt like FBI Director Mueller, whether Kaminskas is consciously doing what the Jews tell him to do because he knows his job depends on it, or whether he's just dumb -- or maybe just an especially impressionable lemming, who has learned what he thinks he knows about the law from watching too many TV soap operas.

Certainly, there is a deplorable tendency in America these days toward touchy-feely law. It used to be that legislators, prosecutors, police officials, and others concerned with the law really were concerned with the letter of the law. Legislators were very careful to be clear and precise in the wording of laws, so that anyone with a reasonable command of English could read the laws and understand what was legal and what was not.

But, you know, that's sort of a male chauvinist way of doing things: far too analytical, far too coldly rigorous. In this increasingly feminized and democratic America, we have developed more of a warm, fuzzy, feel-good approach to law. The attitude today is that bad things ought to be against the law. And what's bad? Why, everybody knows that from watching television. Racism is bad. Hate is bad. Saying anything against the Jews or the media or the government is bad. If you do bad things or say bad things or have bad thoughts, then you're a bad person and should be locked up.

I know that sounds silly, but that's really the way a great many Sally Soccermoms and Joe Sixpacks think these days. I receive letters every week from people who really think that racism is illegal. And that may be the way St. Pete Beach Police Chief R.F. Kaminskas thinks: "Hatred is hatred ... and it is illegal."

And it's not really funny, because if that is Chief Kaminskas' understanding of the law, he's quite likely to arrest someone for exercising his constitutionally protected rights in St. Pete Beach, Florida. I'll guarantee you it won't be a Black arrested for wearing a Malcolm X T-shirt and handing out flyers demanding reparations for slavery from White people, and it won't be a Jew arrested for distributing flyers with unkind remarks about Muslims. But it could be a White man or a White woman arrested for distributing flyers expressing concern about a future for White children. People who have a touchy-feely understanding of the law also understand that just because hatred is illegal, not everyone who hates is breaking the law. It really depends on who you are and whom it is that you don't like. If you watch enough TV you'll know when hatred is illegal and when it isn't. You can learn that just by noticing how the characters in the soaps respond to various situations.

Presumably, a judge or someone else in the system will have a clearer view of the law, although these days that's by no means certain. In any case you may end up spending several thousand dollars on lawyers getting out of jail and having the charges against you dismissed. If you have a police chief like R.F. Kaminskas in your community, you may decide that the smart thing to do is just to forget about your constitutional rights and keep your mouth shut.

And that is exactly what the folks who gave Chief Kaminskas his understanding of the law are hoping for. It's not yet illegal to express Politically Incorrect opinions. It's not yet illegal to hate a member of some officially favored minority or to express your concern for the future of White children. They're still working on that. But, meanwhile, having the lemmings believe that they're illegal, having people afraid to exercise their freedom, is almost as good as having laws that actually make those things illegal.

You know, I'm not a lawyer, but I have a fuzzy notion in the back of my mind that there is a Federal civil rights law somewhere on the books that specifies quite severe penalties for anyone who attempts to interfere with another person's exercise of a constitutionally protected right, and that threatening or attempting to intimidate is construed as interference. I suspect that if I were the chief of police in some one-horse town and I sent a letter to the head of a Jewish organization threatening to arrest any Jew who distributed Jewish leaflets in my town, the FBI would be all over me in about five minutes, and I would be in very serious trouble.

Chief Kaminskas' letter threatens anyone who tries to exercise his First Amendment rights in St. Pete Beach, Florida, by distributing leaflets expressing a concern for the future of White children. What do you think is the likelihood that the FBI will arrest Chief Kaminskas on a civil rights charge for sending me a threatening letter? I assure you, the likelihood of that is zero to none.

Why is that? Why does the FBI vigorously enforce civil rights laws in some cases but not in others? Why are the civil rights of Jews more important than my civil rights?

I answered that question last week, but now I'll answer it again. The same people who have convinced FBI Director Robert Mueller that the new focus of the FBI should be the investigation of "hate crimes" and "extremism" rather than kidnapping, bank robbery, espionage, and other old-fashioned crimes, have persuaded the FBI to be Politically Correct in its selective investigation of civil rights violations. Those people, if you remember, are the agents of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith: the ADL. But the FBI isn't the only law-enforcement agency that has been subverted by the ADL. For many years the ADL has worked to politicize and corrupt law enforcement at every level. The ADL arranges expenses-paid trips to Israel for county sheriffs and big-city police chiefs, supposedly to study Israeli methods of law enforcement.

More than that, it was the ADL and other Jewish pressure groups that engineered the enactment of the various civil rights laws in the first place, back in the 1960s. Those laws were designed to provide special legal protections for Blacks and other non-Whites, but they were worded so as to appear to protect everyone equally, White and non-White. Most law-enforcement agencies, however, from the FBI all the way down to the St. Pete Beach Police Department, now have learned that the wording isn't important. What's important now is to ignore the actual wording and to enforce the laws in a Politically Correct manner.

This subversion of law enforcement in the United States -- actually the subversion of our whole legal system, including the courts -- has been carried out at two levels. At one level, the ADL and other powerful Jewish groups apply political pressure and bribes to establish "partnerships" of the sort they have established with the FBI. At another level they use subliminal persuasion through the mass media to convince the general public, including many lower-level law-enforcement people, to interpret the laws their way.

So at the top we have the FBI turning 200 Israeli espionage agents loose and still refusing to arrest the known anthrax terrorist who killed five people and terrorized much of the country with his anthrax-infected letters, and at the bottom we have the St. Pete Beach police chief threatening to arrest any White people who distribute Politically Incorrect leaflets in his town: which is to say, leaflets expressing a concern for the future of White children.

This subversion is becoming worse rapidly. The ADL and other Jewish organizations are continuing to infiltrate and corrupt police agencies, and the mass media are convincing more and more Americans, perhaps including Chief Kaminskas, that expressing Politically Incorrect ideas is illegal. After enough lemmings have been convinced, the next step will be new laws actually making the expression of Politically Incorrect ideas illegal.

And why is this happening to America? In various broadcasts I've answered that question in various ways. One answer is that it's happening because there are people in our country who want to rule us and exploit us, people who believe that they are God's Chosen People and have a god-given right to rule us and exploit us, and these people understand that in order to rule us they first must take away our freedom, and in order to take away our freedom they must further soften us and confuse us and corrupt us.

Another way of answering the question is to point out that life in America has been too easy for too long, and our people have ceased to be vigilant. We have lost our pioneering spirit and have become a nation of consumers and couch potatoes, of mall shoppers and sports fans. And having ceased to be vigilant, we have left ourselves wide open to exploitation by the worst elements among us: by politicians and Jews, and they simply are doing what comes naturally to them.

A more complete answer is a combination of these two answers. We let ourselves become soft, and we relaxed our vigilance, and our relaxation provided an opening for pathogenic elements, and then the pathogenic elements proceeded to do everything they could to reduce our vigilance even further and enlarge the opening. The most dangerous of these elements are the Jews: most dangerous because they are self-conscious and organized and intelligent, and they have seized the most powerful weapon in our society to use against us. They have seized our mass media of news and entertainment. And they have enlisted the collaboration of all the other pathogenic elements in our society.

In many of my broadcasts, I've focused on this all-important fact of Jewish media control, and we can see its central role in what we've talked about today: in the corruption of our political leadership to the point that America is used like an errand boy to do the dirty work of the Jews in the Middle East, and in the corruption of our system of laws and law enforcement to the point that the FBI forms a partnership with a criminal organization such as the ADL, and local police officials try to prevent patriotic Americans from exercising their constitutional rights.

Listeners often ask me what an individual American can do about this corruption of our society and this theft of our freedom. "What you tell us is infuriating," they say to me, "but what can we do about it besides talk?"

Well, let me suggest something. Virtually everyone in government today is corrupt and doesn't really care about what is being done to America, but he does care about being blamed personally for it. The first concern of every bureaucrat is avoiding personal responsibility.

If enough people tell FBI Director Robert Mueller that they know why he refuses to arrest the Jewish anthrax terrorist and that they consider his conscious and deliberate decision to foster a partnership between the FBI and a criminal, anti-American Jewish pressure group to be treasonable, perhaps he'll lose a little sleep. If enough Americans tell him that they are outraged by his release of 200 Israeli espionage agents and that they intend to hold him accountable for his betrayal of America and his violation of his oath of office, perhaps he'll reflect a bit on his crimes.

And if enough people tell St. Pete Beach Police Chief R.F. Kaminskas that they are appalled and angered by his attempt to use his office to deny White Americans their First Amendment right of free speech, perhaps he'll rethink his position. Anyway, it doesn't hurt to try. You can write to FBI Director Robert Mueller at:

Mossad and the Jewish Problem

For several years, I have been warning in these broadcasts about the growing infiltration and subversion of American law-enforcement agencies by Jewish pressure groups. This process, which has been going on at a significant rate for more than two decades, accelerated during the Clinton administration, especially after the Oklahoma City bombing in 1995, when Jewish groups put themselves forward as "experts on terrorism," based on their experience in repressing Palestinians and on their undercover snooping into dissident groups in the United States. They offered training seminars to the FBI and other Federal police agencies, to various military units, and to state and local police agencies.

"We will show you how to recognize terrorists and potential terrorists and how to deal with them. We will tell you about these dangerous dissident organizations, these 'hate' groups, and we will help you to prevent another terrorist bombing, such as the one carried out by Timothy McVeigh in Oklahoma City," the Jewish groups told the police and military agencies. The most visible of these groups was the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, but as we will see, there also were other, less visible Jewish groups at work.

Never mind that Timothy McVeigh had not belonged to any dissident group but had acted solely as an angry individual determined to send the government a message that its behavior in massacring the members of the Branch Davidian church in Waco, Texas, would not be tolerated. Never mind that the Anti-Defamation League and other Jewish groups offering their services really were pushing the military and law-enforcement agencies to shift their emphasis toward the investigation and repression of dissidents and the enforcement of a brand-new category of laws -- so-called "hate crime" and "speech crime" laws -- rather than toward the prevention of terrorism.

Never mind those things; it was the Clinton era, and Bill Clinton had brought more Jews into the government than any previous President. Jews were riding high in the Clinton administration, from Monica Lewinsky to Madaleine Albright. When the Jews wanted something, the Jews got it, and smart bureaucrats, including those in the military and law-enforcement agencies, knew better than to ask questions.

Bill Clinton's extraordinary partiality to Jews lasted right up to the moment he left office, with a vastly disproportionate number of the last-minute pardons and commutations of sentences that he issued on January 20 last year going to Jewish criminals. The most notorious of these was the international Jewish super-swindler Marc Rich, who was able to persuade the head Jew in the Anti-Defamation League, Abe Foxman, to intercede with Clinton on his behalf.

All of this partiality has served Mr. Clinton well. In his first year after leaving office, he received $9.2 million in speaking fees, most of it from Jewish organizations. He received $400,000 last year from one Jewish organization alone, the Jewish National Fund, for three speeches. More than nine million dollars for some 70 speeches during the course of a year. Fascinating, isn't it? You can find more information on Mr. Clinton's career as a speaker to Jewish groups for huge fees in the June 18 issue of the New York Times, if you look carefully enough.

Well, that was Bill Clinton, a Democrat and a flamboyantly crooked lawyer from Arkansas who appealed to the lowest elements in the electorate and had a love affair with the Jewish mass media. Most voters hoped for more from George Bush and the Republicans. Unfortunately, what we've gotten is more of the same. In fact, Jewish infiltration and subversion of our military and law-enforcement agencies has proceeded even faster since Mr. Bush took office. Bush certainly doesn't need the money from speaking fees, but he nevertheless has given virtual run of the government to Jews. Under Mr. Bush as under Mr. Clinton, what the Jews want the Jews get, and no one in the government has the courage or the integrity to challenge this situation.

We talked last week about the FBI turning loose 200 Israeli espionage agents that it arrested in the United States last year and about its refusal to arrest the anthrax terrorist, who killed five people and terrorized the whole country with his mailings of anthrax-infected letters. In the anthrax case, the FBI still is putting on a big show of trying to find the perpetrator. FBI spokesmen claim that more personnel and resources are allocated to catching the anthrax terrorist than to any other case except the 9/11 attack itself. I claim that this is all a fraud: that the FBI knows who the perpetrator is but has orders not to arrest him, because he is a Jew who carried out the anthrax mailings in an attempt to cast suspicion on Muslims and to generate public hostility against Israel's enemies. If this became public knowledge, there would be a substantial drop in support among ordinary Americans for Israel and for Mr. Bush's current war in the Middle East.

The big question is, why would the FBI go along with such a coverup? Even with orders directly from Attorney General John Ashcroft or from George Bush himself, any FBI official who went along with the coverup would be taking a huge risk. Why do that for the sake of Israel? Who would protect the FBI people involved if the coverup got blown? The "partnership" between the Anti-Defamation League and the FBI that both ADL National Director Abe Foxman and FBI Director Robert Mueller have been bragging about doesn't seem enough to account for such a flagrant dereliction of duty on the part of the FBI. Surely, someone in the FBI would blow the whistle.

Actually, someone has blown the whistle, but you'd hardly know it from reading the news. Of course, there's been much coverage of one recent FBI whistle-blower, Coleen Rowley, a special agent in the FBI's Minneapolis field office, in connection with FBI officials ignoring reports she sent to Washington headquarters last August -- that was before the September 11 attack -- about a suspected terrorist, Zacarias Moussaoui, who was attempting to learn to fly 747 jets. But there's been very little coverage of another FBI whistle-blower, Sibel Edmonds, and the coverage of her far more alarming revelations has been quite cryptic, to say the least.

There was a story in the Washington Post ten days ago, on June 19, about several FBI whistle-blowers, one of whom was Sibel Edmonds, who worked as a translator of wiretapped messages in the FBI's Washington, DC, office. Despite her name, Edmonds is, in fact, a Jewess. But she is a rare Jewess, without a very strong sense of loyalty to her tribe. Indeed, an alarmingly high percentage of the FBI's wiretap translators are Jews, and nearly all of them who translate Middle Eastern languages are Jews. Most of these have a much stronger sense of their Jewishness than does Edmonds, as Edmonds found out when they tried to recruit her into the Mossad, Israel's super-secret agency for espionage, terror, and assassination.

The Washington Post story relates her account of the recruitment attempts in cryptic language that clearly is intended to avoid mentioning the words "Jew," "Israel," or "Mossad," lest our gallant, little democratic ally in the Middle East or its partisans in this country be cast in a bad light. I'll now read to you the relevant portions of that June 19 story in the Washington Post:

That whistle-blower, Sibel Edmonds, 32, a former wiretap translator in the Washington field office, raised suspicions about a co-worker's connections to a group under surveillance. Under pressure, FBI officials have investigated and verified the veracity of parts of Edmonds' story, according to documents and people familiar with an FBI briefing of congressional staff.... The FBI confirmed that Edmonds' co-worker had been part of an organization that was a target of top-secret surveillance and that the same co-worker had "unreported contacts" with a foreign government official subject to the surveillance....

The FBI said it was unable to corroborate an allegation by Edmonds that she was approached to join the targeted group. Edmonds said she told Dennis Saccher, a special agent in the Washington field office who was conducting the surveillance, about the co-worker's actions and Saccher replied, "It looks like espionage to me." Saccher declined to comment when contacted by a reporter.

Edmonds was fired in March after she reported her concerns. Government officials said the FBI fired her because her "disruptiveness" hurt her on-the-job "performance." Edmonds says she believes she was fired in retaliation for reporting on her co-worker.

Edmonds began working at the FBI in late September [of last year]. In an interview she said she became particularly alarmed when she discovered that a recently hired FBI translator was saying that she belonged to the Middle Eastern organization whose taped conversations she had been translating for FBI counterintelligence agents. Officials asked that the name of the target group not be revealed for national security reasons....

Edmonds said that on several occasions the translator tried to recruit her to join the targeted foreign group. "This person told us she worked for our target organization," Edmonds said in an interview. "These are the people we are targeting, monitoring."

Edmonds would not identify the other translator, but the Post has learned from other sources that she is a 33-year-old U.S. citizen whose native country is home to the target group. Both Edmonds and the other translator are U.S. citizens who trace their ethnicity to the same Middle Eastern country. Reached by telephone last week, the woman, who works under contract for the FBI's Washington field office, declined to comment.

In December, Edmonds said the woman and her husband, a U.S. military officer, suggested during a hastily arranged visit to Edmonds' Northern Virginia home on a Sunday morning that Edmonds join the group. 'Are you a member of the particular organization?,' Edmonds recalled the woman's husband saying. 'It's a very good place to be a member. There are a lot of advantages of being with this organization and doing things together' -- this is our targeted organization -- 'and one of the greatest things about it is you can have an early, an unexpected, early retirement. And you will be totally set if you go to that specific country.'

Edmonds also said the woman's husband told her she would be admitted to the group, especially if she said she worked for the FBI. Later, Edmonds said, the woman approached her with a list dividing up individuals whose phone lines were being secretly tapped: Under the plan the woman would translate conversations of her former co-workers in the target organization, and Edmonds would handle other phone calls. Edmonds said she refused and that the woman told her that her lack of cooperation could put her family in danger.

Edmonds said she also brought her concerns to her supervisor and other FBI officials in the Washington field office. When no action was taken, she said, she reported her concerns to the FBI's Office of Professional Responsibility, then to Justice's inspector general.

"Investigations are being compromised," Edmonds wrote to the inspector general's office in March. "Incorrect or misleading translations are being sent to agents in the field. Translations are being blocked and circumvented."

Government officials familiar with the matter who asked not to be identified said that both Edmonds and the woman were given polygraph examinations by the FBI and that both passed.

I'm sorry that the cryptic language made that report more difficult to understand than it otherwise would have been: a certain unnamed "Middle Eastern country," an unnamed co-worker of Sibel Edmonds who is a native of that unnamed Middle Eastern country, an unnamed "target organization" in that unnamed Middle Eastern country, and so on. The Washington Post tells us that the cryptic language is necessary "for national security reasons." That's certainly a phony excuse. Do you really believe that the folks in the Israeli Embassy reading this article can't figure out who is being talked about? The real reason for not mentioning names is not to keep the Mossad from finding out that they're being investigated; it's to keep any Sally Soccermoms or Joe Sixpacks who might stumble across the story on their way to the comic strips or the sports pages from getting a clue as to who's really calling the shots at the FBI these days.

Let me just run over the scenario again. After the Oklahoma City bombing, during a time when the FBI was being criticized for letting the bombing happen, Jewish groups promoted themselves as "experts" on terrorism and offered to train FBI agents and other law-enforcement and military personnel. One of these Jewish groups was the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, a group heavily involved in illegal activity and with longstanding ties to Jewish organized crime figures, such as international super-swindler Marc Rich and Las Vegas gangster Moe Dalitz. Another of these Jewish groups was Israel's espionage and terror organization, Mossad, which specializes in the assassination of Israel's enemies in other countries, using letter bombs, car bombs, exotic poisons, and trained hit-men armed with silencer-equipped submachine guns.

The impropriety of FBI involvement with either of these Jewish organizations should have been obvious, but in the Clinton era, no bureaucrat in Washington dared say anything critical of Jews or Israel. George Bush has a different style, but no more scruples than Bill Clinton. By the time he became President, the corruption had proceeded so far that it was easy for him to decide to join it instead of trying to lick it. And early in his administration another major terrorist event -- that of September 11 -- gave Jewish groups another rationale for strengthening their "partnership" with U.S. law-enforcement agencies. With Anti-Defamation League agents working on the outside and redefining the types of criminal activity with which the FBI should concern itself, and Mossad agents working inside and preempting for themselves all investigations of interest to Israel, including all investigations of Israeli espionage, it is no wonder that the FBI's efficiency, morale, and prestige have plummeted, and things that would have been unthinkable a decade ago -- such as refusing to prosecute the members of the largest espionage ring ever broken up in the United States and engaging in an internal coverup of the anthrax terrorism case -- could occur.

This is a depressing situation -- and as I have warned repeatedly, an extremely dangerous situation. We are in grave danger of losing all of our remaining liberty and soon thereafter becoming extinct as a people, as a race. There certainly is no hope at all of rectifying this situation from the top, through the elected politicians and the top bureaucrats. Did you hear George Bush make his pronouncement on Monday about the conflict between the Jews and the Palestinians? Yasser Arafat, the elected leader of the Palestinians, must go because he has been "tainted by terrorism." Anyone who, like Arafat, has condoned terrorism is unacceptable as a negotiating partner for the Israelis and must be replaced by someone who has clean hands. Really! I can imagine all of the Jewish leaders, including that "man of peace," as Bush calls him, Ariel Sharon, rolling on the floor with laughter during Bush's statement. I would not be surprised if it were Sharon himself, the Butcher of Beirut, the mass murderer of Palestinian women and children, the preeminent terrorist and war criminal in the Middle East, who wrote that statement for Bush.

George Bush is a man utterly without honor, without principles, without a shred of genuine patriotism or racial loyalty. As long as the Jewish media continue to give him good press, he is perfectly content to be Ariel Sharon's step'n'fetchit and to say and do whatever he is told to say and do. Underneath Bush is Attorney General John Ashcroft, a nutcase religious fanatic whose historical role model is Tomas de Torquemada and who believes that the Jews can do no wrong because that's what it says in the Bible. And then there is FBI Director Robert Mueller, a pitiful specimen of an unprincipled career bureaucrat indeed, a man who is completely unperturbed by the ongoing Jewish subversion and takeover of the FBI.

Our one basis for hope is the fact that the takeover is not yet complete. If it were complete, there would be no debate, no investigation by some FBI agents of the Mossad, no newspaper articles with cryptic language like the one I read to you from the Washington Post. The fact is there are many FBI special agents who are not happy about what is being done to the FBI. And there are hundreds of thousands of perceptive and intelligent White Americans who also are not happy. Unfortunately, very few of these people have the courage to do or even say anything about what is happening.

And there is one other factor besides a lack of courage, although it is a related factor, and that is the inability to address our problem in a truly fundamental way, a truly radical way. There are many patriotic Americans who would be alarmed to learn that a foreign espionage organization, the Mossad, has infiltrated the FBI and is able to subvert the FBI's operations, but there are fewer patriotic Americans willing and able to draw the necessary conclusions about the overall role of Jews in America. They see the problem as simply a problem with the Mossad. They resist tying the Mossad problem to the Anti-Defamation League problem and to the problem of Jewish influence in the government generally. They resist seeing the connection between the problem of Jewish influence in the government and Jewish influence in the mass media of news and entertainment.

They resist seeing these things because to see them, to examine them, to think about them and draw conclusions from them, is to become anti-Jewish, anti-Semitic. And they have been so strongly conditioned against that for so long that they simply can't deal with it. Many who are brave enough and honest enough to speak out about a Mossad problem cannot even think about the much larger Jewish problem of which the Mossad problem is only a relatively small part. And as long as we refuse to think about the problem, as long as we are afraid to think about it, we cannot hope to solve it.

And really, we'd better begin thinking about this problem very soon. Time is running out for America and for our people.
